Welding sparks Jardine Terrace fires

Two trips were necessary for Manhattan firefighters to extinguish fires in Jardine Terrace apartment 1-32 Thursday evening.

The apartment is located in building 1, which is being renovated by the Department of Housing.

Because the building is being renovated, it was vacant and provided no threat to residents, Tom Frith, director of housing, said.

Combined damages in the two fires is estimated at $3,000, said Lt. Charles Beckom of the K-State Police Department.

Beckom said the fire probably began from a welding spark.

While workers were welding reinforcement beams to hold up a concrete deck, sparks flew behind interior walls in the building, Beckom said.

The sparks presumably smoldered between the walls of the building undiscovered until a Jardine resident called the fire department and reported smoke coming out along the roofline of the residence.

The Manhattan Fire Department responded to the first alarm about 5:45 p.m. They returned to the station at about 6:45 p.m., after extinguishing the fire.

Shortly after, firefighters were called back to Jardine to extinguish a second fire at the same apartment.

Beckom said the second fire was probably also caused by a welding spark.

Both fires were inside the walls of the apartment. There was never an outside flame, Beckom said.

Uninformed about the second fire, Frith said he had been contacted shortly before 6 p.m. Thursday after the fire had been brought under control.

When contacted, Frith said the probable cause of the second fire was also some welding that had been done earlier in the day.

The Manhattan Fire Department refused to give information regarding the cause or extent of the damages of the fires until Friday morning.

A Manhattan fireman readies a hose to extinguish a fire on the second floor of building 1 in Jardine Terrace. A welding spark apparently caused the blaze. Firefighters returned a short time later in response to a second alarm in the same building.

Search continues for twister victims

By The Associated Press

CLINTON, N.C. — Rescue workers dredged ponds and searched flattened buildings Thursday for more victims of tornadoes that killed at least 60 people in the Carolinas, left hundreds injured or homeless and caused "millions and millions" of dollars in damage.

Too many homes to count were damaged by at least a dozen twisters that struck late Wednesday afternoon and evening, blowing down trees and power lines that closed roads and highways. It was the deadliest series of tornadoes to strike the United States this decade.

"This is the worst natural disaster we've had in a hundred years in North Carolina," said Gov. James Hunt, who toured the area. He said there had been "millions and millions" of dollars lost due to damage in his state.

Hundreds of National Guard officers and state police sealed off the towns of Maxson and Red Springs, N.C., to guard against looters in the two communities that were without electricity.

In neighboring South Carolina, four people were arrested for looting in Bennettsville, where crews searched a flattened shopping center in a county where seven people died, looking for missing shoppers.

The death count in North Carolina reached at least 44, but it wavered all the day, and an unknown number was missing, said Russ Edmonston, spokesman for the Department of Crime Control and Public Safety. The department said its figures came from county emergency management coordinators. Officials reported at least 426 injured people in 14 counties.

In South Carolina, county coroners reported at least 16 dead from tornadoes and about 250 injured in seven counties. Also, one person drowned in an accident blamed on wind-whipped waves.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency put the death toll at 39 in North Carolina and 45 in South Carolina, assistant director Joe E. Winkle said. The figures were derived from surveys conducted Thursday morning by five teams of federal and state officials, he said.

But in at least one South Carolina county, the coroner disputed that higher figure. The FEMA said 20 people were killed in Newberry County, but Coroner Coleman Bishop reported only one death and said, "If anyone in this county died, I would be notified."

The tornadoes cut across northern South Carolina, tore through the North Carolina sandhills and coastal plain, then moved out to sea.

Through the eastern North Carolina countryside, men cleared wood with tractors and chain saws. Pigs and goats ran loose, rummaging through grain and other debris.

South Carolina Gov. Dick Riley said after touring Bennettsville that the damage "was much worse than I expected. In my recollection, there is no disaster that equals this in terms of human lives lost. There are an awful lot of people needing shelter."

President Reagan directed the Federal Emergency Management Agency to help devastated areas.

After the twister hit Red Springs, people were seen late in the night wheeling shopping carts full of meat. One man sat in front of his store with a shotgun in his lap, waiting for the National Guard.

Of the more than 525 guardsmen deployed across North Carolina, 250 were sent to Red Springs and Maxson; a contingent of 100 state troopers went to the area, sealed off from outsiders.

To the northeast, near Greenville, the Taylor's Estates trailer park was ripped apart by the funnel clouds, with an estimated 100 mobile homes destroyed. Nearby, ponds were dredged for bodies and workers turned over piles of twisted metal and wood looking for more victims.

Brent Hackney, spokesman for North Carolina's governor, estimated hundreds of people were left homeless but "nobody really knows." State officials said 600 people had gone to emergency shelters.

In South Carolina, officials said up to 200 homes were damaged in the Bennettsville area alone, where rescue crews dug through the rubble of Northwood Shopping Center.

"It's possible there are still two people in there," said Fire Capt. Tommy Bostic.

Several hundred dollars in cash was stolen from two registers at a supermarket there.

Students, colleges prepare open house festivities

By LYNN MEIER
Collegian Reporter

More than 20,000 visitors are expected to attend K-State's sixth annual All-University Open House today and Saturday, said Jane Miles, senior in accounting and finance and student coordinator of the event.

Open house will officially begin with a parade, scheduled to start on the east steps of Anderson Hall at noon today, and a brief speech by Kansas Secretary of State Jack Brier. This morning Mortar Board senior honorary will sponsor the Fifth Annual High School Leadership Conference in the Union for Kansas high school students.

This evening events will include the Student Showcase of Talent at 7:30 p.m. in Danforth Chapel, Miles said. The group Night Wings will give a concert at 8 p.m., followed by a student dance in the Union Ballroom sponsored by the Student Foundation.

"On Saturday, all eight colleges will have academic displays from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.,"

Miles said. "Souvenir programs listing descriptions and locations of events will be available to guests."

The College of Architecture and Design will feature a display of the Manhattan downtown project and a computer graphics demonstration among its offerings.

A petting zoo and tours of the veterinary clinic hospital will be featured by the College of Veterinary Medicine.

The College of Education will include a display on biofeedback for stress management and simulator experiments in its tours.

The College of Home Economics will sponsor a display of garments designed by students, a demonstration of computers in home management, a display of ice carvings and a legal lottery in which visitors may win various prizes and gifts.

Among its many tours and booths, the College of Arts and Sciences will include a laser display, an international bread restaurant and a Mount St. Helens slide show.

The College of Business will feature several guest speakers and computer demonstrations.

The College of Agriculture will have a children's gardening activity and tours of the Pilot Feed Mill and Pilot Flour Mill.

"KSU Engineering — High Tech on the Rise" will be the theme of the College of Engineering's open house.

Tours of Durland Phase II, robotics displays and applications of computers in engineering will be featured.

Several special events have been scheduled Saturday in addition to the college displays.

Walking and bus tours of the K-State campus, residence halls and Greek houses will be available from 9 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. More than 100 department and organization displays will be set up in the Union.

K-State students will show livestock at the Little American Royal scheduled from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. in Weber Arena. A hot air balloon will be displayed all day on the lawn of Ackert Hall. Cheerleaders and Willie the Wildcat will provide afternoon entertainment in the Union Courtyard.

Gov. John Carlin will speak at 1:30 p.m. Saturday in the Union Caskeller as a guest of "Elections 1984," a program sponsored by Pi Sigma Alpha, the political science honorary. College Republicans, College Democrats and representatives of each of the major presidential candidates will sponsor information tables and distribute literature.

The Department of Physical Education, Dance and Leisure Studies is sponsoring a dance concert, "Dance '84," in McCain Auditorium Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m.

Miles said an all-University steering committee consisting of 20 people is selected each spring to lead open house organization. She estimated 2,500 student and faculty volunteers are involved in the event annually.

"The objective of the open house is to inform prospective students and parents of unique opportunities at K-State, to inform the

Noise hinders hearing

Headset problems turn up

By CONNIE WOODARD
Staff Writer

People of the early 20th century might be in awe if they could see what technology has done with their beloved radio.

Far from resembling the big box which graced the living rooms of the 1920s, the radios have been honed and shrunken throughout the years. Power boosters and high-tech sound have been mixed in to improve audio quality of these minute offspring of the old sound boxes.

Now, the concept of radio has been made even smaller and a pair of connecting headphones can be worn while engaging in virtually any activity. There may be some drawbacks, however, to these modern improvements.

An article in the November 1983 issue of Consumer Report magazine said it is possible to play the walk-around stereos loud enough to endanger hearing.

"You'd certainly run that risk if you turned a walk-around up high enough to override the sound of say, a subway or a power mower," the article stated.

It added that while it's nice to block out some outside sounds of the world, car horns, sirens, and the sounds of approaching vehicles and spoken warnings also are drowned out. Thus, the article suggested that people refrain from being "plugged in" while jogging, bicycling or driving down city streets.

Currently there is nothing in the Kansas state law to make driving while wearing headsets illegal, although some cities may have such an ordinance, said Sgt. Charles Eakins of the Kansas Highway Patrol. He said that while it is not illegal, it is not a safe practice because the sound of fire or police sirens might not alert drivers' attention.

A Manhattan city ordinance states that "no person shall operate any motor vehicle in the streets, alleys or roadways of the city while wearing headphones which in any way impair with the hearing of traffic noise or warning device or signals."

The Kansas statutes, however, do not include any such regulations. Therefore, it is assumed that drivers may use headsets on the highways but not in cities, said Capt. Nick Edvy of the Riley County Police Department.

Robert Pottroff, city prosecutor, said that while a bicycle is not a motor vehicle, it is subject to all rules applying to motor

Pentagon reports add fuel to El Salvador controversy

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A Pentagon statement acknowledging three guerrilla attacks on U.S. servicemen in El Salvador was made public Thursday as Democratic critics fought President Reagan's request for more military aid for the Salvadoran regime.

The Pentagon said no Americans were injured in any of the attacks, according to Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., who said he received the statement from the Defense Department on Wednesday in response to questions he put at a hearing last week to an assistant secretary of defense.

Sasser read the Pentagon responses shortly after the Senate voted 71-20 to shelve an amendment by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., to require a declaration of war or other congressional action before U.S. troops could be sent into Central America for combat.

Kennedy noted a Washington Post report quoting a senior Salvadoran

Army officer as saying U.S. aircraft are providing reconnaissance and communications support for Salvadoran troops during combat operations.

"The administration is slowly but surely putting our combat troops into harms' way...into a war in El Salvador," Kennedy said.

The Massachusetts senator offered the amendment to a bill providing $61.7 million in emergency military aid to help the El Salvador government in its battle against leftist insurgents.

The Pentagon statement read by Sasser said small bands of insurgents attacked a camp at San Miguel, El Salvador, where U.S. military advisers are stationed, in November and again in March. It said they did not enter the camp and no Americans were wounded.

In February, the statement said, U.S. servicemen at the Salvadoran Naval Base at La Union received sporadic sniper fire, but there also was no injuries in that attack.

Legislators to review beer bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A compromise bill raising the legal age for drinking 3.2 percent beer in Kansas from 18 to 19, but exempting those youngsters who turn 18 before it takes effect on July 1, went to the Senate Thursday after a controversial conference committee reached agreement.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Talkington, an Iowa Republican, said the Senate might not take up the conference report until Monday, which would mean the House probably would not act on it before next Tuesday.

If both bodies accept it — as expected — the bill would go to Gov. John Carlin.

Press Secretary Mike Swenson said the governor had reservations about raising the drinking age to 21, as the Senate wanted to do, but believes increasing it to 19 is reasonable because "it will get at the problem they now have with high school students."

Some members of the conference committee said they believe it is inevitable Kansas will have to raise its drinking age for beer to 21 as well, because Oklahoma has increased its age to 21 and they believe border problems will force a further increase in this state as well.

While the compromise agreement would raise the 3.2 beer drinking age to 19 — except for those 18-year-olds whose birthdays fall before July 1 — the committee added provisions to permit young people to continue to sell beer in grocery stores and serve it in restaurants if they are 18.

Schools interview prospective teachers Headset

By BEVERLY MILLER
Collegian Reporter

Dressed for success in the compulsory blue or gray suit, the interviewees sit patiently, seemingly relaxed, speaking to each other in hushed tones while clutching a portfolio or briefcase close to their chest.

It's a common scene in the Career Planning and Placement Center, especially for business and engineer majors. Even the mode of dress is reminiscent of the executive board room. This week, however, the on-campus interview process is benefiting K-State teacher candidates and various regional school districts with vacancies to fill.

"Tuesday and Wednesday, along with March 2, are the highlights for on-campus interviewing for teachers," James Akins, associate director of the center, said. "We have combined it with the University of Kansas job fair Thursday and Emporia State's interviewing schedule. The significance of combining with the others is apparent when you consider the number and names of school districts participating."

The interviewers represent many Kansas school districts and some from various surrounding states. The larger districts send full-time interviewers, while smaller districts assign the job to principals or assistant superintendents. Regardless of their job back home, they describe this initial contact with prospective teachers as a type of "fishing expedition."

"We are building files at this time," said Bob Hampson, interviewer for the Colorado Springs School District. "Notification of vacancies have not come through yet. When we are sure of a vacancy, we will then be free to contact one of these candidates and speak with them further."

"Since we aren't sure of specific needs, we are looking for enthusiastic people who enjoy working with young people, who are well-trained in their field and who can communicate," Hampson said.

In some cases the interviewer knows exactly what is needed and is looking for someone to fill a specific vacancy.

"You see this gray hair? It's partly due to my current inability to find a teacher for an English literature and mass media combination for one of our high schools," said Larry Winters, director of Recruitment and Employment for the Kansas City Public Schools and interviewer for 18 years. "By May 15, the legal deadline for terminations, I will have a much better idea what our other needs will be. But you can be pretty sure we will need math people. Overall, we usually have between 100 and 150 vacancies to fill."

The prospective teacher candidates are aware that the interviews are just introductory and that additional and independent effort will probably be necessary to obtain job offers.

"I have signed up for six interviews," Carlos Borrero, senior in geography education, said. "After this I will just play it cool for a few days. Then I plan to prepare letters of application to send to other schools, ones that don't interview here. And then I pray, I suppose."

Unlike business or engineering students seeking positions from major corporations, education students said they do not do much to prepare for the conference. All job candidates, however, present transcripts and letters of recommendation from K-State faculty, and education students present a recommendation from their student-teaching supervisor. During interviews they all must answer questions about their philosophies and future plans.

"In the interviews I've been in, they have asked why I want to be a teacher and for my philosophy for education and for discipline," Sheila Vierthaler, senior in elementary education, said. "My concentration is special education, so we usually talk about their special ed program and needs as well as my training in that area."

The complaint most often voiced, and one confirmed by Akin, deals with the procedure used to sign up candidates for interviewing slots.

"Signup was two weeks ago," Kala Klug, graduate student in elementary education, said. "Everyone was packed in one small area — it was like a zoo. I was shocked. I couldn't believe that was the way it was. But I still managed to get eight interview times."

"I know many who couldn't get interviewing slots," Deanne Watson, graduate in elementary education, said. "They will just have to use the mail and phone to make contact. But unless the district contacts you back, you will not see them face-to-face."

Akin said the complaints are justified and that corrective steps would be taken for next year's on-campus interviews.

"Next year we will add one more day to the current three days of interviewing," Akin said. "And because of the problems we saw with lines and congestion, we will alter the signup procedures to make them easier and more efficient for the students."

"The employers who are coming are expressing approval and appreciation of our services," Akin said. "They are impressed with the caliber of K-State students. Therefore, our system is being viewed as a successful one by both employers and teacher candidates, and that will increase the number of students using the program in the future."

vehicles. Although no one in Manhattan has been cited for wearing headphones while riding a bicycle, Pottroff said he would not automatically dismiss a person for such an action. Pottroff said he would review the case before sending anyone to court for wearing headphones.

Thomas Gray, a local audiologist, commented on the health factors involved in using walk-around.

"Basically they can be very damaging to the auditory system. It depends on the sound pressure of them and how long they're exposed to them. Most of them, any of them I know anything about, do have the capability of producing enough sound pressure to cause some rather significant problems over time," he said.

"It's like farmers," Gray said. "You can't convince them that the tractor noise is going to cause a (auditory) problem. But when they come in to see me when they're 65 or 70 years old, then they know it really did do some damage."

"It's that kind of thing. The kind of hearing problem that you get because of noise is very sneaky because it doesn't hurt and it (sound) can damage hearing before it becomes annoyingly loud. By the time you notice it being a problem, it's too late to do anything about it," he said.

"When somebody's deliberately turning it (walk-around) up, I don't know how you fight that. You can always tell a farmer to wear earplugs," Gray said.

At K-State, some students wear walk-around in the classroom. Barbara Higham, instructor of economics, said she has had students listen to walk-around while she lectures. She said this practice annoys her.

Students are in class for one reason, she said. Wearing the walk-around is a distraction and should be stopped. It also is disconcerting to the professor who is wondering what the student is listening to, she said.

Linda Westby, instructor of dance, teaches a small lecture class of 10 students. One of her students wears a walk-around stereo during class.

"I don't feel that I should sit there and discipline the student myself and say you must take it off. I think by the time they're at this level, they should be aware enough not to wear these type of things," she said.

"If it (wearing walk-around) becomes more prevalent, then I will definitely deal with it and say, 'I will not have this in my class,'" she said.

Local pageant winner to be chosen Saturday

Carolyn Kirgis, the current Miss Manhattan-K-State, will crown her successor from among 13 contestants Saturday night at the "Go for the Gold" Miss Manhattan-K-State Scholarship Pageant.

The winner of the title will be chosen by an overall score based on talent, personal interview and swimsuit and evening gown competitions. The talent competition accounts for 50 percent of the contestant's point total. Special guest Miss Kansas, Laura Watters, will be in Manhattan for the crowning.

The winner will go on to compete for the Miss Kansas crown in July. Should she win, she will represent the state in the Miss America Scholarship Pageant in Atlantic City, N.J.

Over $2 million is awarded annually in such local, state and national contests. Participants in the Miss Manhattan-K-State pageant will receive more than $1,000 in scholarships.

The Manhattan pageant is the longest-running preliminary pageant in the state, having been sponsored by the Manhattan Jaycees for the past 27 years.

"PRSSA (Public Relations Student Society of America) has helped the Manhattan Jaycees promote the pageant for two years," Kimberly Gracy, junior in journalism and mass communications and president of PRSSA, said.

Pageant contestants are Robin Rose; Luckey High School teacher; Karla Tenbrink, senior in business education; Leah Klingler, Manhattan High School senior; Lisa Grigsby, senior in social science; Erika Foley, freshman in interior architecture; Cathy McDonald, freshman in pre-professional business administration; Susan Dale, Manhattan High School senior; Chrysta Stallwitz, junior in industrial engineering; Sharon Swanson, Manhattan High School senior; Kristin Kruckenberg, Manhattan High School senior; Jada Allerheiligen, Manhattan High School senior; Shelly Orr, Manhattan Christian College student in music; and Shelly Vanover, senior in elementary education.

The pageant will begin at 7:30 p.m. in Municipal Auditorium. Tickets may be purchased at the door for $5, $3 for high school students and younger.

Academics require emphasis

Show-and-tell at K-State starts today. And although it's debatable whether All-University Open House warrants cancellation of afternoon classes, the event does reveal another, lesser-known side of K-State — academics.

In the distant past, K-State has made a name for itself in the sports arena, overshadowing its academic achievements. Now, it seems, K-State may have even more to offer than athletic scholarships. K-State looks good on a resume.

To many students, K-State and its offerings are reduced to one thought: "Will it help me find a job later?" Of course, the benefits a college education provides in the "real-world" job market should not be downplayed, but neither should the benefits of seeking out an education for the purpose of learning.

Many colleges and departments measure their effectiveness in terms of after-graduation job placement. A good "win/loss" placement record is attractive to an uncommitted prospect, but this overshadows the initial purpose of a university: to provide a desirable learning environment. A department head must believe his or her department provides more than pre-job training, but unfortunately, he or she may feel impelled to stress job opportunities to attract

The blame lies with administration and students. University propaganda emphasizes K-State's job training, and students actively seek it out. The line between job training and knowledge has become blurred, and students start telling other students how to use college experience to get a job.

K-State has many useful campus groups and organizations which promote achievement and provide social opportunities with people of similar interests, but those benefits are often secondary when it comes to recruitment of members. Instead, the first thing one is likely to hear is, of course, "It will look good on your resume."

Groups which offer real advantages shouldn't compromise themselves this way. Students who are persuaded by this line are likely to be less committed than those who join out of genuine interest. At the same time, the latter may have doubts about an organization which touts itself as a resume line.

K-State is still a good place to get job training. But to preserve the integrity of the University, a little more emphasis on knowledge for the sake of knowledge is in order.

KU residents protest guest hours

Down the river at the University of Kansas, students living in residence halls are protesting a proposal that would prohibit members of the opposite sex to be in private rooms after 10 or 11 p.m.

According to Thursday's Kansas City Times, the KU Residential Programs Advisory Board is trying to preserve the security and protect the rights of roommates when guests stay past the time security hours go into effect, as well as shelter KU from lawsuits and appease angered parents.

Students, however, are protesting and petitioning what they consider a denial of freedom and the responsibility to make their own decisions.

Some compromise is expected on the resolution, which would take effect in the fall. The board was scheduled to review the proposal Thursday.

Thomas Frith, K-State director of housing, was quoted as saying, "I think a student has to be responsible for his or her own life. This is part of the learning process of the University."

At five of the 11 residence halls have visitation restrictions, and these are regulated by hall residents and staff. After considering the conflict that has arisen at KU, it is gratifying to know the K-State Department of Housing has yet to try to restore generation-old moral standards and interfere in students' personal lives, as has the KU administration.

Press conference tarnishes dream

WASHINGTON — Another chunk of mortar has been torn from the pedestal upon which I'd placed it. The ivory column has been slowly crumbling for awhile now, but Friday's encounter wrenched the granite foundation loose.

The scene: the daily noon White House press conference. The actors: Larry Speakes, White House deputy press secretary; and the White House press corps. The plot? Well, superficially it was an attempt to gain information on one side and hide it on the other, but in actuality it was a half-hour long performance by the press in creative repugnancy, self-importance and antagonistic pettiness.

What the discordant shouting match centered around was the state of affairs in the Middle East — more specifically, King Hussein's recent loss of faith in American policy and his interview with The New York Times.

But the subject matter of the conference was moot. The whole content of the meeting was lost in the wake of the unnecessary feistiness and unwarranted cattiness staged so unabashedly by the press.

Speakes kept repeating that he couldn't comment on this, or that he wasn't informed about that — which, in light of national security and past experiences with press screw-ups, made sense to me. But it didn't seem to make sense to certain press members (you would think the recent polls showing the public's low opinion of the press would have clipped their wings somewhat).

NANCY MALIR
Washington Correspondent

"What are you trying to say?" "But you just told us..." "Are you telling... what can you tell us?"

Intense belligerence and sharp verbal attacks are frightening in massive doses. I was simultaneously scared, angry, shocked — and disappointed.

After all, I had wanted to be like them once. I had wanted the red cherry at the top of the cake, the plum of reporting assignments — White House correspondent. But like the promised magic and mystery of one's first kiss and the collegiate social scene, White House reporting just ain't all it's cracked up to be.

The press was rude. Caustic even. They assumed Speakes was going to do nothing but lie to them, and like a cornered wolf, he was naturally on the defensive.

"Use your mental capabilities. I know it's hard, Chris, but try to use your mental capabilities," Speakes said in reply to a question from NBC-TV's Chris Wallace. Surprisingly, and especially so for the son of the infamous Mike Wallace, Chris didn't pursue the issue. But some of the others, most noticeably Leslie Stahl of CBS-TV, exhibited all of the charm and tact of a doorknob as they pushed their questions with vehemence, subtle anger and distrust.

On the rare occasion when a reporter did ask a question in a semi-civilized tone, Speakes reacted favorably and answered possibly more of the question than he had originally intended to.

Punctuating the entire conference with intermittent mumbblings, sarcasm and bursts of spiteful laughter, the crowd of reporters bared its fangs and showed its mob mentality when one reporter dared to deviate from the established persecution of Speakes.

"If you'd let me speak, he can ask a question without being completely obnoxious," she said, trying to overcome the frequent outbursts that kept occurring while she supposedly had the floor.

The pack of wolves howled — literally. I actually waited for them to physically pounce on her.

Disgusted to a sickened state at this point, I stood dazed by the pettiness and juvenility of it all. The glamour had died again. The non-stop trading of barks and verbal punches is not spiritually uplifting. And after bellowing like cows the entire time, none of them had any more information than they previously had for the morning paper or the evening broadcast. But they had a lot less dignity.

Private school enrollment grows

WASHINGTON — Have young, upwardly mobile parents given up on the public school system? If they haven't done so yet, then statistics seem to reveal a trend in that direction.

Between 1975 and 1982, enrollment in the elementary grades of accredited private schools increased by 20 percent, according to the National Association of Independent Schools. The National Center for Education Statistics contends that private school rolls in the pre-high-school level will have grown another 13 percent by 1992.

In contrast, Census Bureau projections indicate the population of elementary-school-age Americans is expected to grow only 6 percent between now and 1992 (the annual rate of expansion increases as 1992 approaches).

Meanwhile, education experts suggest the enormous volume of applications indicates the demand for private school placement is far greater than enrollment figures show.

Conditions in the public schools aren't the only factors prompting the decision of many baby boom parents, most of whom attended taxpayer-supported institutions themselves, to go private. The movement toward having only one or two children has left more families with extra income for such discretionary expenses as education. Especially because of the upwardly mobile, private schools are proving a popular beneficiary of that enhanced affluence.

If the recent rhetoric about educational excellence takes root in deeds, trends could change. But a large share of baby-boom Americans, influenced by their own competitive experiences, apparently value private education as insurance in the job market (and the continued prosperity of many private universities may underscore that thinking). The net effect could be the loss of talented students from public schools that opponents of tuition tax credits have long predicted. Public schools may improve their product but lose customers nonetheless.

Speaking of demographics, Alaska has undergone a 19.2 percent increase in population since 1980. Nevada, Texas and Utah have gained about 11 percent, or more than three times the national average of 3.3 percent.

Meanwhile, the north central region has continued to lose people since 1980. Michigan, with a 2.1 percent drop in population, has experienced the largest net exodus.

Former deputy secretary of state Warren Christopher, now back at his Los Angeles law firm, contends the Reagan administration's request for $311 million in additional military aid for El Salvador is "obscene."

Speaking recently in Palo Alto, Calif., Christopher, who led the U.S. delegation that negotiated the release of the American hostages in Iran, said El Salvador could not absorb such a level. He added that U.S. economic aid to El Salvador would be ineffective unless a moderate, reform-minded government is established in that country.

Now it's Rosalynn's turn. Jimmy Carter's wife has finished her memoirs, "First Lady from Plains," and publication is scheduled for early May. The former president's book, "Keeping Faith," appeared shortly before the mid-term elections in 1982, just in time to remind American voters of the Carter years.

Astorga's innocence in question

WASHINGTON — It is said that six years ago Nora Astorga, then 33 and in the words of a friend "very handsome," lured a high official of the Somoza regime to her house in Nicaragua and either killed him herself or had him killed. Either way, the man, Gen. Reynaldo Perez Vega, the second-highest-ranking officer in the Nicaraguan national guard, was found dead in her bedroom.

It is said by Nora Astorga's friends that the story is not quite true. They maintain instead that the Sandinistas, who were later to seize power in a revolution, were attempting to kidnap Gen. Perez and that something went wrong. In this version of the story, Astorga, a lawyer and a secret Sandinista, is no killer — merely the bait for seizing an accomplished womanizer who was to be exchanged for political prisoners.

What makes either version of the story germane at the moment is the fact that the Sandinistas want Astorga to be their next ambassador to the United States and lots of other people, some of them very influential, don't. Gen. Perez, it turns out, was not only a high Nicaraguan official; he was also a CIA "asset" and, to American intelligence, a virtual colleague.

It's likely that details of this story will remain forever in dispute. What is not in dispute, though, is that Perez was the No. 2 man in the detested National Guard. As such, he was responsible for some of the agony Nicaraguans suffered under the Somoza regime — everything from capricious murder to the theft of relief supplies sent to that country after its 1972 earthquake. When it comes to morality, the CIA is an equal-opportunity employer.

It is by now a cliché that one man's terrorist is another man's freedom fighter. This is certainly the case with President Reagan, who has referred to the anti-Sandinista guerillas, funded by the CIA, as "freedom fighters." It is also the case with the Irish Republican Army, the Palestine Liberation Organization and, to go back some years, John Mosby, a Virginian, who was a freedom fighter to the South but a plain terrorist to the North.

RICHARD COHEN

If you are a CIA agent, it's probably bad policy to accredit a person who might have been instrumental in the death of a fellow agent. But if you are anyone else, you would have to wonder why this country should have any loyalty at all to the memory of a man who was a certified killer and, in the bargain, probably corrupt. The Sandinistas say that as a former emigration director, Perez made a fortune selling illegal passports — a routine activity under the Somoza regime.

The Perez-Astorga yarn is illustrative of our country's tendency to consort — as they say down at the parole board — with known criminals. We are doing the same thing in El Salvador, where yet another high-ranking military official also reportedly on the CIA dole is, as they say, linked to the Death Squads. But worse than that, we are continuing to find ourselves on the wrong sides of these fights. Instead of standing for economic, social and political progress, this nation finds itself persistently allied with the forces of oppression.

That was the case with Nicaragua's Somoza regime. In the 1930s, the United States placed a Somoza at the head of the American-organized national guard, and it promptly killed revolutionary general Augusto Sandino — producing both a martyr and a name for a revolutionary movement. However much we may quarrel with the way Sandino's heirs now rule Nicaragua, they are pussycats compared to the regime they succeeded.

As a country, we have not only come a long way from our own revolution but also from our revolutionary values. Somehow the goodness of America gets deformed when expressed as foreign policy — so much so that we grieve for a thug and question the credentials of those who in any way might have killed him.

We can choose to see Nora Astorga as either a freedom fighter or a terrorist, remembering, though, that in her own country she is a heroine. She need not be that in ours, but if we refuse to accredit her as Nicaragua's ambassador, we do something far worse than merely dishonor her. We continue to do what we have done all along — honor her former enemy as well.

Panelists prescribe exercise, balanced diet for keeping fit

By LUCY REILLY
Collegian Reporter

"The way you feel is probably the way you look," said Ronald Bulbulian, assistant professor of physical education, dance and leisure studies, while presenting a slide show Thursday afternoon in the Caskeller as part of the "Let's Talk About It" series.

Bulbulian, along with Lafene Student Health Center dietitian Martha Olson and recreational service employees Connie Bachofer and Chris Flouer, spoke on the topics of health, nutrition and exercise.

Bachofer, who works behind the L.P. Washburn Recreational Complex desk checking identification and loaning out equipment, began the program. Addressing exercise, Bachofer gave a brief history of the Rec Complex and the equipment available.

The Rec Complex and the outdoor Washburn Rental Center supply facilities and equipment for virtually every type of exercise.

"You name it, we probably will have it," Bachofer said.

Energy necessary to function adequately must be derived from the four basic food groups, Olson said.

"Nutrition is an important part of our lives and keeping fit," she said. "The four food group set-up (meat, dairy products, breads and fruits and vegetables) improves the health of individuals when followed."

Olson stressed the importance of receiving some type of protein for breakfast, stating that ingesting protein in the morning makes people more alert.

"It doesn't have to be bacon and eggs. It can be skim milk and peanut butter toast," Olson said.

Large doses of vitamins often can create toxicity levels in the liver, Olson said. Fat-soluble vitamins such as A, D, E and even C, if taken to extremes, are stored in the liver until a dangerous level is reached.

People need to develop eating behavior that will benefit them for the rest of their lives. If people eat correctly, no vitamin supplements are needed, Olson said.

Dieting individuals need to realize that in order to lose weight, they can only consume as many calories as they expend, she said. If a diet plan is combined with an exercise program, the weight lost will be fat weight. If dieting is done without exercising, weight lost will be lean and fat weight.

In his slide presentation Bulbulian showed two separate slides of women who had lost weight. One woman lost weight while exercising and had rebuilt a muscular, yet feminine body. The other woman lost weight without exercising and her body was unappealing and lacked muscle tone.

"Exercise helps lose fat even though it may build up muscles," Bulbulian said.

Those leading sedentary lives who wish to become active again, he said, need to discover the training range for their particular heart rate to develop cardiovascular fitness. The move from inactivity should be gradual.

Once an individual has become overweight, the number of fat cells prevalent in his body increase. Upon losing weight though, the individual won't decrease the number of fat cells present, but merely diminish the cell size. Therefore, it's easy for those who've once been overweight to gain excess pounds back, he said.

"Fat cells are starving to be fed," Bulbulian said.

He said psychological barriers encountered by those attempting to lose weight are aided by exercising. Barriers in particular are obesity, anorexia-nervosa and bulimia.

There is a notion in the dieting game that exercise causes an individual's appetite to increase with activity. Refuting that idea, Bulbulian said exercise won't cause persons to over eat detrimentally.

For those not currently participating in some type of exercise, Bulbulian recommended increasing normal activity, such as walking to the store rather than driving.

He said, however, that three to four minutes of high-intensity exercise isn't good if a person fatigues easily, and that it is better to work out 20 to 30 minutes at a lower intensity without fear of tiring soon.

High intensity workouts primarily consist in burning carbohydrates and increasing strength in the cardiovascular system. Low intensity exercise uses fats while losing weight.

Cutting down on high fats and sugar foods will benefit people, Olson said. For women seeking to slim down, she recommended eating 1,200 calories a day coupled with an exercise program. Men can consume more calories and still lose weight while exercising if they maintain a 2,000-calorie limit.

State figures correctly estimated

TOPEKA — The state's consensus estimating group decided Thursday not to change its projections of how much revenue the state will take in during the current fiscal year and next fiscal year. The group, made up of state fiscal experts and University of Kansas and Kansas State University economists, kept the projections made last November that revenue in the current fiscal year will total $1.536 billion and in the fiscal year starting July 1 it will total $1.673 billion. The significance of the unchanged estimates means the Legislature will have the amount of money to spend it expected to have when the 1984 session began last January, and that Gov. John Carlin's budget was based on sound financial advice which has held up.

Judge refuses to lighten sentence

OLATHE — A Johnson County District Court judge refused Thursday to lighten the sentence he imposed last November on the former dean of a technical school who was accused of molesting boys. Associate Judge Robert G. Jones let stand the 10-to-20-year term he imposed on Larry W. Alley, 39, former dean of students at the Missouri Institute of Technology. William Grimshaw, Alley's lawyer, argued that his client should be referred to a residential treatment program that would reduce the likelihood of a repeat offense. He reminded the judge that Alley is eligible for parole in 6½ years, and psychiatrists testified a Kansas prison treatment program was not designed to cure Alley's problem. The prosecutor's office argued that the severity of the offenses required that Alley be locked away. The judge agreed. Alley, formerly of Overland Park, pleaded guilty in August to three counts of aggravated sodomy and four counts of taking indecent liberties with a minor.

Wichita reporter quits over story

WICHITA — Following an internal investigation into the alteration of a Wolf Creek nuclear power plant planning document, The Wichita Eagle-Beacon has asked for and received the resignation of reporter Steve Tompkins. Tompkins had been suspended with pay during the two-week investigation sparked by a complaint from Kansas Gas & Electric. In a statement issued Tuesday, Tompkins denied altering any documents. The date "Feb. 18, 1973" had been typed on a photocopy of a KG&E document that projected the cost of the nuclear generating station at $783 million, which was much higher than the figure the utility was disclosing publicly at the time. Tompkins used the document to write one of several Wolf Creek stories during the past two months. KG&E officials questioned the date following publication of the story, saying the document couldn't have existed before January 1974. Eagle-Beacon editors determined during their investigation that the date wasn't on the original document and the typing didn't match the type on a typewriter owned by the former KG&E executive who provided the document to Tompkins.

Judge convicts nurse of drug murders

By The Associated Press

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — A 45-year-old nurse was convicted by a judge Thursday of murdering 12 elderly patients at two hospitals with overdoses of a drug designed to control the heartbeat. Robert Diaz, whom prosecutors called "nothing but a killer," could be put to death in the gas chamber for the 1981 slayings.

Driver's license change may aid liquor sellers

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — To help liquor sellers recognize when someone under age is trying to illegally buy liquor, a Senate committee on Thursday endorsed a bill to require driver's licenses for people under 21 to be different from those for people over 21. The bill, approved unanimously by the Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee, would require the background color of photographs for people under 21 to be different from those on the driver's licenses of people over 21. The measure now goes to the Senate floor for debate.

John Smith, chief administrator of driver's licensing and control for the Kansas Revenue Department's Division of Vehicles, said he favored the proposal. He said the change in background color would not cost the division any money because a photographic company likely would provide the backgrounds for free.

The change is designed to draw attention to the age of the driver, making it easy to tell whether the person was 21 when the license was obtained. The different background would prompt bar owners and liquor sellers to take special notice of the age on the driver's license, committee members have said.

The committee rejected an amendment to the bill which would have required a one-year driver's license suspension for anyone under 21 convicted of buying liquor. A similar proposal, although endorsed by the transportation committee, died in another committee earlier this session. The committee also endorsed and sent to the Senate floor a bill which would remove any liability from persons helping in accidents involving a hazardous material, such as a gasoline spill. Lee called the case against Diaz "circumstantial." The prosecution never introduced a motive for the killings. Early in the probe, Diaz said, "I know of no reason why they are focusing on me." During the three-minute hearing in a small, jammed courtroom, Bernard did not explain how he reached his verdict.

Diaz was convicted of killing patients in March and April 1981, 11 at Community Hospital of the Valleys in Perris and the 12th at San Geronio Pass Memorial Hospital in Banning. He was working as a temporary nurse in the intensive-care units of both hospitals at the time. He has been jailed since his arrest in November 1981.

Prosecutors said Diaz injected the patients with overdoses of lidocaine, a relaxant used to control irregular heartbeat. Autopsies indicated the victims had more than 1,000 milligrams of the drug in their systems when they died. A normal dose is 50-100 milligrams, and large doses are followed by violent seizures.

The defense said the high levels of the drug may have been created by buildup of therapeutic doses given over a long period. They said there was no evidence the drug was deliberately administered at once.

Deputy District Attorney Patrick Magers argued Diaz was the only link among the deaths. He said prosecutors were "elated" by the verdict: "We were confident all along, but we were concerned about the complexity of the case."

In closing arguments last week, Magers called Diaz "nothing but a killer" who betrayed the trust of patients, nurses and doctors.

Bernard made a finding of "special circumstances" because multiple murders were involved, making the defendant eligible for the death penalty, which Magers said would be sought. The penalty phase of the case begins April 9.

Diaz's wife, 33, said outside court that she would file for legal separation, adding that she hadn't spoken with her husband in more than a year. She attended his trial for the first time on Thursday.

"I'd rather hear it from the judge than read it in the newspaper," she said.

Senate hears library affiliation proposal

Becoming a member of the National Association of Research Libraries is the goal for Farrell Library, said Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, when he spoke to Student Senate Thursday night.

K-State is the only school in the Big Eight Conference with a library which is not a member of the association.

Membership is determined on a quantitative basis.

"K-State has never had enough money to buy the quantities of books and periodicals, or to hire enough staff (to qualify for membership)," Hobrock said.

An $400,000 increase in the base budget would enable the library to meet membership qualifications. Half that amount has been allocated by the Kansas Legislature for next fiscal year. Once the base budget has been increased by $400,000, normal operating funding increases should allow the library to maintain the standards required for membership, Hobrock said.

Currently, $1.5 million of the library's yearly $4 million budget for is spent for books and periodicals, he said.

Hobrock also discussed plans for construction of a rare books room. The room would be located at the west end of Farrell 315, Hobrock said.

"We have made a proposal to the (KSU) Foundation requesting $250,000 in funds," he said. "The priority for this project will be set by the Foundation. We hope to get the money in the next couple of years."

Study space will not be reduced when the room is built.

"The top of the substructure (rare books room) will be turned into a mezzanine," Hobrock said. "We have 30-foot ceilings, and we're only taking 10 feet for the rare books room. It will be one of the top study areas."

In other business, a resolution was passed approving members of senate standing committees. These committees are Academic Affairs, Communications, Personnel Selections, Senate Operations, State and Community Affairs, Student Affairs and Social Services.

Students' hearings closed to public

University judicial system offers help

By MELISSA BRUNE
Staff Writer

The K-State judicial system provides a means of solving disputes and complaints while focusing on the educational and preventative purposes of University disciplinary process.

The student judicial system consists of the Student Tribunal, Student Review Board, boards established by organized campus living groups, Judicial Council and the Traffic Appeals Board.

Article VI of the Student Governing Association Constitution states these boards' judicial power "shall include the disposition of all complaints brought by students against other students or by the University, alleged violations of the K-State SGA Constitution, and/or interferences of students' rights and freedoms, and alleged violations of existing rules and regulations."

Although each board keeps records of its cases, neither the hearings nor the records are open to the public.

Article V, section five of the constitution's bylaws states hearings are closed. It states, "All hearings will be closed, and any matters of fact which would tend to identify the persons involved in a case would be kept confidential, unless the defendant specifically requests the hearing be open."

Earl Nolting, director of the Center for Student Development and dean of students, said protection of students' rights is the reason for the closed hearings.

"It's been a situation of individual privacy. We try to operate from an educational and preventative model, rather than a method of punishment," Nolting said.

Publication or public knowledge of student judicial hearings would make the system more of a punishment and put a negative tone on the process, he said.

Nolting said most hearings are not in the public's interest, but cases such as rapes and assaults which occur on campus may be an exception. He said he believes cases such as these may be a matter of public interest, regarding issues such as campus safety. He stressed, however, that the constitution gives the student the right to decide whether the case will be open. Unless the student specifies desire for an open case, the case is to be confidential.

"By leaving the decision with the party, we feel it's a very equitable situation," Nolting said.

Responsibilities and areas of jurisdiction of the judicial boards are outlined in the constitution's bylaws.

The function of the Traffic Appeals Board is to act as a court for student appeals of parking violations issued by K-State Police. The decisions of this board are final.

Judicial Council is an administrative board which refers cases to the appropriate judicial body for action. It also is responsible for educating new judicial board members, promoting judicial awareness and suggesting procedural changes.

Cases which involve only residents of a single living group are assigned to the judicial board of that living group.

Student Review Board hears cases or complaints which involve off-campus students. This board may also hear any case which does not fall under the clear jurisdiction of another board.

Student Tribunal hears all appeals, but in certain situations may hear a case in the first instance. Tribunal is the only judicial board with the authority to request removal of a student from the University or to modify the decision of another board.

Nolting said students have the right to appeal their case to the Tribunal. If the student is not pleased with Tribunal's decision, he may make an appeal to the president of the University for a reversal.

THE SCHOLARSHIP THAT LEADS ENGINEERING STUDENTS RIGHT INTO MANAGEMENT

There's a lot more to an Army ROTC scholarship than tuition, books, lab fees, supplies and up to $1,000 per school year for living expenses.

There's leadership. You start sharpening your ability to lead while you're still in engineering school. So when you graduate as a second lieutenant, you're ready to take charge.

You're trim, fit. You know how to motivate people. And you're capable of managing the thousands of dollars worth of equipment you're in charge of.

And as you progress, you'll discover increasing opportunities to advance your engineering skills, to attend graduate school while you serve your country.

All the while, you'll be acquiring the management skills that industry leaders look for.
So look into an Army ROTC scholarship. Talk it over with the Professor of Military Science on your campus.

Behind the Curtain...

Tim Blacker, senior in theater, swirls into motion as he wraps Loretta Zerbe, senior in dance, in one of several costumes he designed and constructed for "Dance '84." Donna Muse, senior in humanities, waits her turn.

...with Dance '84

The final dress rehearsal was Thursday afternoon. Tensions have been steadily rising since show participants moved into McCain Auditorium last weekend — and there is good reason. "Dance '84" is the culmination of hours of work contributed by students and instructors who have been dancing, singing, sewing and hanging lights.

The show, sponsored by the dance segment of the Department of Physical Education, Dance and Leisure Studies, will be held at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday in McCain.

Behind the scenes, those involved in "Dance '84" have been working from the beginning of January and now have begun to make last-minute alterations on costumes to pull together a final show.

The dance students returned in January to classes and the beginning of rehearsals. The concert is not limited to dance majors; any student, from a beginning dancer to the most advanced dancer, is allowed to perform. While some students were specifically asked to perform certain pieces, other parts were open to anyone who showed up.

Anyone wishing to be in the dance "Steamheat" was told that if they would show up for two hours on Wednesday nights, Luke Kahlich, assistant professor in dance, would work a piece up from there.

Beth Freshnock, senior in accounting, and Keith Banks, senior in pre-physical therapy and dance, were asked by Linda Westby, instructor of dance, to perform the duet "Galvanic," a piece that was chosen to be performed in the Gala concert at the American College Dance Festival this month.

Kahlich's and Westby's personal sewing machines were moved permanently into the department office, where they were used to sew costumes together for hours. Dancers were often called upon to help, particularly when it came to sewing on sequins.

Tim Blacker, senior in theater, is responsible for designing and constructing the costumes for "Danube" and "TZ." During spring break, Blacker's trip to Padre Island consisted of sitting in front of his sewing machine constructing costumes for "Danube."

Kahlich was planning a classical ballet and wanted a 1920s look, Blacker said. Together they spent hours looking through pre-World War I "Harper's Bazaar" and "Vogue" fashion magazines. It was decided that the work of high fashion designer Erte would serve as a model.

Erte, who designed the cover of "Harper's Bazaar" during the 1920s, used very pure, simple lines and ornamentation only if it had a necessary function, Blacker said. For instance, he would use a necklace only if it was to hold up the dress, or a headpiece that weaves into the bodice. Some of these ideas have been incorporated into the "Danube" costumes.

They had to go to a wholesale fabric house in Kansas City to purchase the amount of fabric needed and still remain within their budget, Kahlich said. Telephone calls were made for a number of specialty items such as feathers, accessories, jewelry and mirrors.

Doug Hoseney, senior in theater, has been helping with the technical aspects of all the dances in McCain since 1980 and continued the tradition by volunteering to be technical director for "Dance '84." As technical director, Hoseney became the "man in charge" Tuesday.

Hoseney oversees all participants in the production, including the dancers and the more than 100 people in the performance who are accessories. Accessory members include nine technical assistants, 19 children and two choirs consisting of 80 total members.

He started about six weeks ago designing the light plots for the 11 dances. This was an interesting situation, Hoseney said, because light plots were needed for almost every kind of dance — from classical to romantic ballet, dramatic modern and jazz.

"It's taking every (lighting) instrument in McCain to do it, and they still need more," he said.

Kahlich said he and Hoseney met often to plan how to fly three people in on a wire or how to get the set for "Danube" moved on stage quickly.

Accompanying the dance "Leiturgia" are a junior high choir under the direction of Linda Weis and a choir comprised of members of the community and K-State students which is under the direction of Jim Rahtjen, a graduate student in music.

Principal dancers in the piece are Kahlich, Linda Johnson, senior in theater; Marlea Fox, sophomore in dance; and Robert C. Bailey, senior in pre-professional business administration.

Westby, choreographer of the piece, said she feels that the community was uninformed about the dance program and thought that having the choirs perform would be the best way to get them involved.

She also has been rehearsing the 19 children, who are between the ages of 8 and 12, to dance in the piece. Westby said this week of rehearsals has been good for the children because she has been able to add one thing to the performance each day.

"One day we added costumes; one day we added Luke (Kahlich) Linda (Johnson), Marlea (Fox) and Robert (C. Bailey); one day we added voice; then we added the choir on stage, and then we added the next choir," she said.

Permission was arranged for Westby to dance a solo choreographed by one of her instructors at the University of Utah. "In My Garden" is set to German opera music by Schumann. She also sewed her own classical tutu for the piece.

The work is never-ending. The men's shirts were dyed Wednesday. Thursday, the men's white vests were cut out but still needed to be sewn, along with the bow and neck ties, Blacker said. The black feathers needed to complete the "Danube" costume were frantically sewn on by 20 of the dancers before the final dress rehearsal Thursday afternoon.

Preparations for "Dance '84" must come to an end Friday, and all will be ready when the curtain rises. Tickets for the show are available at the McCain box office in advance or the evenings of performances. The cost is $4 for students and $5 for the general public.

Committee studies proposal to ease prison overcrowding

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Corrections Secretary Michael Barbara outlined to a Senate committee Thursday a plan for rolling back the effect of a 1982 law which sent more offenders to prison for longer periods of time, contributing heavily to Kansas' present inmate overpopulation.

Barbara's plan, which the Senate Judiciary Committee planned to study further before deciding whether to refine it and recommend it for passage, could mean an early release from prison for more than 700 inmates now serving time for committing non-violent crimes.

They are inmates serving two-year minimum sentences for such non-violent property crimes as burglary, theft, forgery, writing worthless checks and a wide range of lesser offenses such as driving with a suspended license, non-support of a child and false impersonation.

The 1982 Legislature, in response to public demand to get violent offenders off the street and keep them off a longer period of time, increased from one year to two the minimum sentence judges could impose for offenses classed as D and E felonies under state law.

The bill under study would roll that back to one year and permit judges to review all cases and impose a new one-year minimum sentence, retroactively.

The result of the 1982 change has been an overcrowding of the state's prison system, which at the start of this week held 3,872 inmates — already surpassing the Department of Corrections' projection that the system would have 3,860 inmates by June 30 of this year.

"There is no question we will have over 4,000 people in the prison system by the end of this year," Barbara told the committee.

"The thing I'm concerned about is the posture this Legislature is in," said Barbara. "If nothing more is done (to expand prison capacity), we will have nothing more coming on line after Jan. 1, 1985."

"Senate Bill 858 is a partial solution to the problem. It will immediately impact on who will come in and who will get out. In lieu of a tremendous building program, this will reduce the population and it is the safe way to do it. We're not throwing violent offenders back into society."

When Sen. Norman Gaar, R-Westwood, pointed out that some Class D crimes do involve violence, such as aggravated assault and attempted robbery, Barbara said his plan would leave it up to the judge who sentenced the convicted person whether his sentence was reduced to one year, but would have no objection to the Legislature creating two classes of D felonies — one for violent crimes and one for non-violent crimes.

Corrections Department figures showed there are about 1,200 inmates serving time for Class D felony convictions, and of that number about 78 percent were convicted of non-violent crimes.

Barbara said 556 Class D felons and 163 Class E felons would be eligible for early release under the reduced sentencing proposal.

The committee delayed action on the proposal.

Running back James Ricketts cuts after a tire drill in the first spring practice Thursday at KSU Stadium.

Staff/Andy Nelson

Spring football drills kick off

Players stretching, tossing the football, tightening shoulder pads and an abundance of hoots and hollers. K-State spring football practice was underway Thursday.

Practice actually began Wednesday with drills being held at the Brandeberry Indoor Complex, with the team being divided into offensive and defensive squads for separate two-hour workouts.

Thursday's outdoor practice — the beginning of intense workouts — was probably more complex than many persons would imagine.

The first part of practice the players milled around, chatted and loosened up until most team members had finished suiting up and exited from the locker room and made their way to the field.

Then the horn sounded. The sound reverberating out of the bleachers signaled the beginning of exercises.

Squad members were dressed in either purple or white jerseys — purple for defense and white for offense — and they lined up in a multitude of rows across KSU Stadium's artificial turf. Looking at just the right angle from high in the bleachers, the mixture almost made the letter Q with the letter T cutting across it diagonally. Maybe there's some significance to that — but probably not.

During exercise drills several coaches — looking like cattle inspectors — wandered through the lines of players prodding or shouting encouragement as the squad members stretched and twisted their bodies into a multitude of positions and loosening every muscle imaginable. All through exercises players continued to straggle from the locker room.

The horn blared again, and it would blow 24 times at 5-minute intervals for the entire practice session, signaling a switch to a different drill.

Following the proper signal, the team divided into offense and defensive units, which then broke into smaller units. The offense broke down into runningbacks, linemen, quarterbacks and receivers.

The defense was separated into linemen, defensive backs and linebackers.

Both units' workouts were full of groans and the shouts of coaches and players.

"Use your footwork, don't be in such a hurry" and "get on the ball, you can't do anything without the ball" echoed from the offensive end. Cries of "good stick" and "keep your head up and watch the ball" came from the defensive end.

And "that away, that away, good job" floated from both ends.

Finally after two hours of hitting, running, catching and throwing, the horn sounded for its final time of the day. Just 18 workouts left.

Tracksters to start outdoor season

Because of the cancellation of last week's scheduled track meet by the host K-State men's and women's track teams, Saturday's meet will be larger, according to Head Track Coach Steve Miller.

The meet was originally scheduled to be a quadrangular, but in addition to the teams already scheduled, squads which were not able to compete last week were invited to participate.

Teams to compete in the meet will include the University of Minnesota, the University of Colorado, Northwest Missouri University, Wichita State University, Kansas Wesleyan University, the University of Ottawa, Fort Hays State University, the University of Nebraska-Omaha, Hutchinson Junior College and partial teams from the University of Nebraska and the University of Kansas.

The field events are scheduled to begin at 11 a.m., and running events will get underway at noon. No preliminaries will be run and no team scoring will be kept. Miller said the meet will probably run "rain or shine."

Miller said he expects several members of the women's team to have a strong performance in the meet — the first outdoor meet for everyone except Deb Pihl, who participated in the California-Nike Invitational last weekend.

In addition, javelin thrower Ray Hansen and triple jumper Kenny Harrison are expected to turn in strong showings for the men's team, he said.

Because of higher budgets allotted to other Big Eight Conference schools, Miller said K-State is behind in its progress compared to other conference teams.

"An example of this (the budget differences) is with Missouri. They already have made a spring trip to southern Louisiana last week and got to run in 70 and 80 degree weather," Miller said. "We just haven't been able to make any spring trips yet, and our conference meet is just six weeks away."

Miller said he is concerned because this is the latest start he can remember for the outdoor season. As a result of this, Miller said all the K-State athletes will be competing in their natural events.

"At this point, we can't afford to move people around," he said. "So, from here on out, everyone will more than likely be performing at their natural positions."

Royals dump Orioles, 12-7

By The Associated Press

MIAMI — Hal McRae had four hits and drove in four runs Thursday as the Kansas City Royals defeated the Baltimore Orioles 9-8 in 11 innings of exhibition baseball.

McRae had a pair of doubles and Darryl Motley had three hits, including a double and home run, as the Royals pounded four Baltimore pitchers for 17 hits. Orioles starter Storm Davis was tagged for nine hits and seven runs in four innings.

Derek Botelho, who worked the last three innings, was the winning pitcher. Natt Snell, a righthander from the Orioles minor league camp who was pitching in his third straight game, was the loser.

In other spring training news the Royals optioned pitcher Keith Creel to Omaha of the American Association and placed pitcher Dennis Leonard on the 60-day disabled list Thursday.

Leonard, 32, the right-handed ace of the Royals' staff in past years, is attempting to come back from a torn tendon in his left leg that required surgery twice last year. He has not pitched this spring.

1984 baseball season brings new challenges

By The Associated Press

Pete Rose, once in search of a team, now is in search of a record, or two. What else is new.

Baseball's hunt for a new commissioner ended with the selection of Peter V. Ueberroth, but Bowie's still around.

Drugs have become one of baseball's gravest concerns. The guilty include Pascual Perez, Willie Wilson, Willie Aikens, Jerry Martin and Vida Blue.

Dave Parker, Tom Seaver and Phil Niekro have changed uniforms. And Rich Gossage of the San Diego Padres? What a funny sound.

The Baltimore Orioles, Chicago White Sox, Philadelphia Phillies and Los Angeles Dodgers have honor to uphold.

Reggie Jackson and Steve Carlton had seasons they would like to forget. Jackson says he has something to prove; Carlton's story remains untold.

1984 presents a new challenge for these men and these baseball teams. The season opens, as tradition dictates, in Cincinnati on Monday, the earliest opening date in modern baseball. The New York Mets provide the opposition.

The Orioles, basically the same team that won the American League East and the World Series in 1983, also open defense of their title on Monday, at home against the White Sox, winners of the AL West by a record 20 games.

The Phillies, East Division champions and winners of the National League pennant, open at Atlanta, and the NL West winner, Los Angeles, plays host to St. Louis, both games on Tuesday.

Although many teams greeted new faces in spring training this year, one old, familiar face remains in place. That's Bowie Kuhn, for 15 years commissioner of the game and presiding over his last season-opener. After nearly two years of politics, Ueberroth was selected earlier this month to replace Kuhn.

But, as president of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, Ueberroth can't take over until late August or early September. Until then, Kuhn remains in office.

Perhaps the most celebrated player move of the off-season was Rose from Philadelphia to Montreal. Released by the Phillies after the World Series, Rose will take up his chase of Ty Cobb's all-time hits record this year with the Expos. He needs 201 to match Cobb's record of 4,191.

Rod Carew of the California Angels is 168 hits away from 3,000, but he had only 160 last season. Jackson, another Angel, is 22 homers away from 500. It's possible, but he hit only 14 last year while batting .194 in the worst season of his career.

"I've got to prove that I can still be Reggie," he says. "Every writer has come to me and they're almost afraid to say, 'It seems like your career is over because you had a horrible season.'"

"The question doesn't worry me, and the answer is unknown."

Also unknown is whether the 39-year-old Carlton, the three-time Cy Young winner from Philadelphia, can turn around his worst season in a decade. He was 15-16 last year with a 3.11 earned run average and finished only eight games.

The change in uniforms of several of the game's best-known names will bear watching this season.

After 11 seasons with the Pittsburgh Pirates, Parker is wearing the conservative garb of the Cincinnati Reds. Sans beard and earring, Parker could be a positive force for the NL West cellar dwellers.

In terms of length-of-service, however, Parker can't equal the switch made by Phil Niekro, who was cut after his 18th season with the Atlanta Braves. The 45-year-old knuckleball pitcher now wears the pinstripes of the New York Yankees, where once played a pitcher called Goose.

He, too, made a switch, abandoning the Yankees via free agency and winding up on the West Coast with the San Diego Padres, one of baseball's most improved teams. Gossage's presence in the bullpen is one reason why.

While he is no new face, Yogi Berra also takes over as manager of the Yankees. It was 20 years ago that he last managed the club.

Staff/Bob Spencer

Lynn Lichter, K-State baseball player, autographs a poster for nurse Bev Parrish's son, Dean, as Julie Luoma, head nurse, looks on. The players visited Memorial Hospital on Thursday to help cheer patients. The team also collects donations at home games for hospital equipment.

Team pitches in to aid hospital pediatric unit

By TIM FILBY
Staff Writer

The idea all started one night when Jim Braun and a few of his K-State baseball teammates were talking about respected sports figures who provide good examples of how athletes should act toward the public.

"We have guys on the team that look up to guys like Greg Luzinski and Jim Plunkett, people who do charity work," Braun said. "And we decided we should get together and do something for Manhattan."

For Braun, the idea of what the team should do to help was clear. As a member of last year's University of Kansas team, Braun saw a Jayhawk bathboy afflicted with leukemia.

"The whole team felt really bad," Braun said. "We all wanted to do something to help."

Subsequently, Braun's transfer to K-State resulted in having to sit out this season before he can play. But, because of his earlier experience at Kansas, Braun decided one way he could get involved with the team was to spearhead a project to adopt a pediatric unit of a local hospital.

"I was kind of depressed because at the time the team was going south on a road trip, and I couldn't play," Braun said. "I thought of this idea and got a pretty good response from the guys."

"Anytime you have coaches and players, you should go out and get acquainted with the community," K-State baseball coach Bill Hickey said. "It's an athlete's civic duty, and it also represents K-State well in the community."

The team became involved with Memorial Hospital after it got approval from hospital officials.

"The team called us to see if they could get connected with a hospital that has a pediatric ward," Ed Klimek of Memorial said. "Since we are the only hospital in the city that has such a facility, we were glad to have them."

Since then the team has made two visits to the hospital, the most recent on Thursday, and has also decided to start a fund-raising drive to collect money for a Doppler Stethoscope for the pediatric unit, a device that enables nurses to run accurate blood pressure checks on small children.

So far the team's goal to raise the $550 for the machine has been hampered by rainy weather (the team had been asking for donations from fans at home games) and a lack of publicity, Braun said.

"We don't have much publicity

— no one knows K-State is playing baseball right now," Braun said. "Trying to organize something like this is hard, too. Hopefully we're going to get a lot of help with donations from groups and other people."

The team plans to present Memorial with the money collected during the final series of the season against Iowa State University.

The hospital visits have been well-received by team members and patients.

For the team's first visit, players Eric Gossett, Mark Goodwin, Jack Fritz, Todd Thamer, Jay Kvasnika, Brian Bascue and Braun went along. The team wore their full uniforms to the hospital and brought along the K-State mascot, Willie the Wildcat.

"The visits have worked out great. All the team members walk down the hall and patients ask for them to come in and visit," Klimek said. "One lady in intensive care asked the team to visit her. She was a big K-State fan, and it seemed to really pep her up. The visits really seem to help a lot."

The team has enjoyed the visits as well.

"It was a blast," Braun said. "All the kids seem to like the visits, and they really like Willie the Wildcat."

"This project is a thing we can do as a club to help kids through a traumatic experience," Hickey said.

Manhattan residents create videotape resume business

By TOM STALLBAUMER
Collegian Reporter

Lights. Camera. Action!

That phrase no longer signals the beginning of filming a movie; now it could be the beginning of a new type of resume.

Q Video, the creation of two Manhattan residents, is one of the first videotaping services in the area to apply videotaping skills to making resumes.

Bob Mullin, temporary instructor of English at K-State and former associate professor of English at Manhattan Christian College, and Jerry "Q" Hutchinson, a long-time local broadcast personality, teamed up to begin the business.

"I got the idea about a year ago, and then one day I saw the same idea in a featurette on the Disney (cable television) channel," Mullin said.

Mullin had previously produced several albums and more than 1,000 tapes for classes and presentations while at MCC.

This experience, combined with Hutchinson's 14 years in broadcast, made the two entrepreneurs feel they "could come up with something substantial," he said.

"The idea behind the video resume was to provide a means to allow someone to showcase their talents," Mullin said.

"This would work very well for an art student," he said. "Rather than insuring a portfolio and sending it to a potential employer, why not have the portfolio videotaped and simply send the video tape?"

"It (also) would be a great way for a musician to audition, or for engineers and designers to show off their work. There are a great many ways to utilize the video," he said.

The equipment used by Q Video is portable and operates with either electricity or battery power. It is in the format of Video Home System (VHS), which is used by 80 percent of video cassette recorder (VCR) users, Mullin said.

"VCR's are quite common now. Most major companies already have them. I don't think there would be any problems in (the potential employers) viewing the (resume) tape, Mullin said.

Before a video resume is recorded, Q Video requires a personal consultation be held to discuss arrangements and the format to be used.

"We can let the individual do the resume their own way or we can do it in an interview setting," Mullin said.

"In using the interview, we would simply ask a number of questions to allow the interviewee to bring out their qualifications and talents."

"The video tapes can be run at different speeds, depending upon the desired length and quality of the video portion," Mullin said.

"The tape at high speed gives the best video reproduction and will provide about 2 hours of recording," Mullin said.

Slower speeds can be used, getting up to eight hours recording on one tape, but the quality will be less, he said.

The cost for a video resume ranges from $75 to $100. The price includes the consultation, set up and master tape.

"Copies of the tape cost $25 each and would require only the amount of time taken to record the original to copy the tape," Mullin said.

Q Video has not yet produced a video resume for a customer.

"Our advertising budget has been quite slim, but as we get income from some of our other services, our resume advertising will increase," Mullin said.

A little good news goes a Long Distance.

Land a job for next summer? Call home! Your parents will relish the thought of you making money, as opposed to spending it.

Get a good grade on a paper? Parents love to see proof that they raised a smart kid.

You don't need a big event to call home. Even a little good news can go a long, long way.

And nobody's more eager to hear about it than your family.

Call between 11 pm Friday and 5 pm Sunday for the lowest rates.

When you've done something good, share the good news!

If the whole dorm heaved a sigh of relief when you threw that last sock in the washing machine... then for you, doing laundry is news. News that your Mom would be delighted to hear.

We could print a long list of golden promises about the College of Business Administration at Kansas State. But we'd rather get down to brass tacks, and show you proof not promises. Like our ever increasing enrollment and our 13th national ranking of our Accounting Department. We want to tempt you with our excellent faculty and administration and superb job recruiting atmosphere. More proof? We'll show you a growing list of successful K-State graduates from the College of Business Administration and our world renowned International Trade Institute. So look at others' promises and our proof. Maybe it's time you got down to brass tacks at Kansas State. ## Editor's Note:

Universities are typically places of constant, rhythmic changes. They offer an abode for gaining intellectual and self knowledge. With the demands for increased understanding come necessary changes in attitudes, structures, equipment and funding methods. Amid the whirlwind of academic life, a pause is necessary to allow time for reflection. These pages are designed to provide that pause and promote thought about the status of the University, the services the institution and its people provide and the quality of its education and finances. By spending a moment to examine its past and present, we may be able to glimpse the future of K-State.

Who are the students of K-State?

A profile of K-State students compiled by Ann Phelan, former K-State research analyst, and Mike Lynch, assistant director of student development, showed that students from every state in the nation attend the University, with 10 percent of the students coming from states other than Kansas.

More than one-third of the out-of-state students enrolled are Missouri residents, with Illinois, Nebraska and New York following in representation. International students representing 70 countries make up 4 percent of the enrollment. The greatest number of international students come from Nigeria, Iran and Taiwan.

Riley, Johnson, Sedgwick, Shawnee, Geary and Saline counties have the greatest number of students enrolled at K-State, according to the Center for Student Development study.

Figures show that of the incoming freshmen in 1981, 70 percent ranked K-State as their first choice, 15 percent ranked K-State as their second choice and 5 percent ranked K-State as their third college preference. These freshmen were asked to rank the factors which most influenced their decision to attend the University.

The top seven factors were specific curriculum, cost, distance, friendly campus atmosphere, variety of curricula, someone attending who was known by the student and the quality of teaching, respectively.

'K-State students have good value systems. They are work- and play-oriented and here for a good reason.'

—Stephen Hall

The profile showed the typical student in that freshman class had an American Collegiate Test (ACT) composite score of 21.0 and a high school grade point average of 3.2. This compared to national averages of 18.8 and 3.0. The typical student was in a college preparatory high school program, and at the time of testing, the student thought he would obtain about a 3.0. GPA in his first year of college.

Most students chose engineering and business and commerce as their planned educational majors and occupational choice fields.

Women ranked business and commerce as their first choice, health professions as second and education as their third choice. Men ranked engineering as their first preference, business and commerce as second and agriculture and forestry as their third choice.

At least 50 percent of the students who participated in the survey indicated they aspired to a bachelor's degree, while 44 percent planned to attend graduate school or seek a professional degree.

A majority of students, 66 percent, stated that they planned to live in a residence hall during their first year of college.

Research initiated by staff members at the Counseling Center studied the nature of students on campus. A stratified random sample was drawn from the computer listing of students enrolled during fall 1982.

Stratification was made by gender and upper and lower class levels. Five photographs and one white blank were used to develop a stimulus instrument, testing known as a Thematic Apperception Test.

Pictures used were of campus scenes or activities and were judged to be ambiguous enough to permit the projection of student stories, said Fred Newton, associate professor of student development and counselor at Holton Hall.

"The results of this study determined that there were specific ideas and needs which, determined by this class of students surveyed, were thought about by a majority of other K-State students," Newton said.

These needs included the need for achievement, affiliation and power.

Test results indicated 32 percent of the men and 12 percent of the women sampled had high needs for achievement.

Women were higher than men with a 65 percent need for affiliation, while only 23 percent of the men had high affiliation needs. More women than men had a greater need for power or control, the study concluded.

Females had a greater need for friendship than either achievement or power.

Other concerns shown by K-State students were low self-esteem, independence, male-female relationships, health and stress, a lack of purpose or direction, a lack of support in the environment and questions about their careers.

Students have additional concerns and characteristics, Newton said. The type of university a student attends affects the type of student he becomes.

"Each university is different, and here at K-State the numbers are smaller. There are fewer students here than at other universities, and that has a great deal of effect on how a student acts and reacts," he said.

Figures and statistics about the "typical" student are really not what describes the K-State student, said Stephen Hall, assistant registrar. The K-State student is friendly, personable and intelligent, he said.

"I have been around a lot of students and worked in many different schools and atmospheres, but here at K-State there is a definite atmosphere. The students are really friendly, they are not afraid to say hello," he said.

Much of the friendliness demonstrated by the students comes from K-State's comparatively small size (18,192 students currently enrolled), and the backgrounds of many of the students, Hall said.

"K-State students have good value systems. They are work- and play-oriented and here for a good reason. This must be due to their backgrounds."

"The teachers, administrators and students of K-State have a good reputation," Hall said. "We just have to believe in the people and in the students that make K-State what it is, and the rest will be easy."

Enrollment figures decline among Big Eight schools

No exception to a nationwide trend, Big Eight Conference universities have experienced declines in enrollment figures in recent semesters.

Iowa State University was the only Big Eight school to increase its student population between spring 1983 and spring 1984. Since fall 1983, more than 450 new students have been added to ISU's student body.

Although the student population decreased in both schools, K-State and the University of Kansas had the least noticeable change in enrollment figures. Both schools had fewer than 75 less students between the last two spring enrollments.

Oklahoma universities have been hit hardest by enrollment decreases. The University of Oklahoma and Oklahoma State University lost 734 and 923 students, respectively, since last semester.

Even with the decline in total numbers of students in Big Eight universities, there seems to be a steady increase in certain areas of study.

Schools of business, education and journalism are holding their ground in the fight for interested students.

All three of these areas of study were able to increase student enrollment in at least four of the Big Eight schools.

Although registering a slight decrease in journalism students, K-State was able to increase enrollment figures in its colleges of business, education, arts and sciences and veterinary medicine.

The hardest hit of all the colleges, not only at K-State, but throughout the Big Eight, was agriculture. None of the schools in the conference maintained or increased the number of students enrolled in agriculture.

K-State and ISU, with the most noted Big Eight agricultural colleges, lost 111 and 149 students, respectively.

Programs of architecture and engineering also have been set back by a decrease in student enrollment. The University of Oklahoma was the only institution to increase the number of students in its school of architecture. None of the schools had enrollment increases in engineering programs.

It took five 'rocky' years to gain respect

The Associated Students of Kansas hasn't always been a respected student lobbying organization.

"This year has been a year of new-found respect," Brett Lambert, ASK campus director said. "When legislators are calling you up and asking you to testify, that means you're respected, that they trust you to give accurate information and work with them."

However, ASK has not always been held in such high regard. The first five years were rocky ones for the organization, which includes all Kansas Board of Regents institutions and Washburn University of Topeka.

"It was pretty shakey in the beginning," Lambert said. "Schools were always threatening to pull out if they didn't get their way."

Lambert said ASK went through a series of trials and errors.

"In 1977 and 1978 we supported the legalization of marijuana," he said. "That was the most stupid stance we ever took because we couldn't have an impact on that issue. We lost a lot of people, and a lot of people still remember that."

ASK has an operating budget of $56,000. It is funded from student fees, receiving 40 cents from each full-time student. An increase of 10 cents per student has been requested for next year, the first increase requested in three years.

Lambert said the increase is necessary for ASK to continue to grow.

"A lobbying group shouldn't only lobby for its own issues, but should also be open to legislators," he said. "We don't have the resources to do that type of work."

Lambert said the potential of ASK could be seen in the efforts to stop the passage of the drinking age bill currently being considered by the Kansas Legislature.

"We are the only group stopping the drinking age bill from being passed," he said.

One of the greatest forces keeping ASK from stopping the passage of the bill is student apathy.

"Without a doubt one of the largest problems we have is student apathy, even with an issue like the drinking age, which is a historic issue that students rally around," Lambert said.

Brett Lambert, ASK campus director, has seen the lobbying group evolve into a respected voice for students.

"If there is anything that prevents ASK from being the most powerful lobbying group in the state, it's that (student apathy)," he said.

The drinking age bill has been ASK's major project this year. Other projects include teacher scholarship programs and the work study program.

Much of ASK's lobbying is conducted in the Kansas Legislature. When a bill is proposed, ASK representatives testify in support or opposition before the committee considering the bill.

Official positions on various bills are determined at ASK legislative assemblies held four times a year. Each member school sends one delegate per 1,000 students to the assembly. The delegates form committees which discuss bills and make recommendations to the general assembly. The general assembly makes the final decision on which stance will be taken on a bill. Policy decisions end at the conclusion of each academic year and must be voted on again in September.

ASK uses what Lambert calls a "new style of lobbying."

"Pittsburg State University and Wichita State University belong to USSA (United States Student Association), which is a national student lobbying group," he said.

"They're the kind of organization that would throw blood on the steps of the Pentagon," Lambert said. "To lobby effectively, you have to walk in with two years of education under your belt, in a three-piece suit and be calm and subtle and listen. It's a new style of lobbying, and it's very subtle."

Other states also have picked up on the new style of student lobbying.

The Associated Students of the University of Missouri began in 1975. Since then, they have become an effective lobbying group, Jim Clark, ASUM legislative director, said.

"The Associated Students of the University of Missouri began after several years of attempts by student body presidents to get together and work together," he said.

"There was a pretty consistent pattern from state to state," Clark said. "When the amendment was passed to allow 18-year-olds to vote, things really began. Twelve states created student lobbying groups — we were one of them, and Kansas was one of them."

One difference between ASUM and ASK is the Missouri lobby's use of student interns.

"Through the graciousness of our political science department, we are able to grant academic credit to student interns who we select and train," Clark said. "They get a wonderful reception in the legislation, so apparently it pays off."

Educational funding has been ASUM's first priority this year, Clark said.

"The major issues this year are the university's own budget and higher education as a percentage of the state budget," he said. "The percentage of the state budget for higher education has been falling steadily in the past six years."

A somewhat newer organization is the Nebraska State Student Organization, which began in 1981.

"We were organized in nine months and have been going strong since then," Deborah Chapelle, NSSA student executive director, said.

The issues that NSSA deals with are decided on by the student members and then go through the legislative process. Every fall NSSA meets to develop a policy platform.

The platform this year has five planks. They include access to education, which deals with budgets at the five institutions belonging to NSSA; access for physically limited students; financial assistance, which includes a work study program; faculty salaries and benefits; and voter registration and education.

The newest student lobbying group to be formed is the United Students of Iowa, which began in 1983.

"We were incorporated on June 4, 1983, but we met in an informal way for a year prior to that," Chris Morton, USI executive director, said.

USI has three member schools and two full-time staff people in Des Moines.

"People are still wondering what we're doing and who we are," Morton said. "We're working on getting people better informed as to what we're about. With Iowa being so closely knit, we have more and more people getting involved."

SGA Students lead in leadership

K-State's Student Governing Association is regarded as a role-model by many other universities, said Pat Bosco, assistant vice-president for student affairs.

"I can say, as I have worked with our student government and other student governments, that K-State is far ahead of most institutions in the areas of leadership training, student activity fee allocation, discipline and general and meaningful input into University committee structure," he said.

Jerry Katlin, 1983-1984 student body president and graduate in public administration, said K-State's SGA has several qualities which set it apart from other such associations in the state.

"We have by far the nicest physical facilities in the state," he said. "We are also the only student government to have a full-time classified secretary."

Student Senate is an active part of student government at K-State. Lori Leu, senior in pre-law and former senate chairman, said senate meets weekly for meetings which last approximately two and a half hours, except during tentative allocations. Allocations require about thirty hours of work, and senate meets twice a week for meetings which usually last at least six hours until the allocations are completed.

The allocation process used by senate has been studied by other universities.

Pittsburg State University is revising its allocation process and has asked K-State's SGA for help. A student from the University of Nebraska also has called with several questions about the system, Leu said.

Katlin said SGA receives $25.25 from each student's activity fee. This amounted to almost $800,000 in 1983-1984. This money is then allocated to campus organizations by senate.

Senate's Finance Committee holds hearings for groups requesting funds, Katlin said. Each group presents its budget at this hearing. Then the committee makes allocation recommendations to senate.

In April, the full senate makes a tentative allocation to groups which will receive funding. Leu said groups are allowed to spend 25 percent of the tentative allocation before final allocations are made in the fall.

"The student activity fee procedure (at K-State) is a model for other colleges and universities," Bosco said. "Granted, it takes an inordinate amount of time, but every student group has a genuine opportunity to have its needs heard."

The SGA Constitution also has been studied by other schools, Katlin said.

"We've gotten requests from other schools for copies of our constitution and allocation process," he said.

Not all university constitutions are similar to K-State's, Katlin said. For example, K-State has the only constitution he knows of that does not allow the student body president or senate chairman to run for office more than once.

Another difference in student government systems at different schools is the way in which students run for governing positions. At some schools, such as KU, students run as members of parties. At K-State, each student runs individually.

"I think it (running in parties) decreases interaction between senators and their constituents," Katlin said.

While every group registered with the University Activities Board and every college council is effected by SGA, only a few more than 200 students are directly involved in the decision-making process. This includes members of senate, senate standing committees, University committees and the University judicial system.

Major student government accomplishments in the past have included saving Nichols Hall and beginning plans for a new coliseum.

Leu said the legislation providing for the renovation of Holton Hall, which houses many student social services, also was a major accomplishment, even though some students did not think senate should support the renovation because it required a $3 addition to student fees.

SGA efforts also brought about the students' attorney program and the Consumer Relations Board, Bosco said. In the past, SGA has worked with Faculty Senate on the questions of the class retake policy, taking classes pass/fail and teacher course evaluations, he said.

Bosco said K-State is advanced in its incorporation of student input into Faculty Senate decisions.

"Faculty Senate changed its constitution almost 14 years ago, allowing...students to vote in Faculty Senate meetings," he said. "There are campuses today, larger and smaller than K-State, that are still wrestling with student representation on their faculty senates."

Students must cooperate with administration to achieve the best results, Katlin said.

Growth Branching out from agrarian roots

K-State has evolved steadily from its founding as an agricultural school to its current status as a comprehensive and diverse learning center.

"K-State was founded Feb. 16, 1863, as the nation's first land-grant college," said Carl Rochat, news editor of University Relations.

A pamphlet published by the American Association of Land Grant Colleges and State Universities described the 1862 Morrill Act. It provided the opportunity for students from the working classes to obtain a practical education by donating 30,000 acres of federal land to every state for each of its senators and representatives. The land was to be used to establish land-grant colleges.

Many had been dissatisfied with traditional education because it was not perceived as providing the kind of practical knowledge needed to stimulate growth in the nation, the pamphlet stated.

Charles Hein, director of communications, said more emphasis was needed in the areas of mechanical arts, home economics and research. Further, the results of this knowledge needed to be readily available for public use, he said.

Former K-State President James McCain wrote that one noted historian declared the United States' creation of land-grant universities as one of the three most significant events in the history of higher education. Others were the founding of the first university in the Western world in Salerno, Italy, in the Middle Ages and the establishment of the Prussian Academy of Sciences in Berlin in 1810.

As land-grant colleges grew, they became far different from their historic predecessors, the pamphlet stated. They placed great emphasis on specialized education, seeking to meet the needs of a society learning how to apply the discoveries of science and advanced technology to daily life.

But the demarcation between land grant universities and other public and private schools has become more obscure in the last 50 years, Rochat said.

"As grants became available, from Sputnik (space program) on, everybody was encouraged to develop research programs," he said. Now research funds are readily available from a number of sources.

For example, in addition to state and federal funds for research, K-State receives funds from private sources, foundations, businesses, the National Science Foundation and institutes of health, he said.

'We have had a convergence over the last 20 years with institutions trying to be all things to all people,'

— Stan Koplik

While other schools were becoming more research oriented, most land-grant universities were becoming more concerned with providing a liberal education, the pamphlet stated. Land-grant universities were trying to combine the values of classical education with a curriculum better suited to meet the needs of a changing society.

"In keeping with this trend, the 1959 Kansas Legislature officially designated K-State as a university," McCain wrote.

"That's when we tried to liberalize our curricula," Rochat said.

"The social sciences, humanities and fine arts acquired increasing importance, both in the support of the professional colleges and as ends in themselves. Separate departments of philosophy, sociology, anthropology, art and political science were established and doctoral programs authorized in English and history," McCain wrote.

Students in such professional fields as engineering, agriculture and home economics also were required to take substantially more credits in these liberal studies, he said.

Then in 1962-1963, a College of Business Administration headed by a dean replaced the Department of Business Administration to accommodate the rapidly increasing number of business students more efficiently, he said. There were nearly 1,000 students in business at that time.

"In 1964-1965, architecture was separated from the College of Engineering and established as a new College of Architecture and Design. Landscape Architecture was transferred from the Department of Horticulture and incorporated into this new college," he said.

Military training is one area which has declined at K-State. Until 1965, every student was required to take military training, Rochat said. The University is still obligated by the state to offer military training, but the University of Kansas and Washburn University of Topeka offer it also without being required by state mandate.

Although K-State's philosophy has merged with those of other public and private schools, differences between the schools are still maintained.

Former University President F. D. Farrell once said, "It is important to recognize that a land-grant college does not engage exclusively in providing instruction for resident students." The college supplies three types of services, he said. Those are resident instruction, research work and extension work.

Hein said this tradition continues today.

"Land-grant schools have strong research programs," Rochat said. K-State offers special emphasis in the hard sciences, in part, because it is important for research in agriculture, specifically in understanding plant and animal diseases, he said.

"K-State's Agriculture Experiment Station has by far the largest research organization in Kansas," he said. The station employs approximately 500 scientists.

Rochat said K-State has been particularly active in its extension work. In the last 20 years, he said, the University has been more concerned with international contributions. Most of the University's assistance programs are located in the Philippines, Tunisia, Morocco and Sri Lanka.

Board of Regents Executive Director Stan Koplik said the regents view K-State as "the state's representative institution in carrying out what has been so economically important to the state, that is, leading (agricultural) research in the nation."

"We have had a convergence over the last 20 years with institutions trying to be all things to all people," Koplik said. But it just has not worked well. Now the regents will probably designate specialties (areas of study) to be offered at particular institutions, he said.

Rep. Don Crumbaker, R-Brewster and chairman of the House Education Committee, said some areas of education offered at K-State and other schools may be merged to a degree in the future, but it is difficult to say duplication between programs exists. "All of them (regent institutions) have their purpose," he said.

Strong faculty, programs build K-State's reputation

K-State President Duane Acker, in a personal interview with a Collegian staff writer earlier this week, gave his opinions and insights about pertinent issues faced by the University and the status of its educational and financial well-being.

COLLEGIAN: The president of Washburn University once said the University of Kansas is the flagship university of the state. What is your reaction?

ACKER: It is the kind of thing you don't really respond to because it is so apparent that both Kansas State University and the University of Kansas have statewide responsibilities, especially in their subject matter areas that are predominant.

It's apparent — with our extension programs statewide, with our long-range doctoral degree programs and with the fact that we have eight colleges with the statewide research activities — that both KU and K-State enjoy a tremendous following, a tremendous respect.

That's true in other states like Kansas that have what we call the dual-university system; Michigan that has Michigan State and Michigan, Iowa that has the University of Iowa and Iowa State...It's simply a characteristic of these kinds of states.

COLLEGIAN: What are K-State's overall strengths and weaknesses?

ACKER: I believe our strength that is noticed most by people is the depth of training and the diversity of our faculty, faculty that are well equipped with the individual discipline or sub-discipline that they are responsible for.

I counted (degrees compared to faculty members) several years ago in one of our colleges. There were, at that time, about 100 faculty members with teaching responsibilities. They had their degrees from about 120 different colleges and universities in this country and abroad. That represents really a tremendous reservoir of experience and a tremendous diversity or heterogeneity, I think, which provides a broad perspective to our students, as well as the depth in their discipline.

I think beyond that, our strength is that we have significant research or scholarly activity programs in almost all areas of undergraduate and graduate instruction. That means the students are exposed to scientists or artists or persons (that are) professionals in their discipline who are at the cutting edge of industry or professional activity. So when the students are studying and when they graduate, they themselves are what I call "ripe and ready" to enter a field of employment or further academic work.

Certainly any university has areas you are trying to strengthen at any given time. We have a number of criteria here that we follow. For example, we don't want to continue but for a temporary period a program that wouldn't warrant certification or accreditation by a respected and good accreditation group, if such a group exists for that particular program.

I think the second criteria is that we are one of the strong ones (universities) in the state of Kansas. We don't want to be one of the weak ones in the state of Kansas in any discipline.

I think thirdly, can our graduates make their mark in a regional or national or international arena? Can they compete effectively with the graduates of other highly respected universities such as Michigan or Michigan State, Iowa or Iowa State? So these criteria help us to define what our minimums are.

COLLEGIAN: What is K-State's unique mission as a University?

ACKER: There are several things that are unique here.

One is the statewide Cooperative Extension Service with an office in every county.

The second is the breadth and depth of our agricultural programs. We have a number of undergraduate majors and a number of graduate majors.

Third would be veterinary medicine. (K-State is) the only college (in Kansas) with veterinary medicine.

Fourth would be that the University is the only one (in Kansas) with a full complement of home economics. There are a lot of colleges in Kansas that teach home economics. But we try to provide the place to which students can, if they wish, transfer during their junior and senior years and provide the specializations in human nutrition, dietetics, restaurant management, child development that might not be available or that aren't available on most other Kansas campuses.

We are unique in having agricultural and nuclear engineering in the state of Kansas.

Although there are two colleges of architecture and design, we're the only one that has all of the architectural disciplines...including landscape architecture and urban and regional planning and interior architecture.

We have in the case of the College of Education — there are six colleges of education (in Kansas) — (a unique) statewide responsibility in adult and occupational education.

We are unique that we give special attention to the rural school districts, and a lot of Kansas is rural. We have a center for rural education. We have a good many international programs that are unique or unusual here in the state of Kansas.

COLLEGIAN: The House and Senate agricultural committees last August expressed concern that K-State is getting away from an emphasis on agriculture. What is your reaction?

ACKER: The House and Senate agricultural committees were on our campus. They did see the extent of the research and extension and teaching programs in agriculture and the fact that well over 90 percent of the state-provided research funds to K-State are spent in the agricultural experiment station...I think that would show the emphasis on agriculture at K-State is exceedingly high. Then, of course, you add to that veterinary medicine, which is agriculture-related.

I think they also recognize that K-State does have a responsibility in eight different teaching colleges and that we must assign the resources in accord with the enrollment trends. We have to differentiate based on the relative degree of specialization and the cost of instruction in certain areas.

We just had a delightful and a very good session. I think there was good communication with those two committees.

COLLEGIAN: The decline in college and university enrollment in America is widespread. K-State is no exception. How is K-State responding to enrollment decline and what are some of the long-range goals to remedy the problem?

ACKER: Well, I would say we're responding in several ways.

One is working harder to ensure that those who might be interested in the curricula at K-State be acquainted with them and the other features at K-State that they would like.

I think it's apparent that individual colleges and departments are working harder at communications. It's important that we strengthen our advising system so students who do come here increase the odds for success in curricula they've chosen.

I think certainly there is a third adjustment that is a part of it and there will be some decrease in enrollment and there will be changes in faculty members and there will be some differential shifts. Where one (college) might decrease in enrollment faster, some may increase in enrollment. So there will be reassignment of resources among the colleges to follow that pattern.

COLLEGIAN: Several of the colleges on campus are changing deans. What effect will this have on the University?

ACKER: I think each of them will bring new ideas. They'll bring a different set of experiences. I think they will bring out in our current faculty some new and different ideas. I think at the same time there will be a lot of continuation in the strengths that we have. I think it's just part of a normal process and part of a good thing in the University that there would be changes in a few positions.

COLLEGIAN: Do you see this as giving the University a new thrust?

ACKER: Yes, there will be changes. We have a new dean of home economics who arrived this past fall. A new dean of veterinary medicine has been identified, Dr. Jim Coffman. There will be a new dean of education as well as the new dean of architecture and design. So this will have some influence on the discussion in our administrative counsel groups. I expect to see a contribution to the University beyond the individual college.

COLLEGIAN: Financially, how is K-State fairing?

ACKER: Well, we're always tight. There are always a lot of equipment needs. There are personnel needs we see that we would like to have additional support for. When we compare ourselves with some other states, industrial states to the east, we're doing very well right now on a relative basis. We're looking at the present time at salary increases of about 7 percent, operating expense from 6 to 8 percent. This is yet to be firmly decided by the Legislature. With the enrollment drop that will occur, there will be some decrease in faculty members a year from now. But we have to make prejudicial judgments on what equipment we will buy. But I'd say that we're just fairing pretty well, especially compared to the state's to the east.

COLLEGIAN: What is your opinion of the budget proposals in the Senate?

ACKER: I'd say they're very good. There not only good for K-State, but they're good for all of the regent system. Considering the economic conditions of our time, I think the legislature is doing very well, both for the operating budget and improvements.

COLLEGIAN: So you think that we got our fair share of the appropriations?

ACKER: Oh yes, yes. I've always been impressed with the ability of the Legislature to make reasonable judgments. We're always disappointed in some items, but in the end, they do a pretty good job.

COLLEGIAN: How is K-State meeting financial changes?

ACKER: In two ways. One is to try to give as much warning to the deans and department heads as possible.

We are talking to deans now — this week, next week — giving a pretty good clue as to what their 1985 budget is going to be based on the enrollment trends and the data that we have so they can do planning as they make their personnel decisions for next fall.

The second thing is that we are trying to give as much flexibility as possible. For example, if I say to Dean A you can have $8,000 for a piece of equipment and you can have $12,000 for a classified position and $18,000 for an assistant professorship and $23,000 for an associate professorship in that particular discipline, then he or she doesn't have much flexibility.

But if I say, "You have X dollars, you make the judgments," then we will have better judgments. They will find economies that I could never find. We're trying to give them as much flexibility as we can give them...I want them to have the satisfaction, not just carry the bucket.

Evaluation

Regents maintain an informal air

College and university systems across the nation have different ways of evaluating their top administrator.

Some institutions' presidents and chancellors undergo formal reviews which are culminated in a published report, while others have more informal evaluations by their faculty members.

The Kansas Board of Regents evaluates the president at each of the seven regent institutions once each year.

"We have a list of comprehensive goals and objectives that they (the presidents) make each year, and we go over it point by point with them," Regent George Wingert, Ottawa, said.

"Each president makes personal and institutional goals and objectives for the upcoming fiscal year," Regent Jordan Haines, Wichita, said. "We go over them with him prior to a fiscal year. Then following that year, we sit down and review his performance. If he said he was going to climb the Himalayas and he didn't, we find out why."

The evaluation is done in executive session and is considered a personnel matter, which means that the results are not published or released to anyone but the administrators themselves.

"The nine members of the board and the president get together around a table and have a rather informal exchange," Haines said. "We're working toward the same goals. We want each University to be an outstanding and successful enterprise."

The University of Minnesota is one land-grant university which employs a different review process.

The 12-member Board of Regents of the University of Minnesota, through an evaluation committee and with the assistance of a consultant, extensively evaluates itself and the University president once every five years.

C. Peter Magrath, president of the University of Minnesota, is currently undergoing his second evaluation in his ninth year as president.

The consultant will convey the findings to the president personally and to individual regents. A summary report will be published at the end of the evaluation.

A large part of the evaluation process is interviews with people responsible for the conduct of the University's affairs.

Personal interviews are held with each individual regent, 10 of the university's professors, the vice presidents, provosts, all but two deans, the Faculty Consultative Committee, the Student Consultative Committee, selected leaders of the Minnesota Legislature and the president of the Minnesota Alumni Association.

An announcement published in the Feb. 1 "University of Minnesota — brief," a weekly internal bulletin serving all of the campuses of the University, encourages faculty to submit signed letters, which would remain confidential, commenting on Magrath's administration during the last five years.

Faculty are especially invited to comment on how Magrath has performed in providing academic leadership and as an administrator of the university, the announcement stated.

The letters are to be sent to the board to help in its evaluation of Magrath.

"There is no perfect way to administer evaluations, but the Kansas system (of evaluation) is highly preferable," Haines said. "We are all working for the same goals..."

He said the results of evaluations of administrators in Kansas schools are not released because it is a personal matter between the regents and the president of a university.

"We don't publish an official report," Wingert said. "It's like a progress report. We go over his evaluations from one year to the next."

The Kansas regents do not solicit comments from faculty members on campus or other administrators when they make an evaluation.

"(We receive) no formal input from others, but informally we hear things we take into account," Wingert said. "We visit the campus several times a year, and as we travel across the state we hear things from extension and experiment station people. We actually get input from the whole state of Kansas."

Haines said input is not solicited from others for the evaluations for several reasons.

"I've been here (on the board) for 6½ years and I've found there are two types of comments you receive. Some people will write letters saying 'John Doe is doing a super job and I just wanted you to know.' And others will say 'John Doe is not doing the things he should be doing.'"

Haines said three of the presidential objectives the regents look for are:

— To establish effective relations with faculty, staff and students.

— To be an effective administrator-manager.

— To work with constituent groups and the Board of Regents in developing a long-range planning process.

Budget

1985 may bring increased funds

The University budget has been a major concern of K-State students, administrators, and faculty during the past year and promises to be a major issue in the years to come.

Cuts in allocations caused by state budget restrictions have forced K-State and other Kansas Board of Regents schools to cut programs, personnel and equipment purchases to keep their accounts out of the red.

However, national and state awareness of the need to improve education has made it a major concern in determining state budgets.

Determining the University's budget is a complex process. It begins when K-State President Duane Acker makes his budget request to the Kansas Board of Regents. The regents examine and approve the budget, then deliver the requests to the governor, who reviews them and makes a budget proposal. The process then moves to the Kansas Legislature.

The House of Representatives reviews the governor's budget and designs an appropriations bill which, if passed, is then sent to the Senate. If the Senate approves the bill, it is submitted to the governor for approval.

In 1983, a total of $1.3 billion was spent on education and research in Kansas. During 1984, an estimated $1.4 billion will be spent for these purposes.

Gov. John Carlin's budget recommendations for 1985 show a continued commitment to education. He recommended that more than 60 percent of the state's general fund expenditures be used for elementary, secondary and higher education programs. The governor's 1985 budget recommended a $30.2 million increase over the 1984 funding for the regents' schools.

According to the governor's budget, he recommended a 1985 fiscal year total budget of $157.8 million for K-State and $8.4 million for the College of Veterinary Medicine. Carlin's budget trimmed the $163 million budget for K-State requested by Acker and approved by the regents.

On March 20, the House of Representatives passed a funding bill which provided $2.5 million less to the regents institutions than was recommended by the governor. The $2.5 million cut was created by taking out $5.6 million for increasing classified employees' salaries by 5 percent and increasing appropriations to various institutions by $3.1 million. Salaries for classified employees are now being considered in separate legislation.

The House appropriation bill included $158.8 million to K-State and the additional $8.4 million to the College of Veterinary Medicine. The Senate then increased K-State's appropriation to $159.2 million.

The House bill also included a faculty salary increase of almost 7 percent, instead of the 6 percent recommended by the governor. Part of the increase would be in the form of merit pay raises. The Senate accepted the House version of faculty salary increases.

Carlin recommended a 5 percent increase in state funds to be used for supplementing wages for students employed by campus work study programs. Under the House bill, student workers would still get a 5 percent increase in their hourly wages. The Senate also accepted the 5 percent increase.

Continued funding for "centers of excellence" at K-State, the University of Kansas, and Wichita State University also was recommended in the governor's budget. The centers are primarily research-related and are financed with money from the state general fund and donations from private sources. Each dollar provided by the state is matched with $1.50 from private sources. The Legislature concurred with Carlin's recommendation by accepting a 5 percent increase.

The House increased Other Operating Expenditures (OOE) budgets for the regents schools by 6 percent as opposed to Carlin's recommendation for a 5 percent increase. The Senate then made an 8 percent increase in OOE.

Funding for utility expenses is included in the OOE. Carlin recommended this portion of the OOE budget be increased by 8 percent. The House approved only a 7 percent increase in the utilities budget, but the Senate restored Carlin's 8 percent recommendation when they increased the total OOE budget.

The Legislature also included appropriations for several capital improvements. Under the bill, K-State will receive $485,000 for final planning of a new chemistry-biochemistry building and $196,000 to raze old greenhouses and complete planning for new plant science greenhouses. An appropriation of $250,000 for the planning of renovation and additions to Weber Hall is also included.

The final fiscal year 1985 budget for K-State has not yet been decided.

Capital Gains

Construction continues

K-State is growing. Departments are expanding and moving, and new buildings are enlarging the facilities and perimeters of the University. Examples of growth be seen in the progressive physical changes taking place in many structures across campus.

SHELLENBERGER HALL

The addition of a third floor to Shellenberger is complete, except for the milling laboratory, said Charles Deyoe, head of the Department of Grain Science and Industry. The milling laboratory will be ready for use this summer.

The Kansas Legislature agreed to fund 50 percent of the project if the department found industry support for the other half, he said.

Companies in the milling, baking and feed industry agreed to form a committee to obtain contributions and raise their share of the project, which is $767,000, Deyoe said.

WEBER AND CALL HALLS

At the top of current legislative list for changes at K-State is Phase I of the Weber project. This phase includes $113,500 for pre-planning in fiscal year 1984.

The Department of Animal Sciences and Industry will benefit from Phase II of the project through construction and renovation of laboratory and classroom spaces in both Weber and Call halls, said Melvin Hunt, associate professor of animal sciences and industry and chairman of the Weber Hall Building and Renovation Committee.

Funds for fiscal years 1985 and 1986 also have been allotted for detailed plan designs and actual renovation.

Gov. John Carlin has recommended an additional $5.2 million be allotted in 1987-1988 to complete the project, but the Board of Regents has yet to approve his plan.

The Plant Science Center Phase II is a planned addition to Throckmorton Hall based on the needs of faculty members and research.

DURLAND HALL

Durland Hall Phase II contains all of the administrative offices of the College of Engineering, the departments of electrical and mechanical engineering and an engineering experiment station.

The structure is an addition to the original building, which was completed in 1976, and is connected to the lobby of the first building.

"It (Phase II) will be the hub of the complex when Durland III is completed," Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, said. "The building contains excellent space for the labs and special vibrating floors in the experimental classrooms."

Another feature of the building is Paslay Lecture Hall, which was named for and built with funds provided by Leroy Paslay, a K-State alumnus.

NICHOLS HALL

Nichols Gymnasium has held a high position on students' priority list of campus improvements for about six years, and in 1985 their dedication to the structure will finally pay off with the opening of a renovated Nichols Hall.

On Dec. 13, 1968, the structure was destroyed by fire.

On Feb. 18, 1983, the Kansas Board of Regents approved the Nichols renovation plan, which is currently under way by the R.D. Andersen Construction Co. of Topeka.

The same year the Kansas Legislature approved the renovation plans and appropriated $1.5 million over a two-year period to help fund the project.

The total cost will be about $5.5 million, and the expected completion date is spring 1985.

The Department of Speech will be housed on the east end of the renovated building, and the Department of Computer Science will be on the west end. The basement will provide overflow book storage from Farrell Library.

FRED BRAMLAGE COLISEUM

Although construction isn't scheduled to begin until 1988, K-State's new Fred Bramlage Coliseum is currently one of the main concerns of both the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and the KSU Foundation.

The Coliseum Campaign, the largest fund-raising drive in the University's history, began in March 1983 with the goal of raising $6 million dollars from private sources toward the project's total cost of $16 million.

This goal has since been adjusted to $7 million. Students will match this $7 million with a special coliseum charge added to their fees since fall 1982.

The athletic department is supplying the remaining $2 million needed for the project, Dick Towers, athletic director, said.

Art Loub, executive vice president of the Foundation, the organization responsible for raising private funds for the coliseum project, expressed confidence that the $7 million goal will be surpassed before the drive's deadline of mid-April.

The campaign received a boost with a total contribution of $1.75 million from alumnus Fred Bramlage, a Junction City businessman. The Kansas Board of Regents approved the naming of the coliseum after Bramlage on March 16.

WILLARD HALL

Funds from the Legislature have been appropriated for the construction of a new facility for the chemistry and biochemistry departments, which are currently in Willard Hall.

The cost of the building is estimated at $10.3 million, and it will be attached to King Hall where a section of greenhouses are currently located. The greenhouses will be relocated near Throckmorton Hall.

The main improvement of the new facility over Willard will be increased safety in air-handling. David Cox, head of the Department of Biochemistry, said.

Kenneth Klabunde, head of the Department of Chemistry, said another advantage of the new facility will be an improved electrical power system.

— By The Staff

The renovated Nichols Hall, scheduled for completion in 1985, will house two departments and library storage.

Going beyond campus

K-State's influence is not limited to students on the Manhattan campus, but extends throughout the state and nation because of the work of many campus-based organizations, among them the Kansas Cooperative Extension Service and the K-State Alumni Association.

Taking the University to the people is one of the goals of extension, which is directed from the K-State campus.

"We want to do that as best as possible," said Hyde Jacobs, assistant state extension director and extension agriculture program director.

Established under the U.S. Department of Agriculture by the Smith-Lever Act of 1914, extension services provide research and scientific information to the public on such topics as home economics, agriculture, 4-H and community resource development subjects.

Extension was originally established to aid rural families. However, many urban communities are dependent on agriculture as their main source of economy, Jacobs said.

Five regional offices in Colby, Hutchinson, Manhattan, Chanute and Garden City help link the University to the people. In addition, each of the state's 105 counties has an extension office.

The offices are staffed by trained agents who disperse information to the public through workshops, publications, consultations and demonstrations.

Extension information provides many publications for these offices, including research information from the agricultural experiment stations.

County and multi-county meetings are the most common and effective way of distributing this information, Jacobs said.

The extension radio, television and film department airs four programs about extension work on KSAC radio from 12:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Scripts and programs also are produced for local radio and television stations. Films are made on a fee basis.

The service helps organizations promoting the economy and industry of Kansas, Jacobs said, such as livestock and crop producer associations. These groups often have educational objectives.

People of all ages are aided by the service. For high school youth and younger, 4-H is the most helpful of the service's work, Jacobs said. State 4-H enrollment is about 90,000.

For college students, extension offers Collegiate 4-H and services for the agriculture and home economic curricula.

Many people will be affected by extension as they continue into the professional world, Jacobs said, whether their career is in agriculture or if they are involved in community development.

Retired people may also benefit from extension services in such areas as estate planning and farm management, he said.

"I suspect many (K-State) alumni do use extension," Jacobs said. Many serve on county home economic, agriculture and 4-H boards.

"They're actively involved in directing and guidance, so they're helpful," Jacobs said. "That's what makes extension viable."

Graduates also help extend the reach of the University. K-State alumni chapters are located throughout the state and nation.

"One of our primary activities is communicating with the alumni chapters, which keep a link to the University and provide opportunities for alumni to meet," said Larry Weigel, director of the Alumni Association.

The association publishes the "K-Stater" magazine which all association members receive.

"The magazine is how we let our alumni know what's happening on campus," he said.

The cost for annual membership is $15 for single persons, $20 for a couple, $400 for a lifetime single membership and $500 for a lifetime joint membership.

"We also are very active in the area of student recruitment, primarily incoming freshmen," Weigel said.

The association participates in legislative relations as well.

Israeli tanks shell position held by Syria

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Israeli tanks shelled positions in Syrian-held Bekaa Valley Sunday for the first time in a year and Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan met with the Soviet ambassador and criticized the U.S. failure to secure an Israeli withdrawal.

The rightist Christian Voice of Lebanon radio said Israeli tanks took positions on hills just north of the village of Medoukha, about 30 miles southeast of Beirut, and shelled Syrian positions.

It also said there were heavy exchanges near the villages of Sultan Yacoub, Yanta and the western slopes of Mount Hermon whose summit is at the Syrian-Lebanese border, 40 miles southeast of the capital.

The Israeli military command said its artillery attacked and destroyed two guerrilla command posts in the Bekaa Valley that had been used to prepare attacks on Israeli troops. It said the shelling was a response to recent attacks that wounded eight Israeli soldiers.

No casualties were reported in shelling exchanges between the Lebanese army and Druse gunners in the mountains east of Beirut or in sporadic sniping along the "green line" dividing Christian east Beirut from the city's largely Moslem western sector.

Wazzan, caretaker prime minister expected to leave office once a new Cabinet is formed, met with Soviet Ambassador Alexandre Soldatov.

"We are turning a new page and we have to get benefit from all our friendship in the international and Arab world," Wazzan said. "Since the Israeli occupation, we contacted the United States, which has the most influence on Israel. Despite this, the United States itself announced its failure in its effort to secure any Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon."

He did not specify what U.S. announcement he referred to.

Shiite Moslem militia leader Nabih Berri also criticized the United States in remarks published in Beirut newspapers. He urged Lebanon's government to complain to the U.N. Security Council over Israeli actions in southern Lebanon and suggested it had failed to do so earlier for fear of a U.S. veto in the U.N. body.

In a magazine interview, Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk el-Sharaa said Lebanese leaders failed to reach agreement at their recent talks in Switzerland because of "continual Israeli and American interference behind the scenes. Syria is more zealous and sincere than any other non-Lebanese party in wanting Lebanese national accord to be achieved."

Exhibits, shows promote campus

Kansas Secretary of State Jack Brier comes out of a T-shirt given to him for his participation in open house.

By SUZANNE LARKIN
Staff Writer

With the glimmer of long-awaited sunlight and the bells in Anderson Hall ringing out "Stars and Stripes Forever," K-State's sixth annual All-University Open House began at noon Friday.

A parade, which began on Petticoat Lane, meandered through campus and paused in front of Anderson Hall to officially begin the 1984 "Rendezvous with KSU."

The K-State Marching Band, various college representatives and students gathered to commence celebrations while playing host to Kansas Secretary of State Jack Brier.

"If this were commencement, I would have a real worry about turning you loose on society," K-State President Duane Acker said, regarding the jovial actions of the students present.

"But deep down it is very apparent to me that there is a tremendous amount of creativity, intelligence and enthusiasm, and I know this will extend beyond commencement," Acker said. The pride of the University shows through during open house, he said.

"Open House is a wonderful event. It is a kind of opportunity that rarely comes to us to show each other and ourselves the pride that we have in the total University and in our individual discipline, while at the same time demonstrating that pride and quality of our work and experiences here to those that will visit us throughout the weekend," Acker said.

Brier commented on K-State's diversity.

"I can see that at K-State you can have fun and get one whale of an education, but this weekend we are here to celebrate, inform and encourage," he said.

In the second and final stop on the parade route in front of Seaton Hall, St. Patricia and St. Patrick were crowned by the College of Engineering.

Dana Ginn, senior in mechanical engineering, and Kevin Hill, senior in electrical engineering, were given the honors.

Ray Hightower, assistant to the dean of engineering, said K-State's first open house was a rather unorganized scene of amusement with competitive games and sports held in Sunset Park and followed by an evening picnic. This merriment went under the heading of a "Field Day," when all classes were cancelled and students just had fun.

This "Field Day" was organized by a group of engineering students and authorized in 1910.

In spring 1920 the committee in charge of "Farm and Home Week," (a type of open house in which agriculture and home economic students participated) suggested that the engineering school display its equipment for the "Farm and Home" visitors. This was called, "Engineers Day," the forerunner of the engineering open house.

The first exhibition had no monetary backing and only one manager. The major effort during this time was to increase student participation, Hightower said.

Funding for open house today consists of $2,500 from Acker and University Relations and $3,000 from the KSU Foundation through the New Student Development Fund. In addition, each college receives $125 through their individual councils and deans.

Today's emphasis is on encouraging other colleges to attend, Pat Bosco, assistant vice president of student affairs and chairman of the open house council, said.

Staff/Andy Nelson

The K-State open house parade offered Kip Hanzlicek, fifth-year senior in architectural engineering, a chance to expand upon the common misbelief that architectural engineers are not architects.

In 1929 the College of Engineering began its own open house separate from the College of Agriculture. During that year Steel Ring was organized, an engineering honorary whose main purpose is furthering the work of open house.

Soon after that a St. Patrick and Patricia were chosen to reign over the festivities of open house. St. Patrick is the patron saint of the College of Engineering.

"The objective of the All-University Open House is to inform prospective students and parents of unique opportunities at K-State; to inform the general public of the educational philosophy, programs, facilities and ongoing research here; and to facilitate career exploration for currently enrolled K-State students," Bosco said.

More than 2,500 students and faculty are involved in open house in one form or another, Bosco said, and rain or shine, people come to the event.

"The weather, which has tended to be anything but wonderful on open house weekend, really doesn't affect our turnout. We may lose some of the festive atmosphere when it rains, but families plan

'Highest national priority'

MIAs: A search for answers

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Moments after Col. Robert Anderson's F-4 jet fighter was hit Oct. 6, 1972, the Air Force pilot bailed out into the dense North Vietnamese jungle, where he landed safely and radioed for help.

Anderson, of Battle Creek, Mich., told would-be rescuers that he was in good shape and could not see any enemy troops. That was the last time Anderson was heard from. His fate is part of one of the questions that won't go away more than a decade after the end of America's longest and most divisive war: what happened to Anderson and 2,489 other men and women who are still unaccounted for in the Southeast Asian conflict?

In many ways, Anderson is typical of the Vietnam missing in action. He was an airman — 80 percent of the names on the list are aviators — and the U.S. government has no clues to his whereabouts since his last radio transmission.

Nearly half the people on the list are known to be dead, and most of the others are believed to have perished. Still, however, questions persist as the government tries to close the books on the last of the 2.6 million people who took part in the war.

President Reagan has pledged that an accounting is the "highest national priority," and the Defense Intelligence Agency says it checks out all reports of sightings of possible American prisoners.

Eleven years after the American ground combat role ended on March 29, 1973, one of the recurring questions is whether any American captives are still being held. In 1973, 591 American prisoners of war returned to a joyful homecoming.

The official Pentagon position is that "although we have thus far been unable to prove that Americans are still detained against their will, the information available to us precludes ruling out that possibility."

Privately, Pentagon officials say they think there may be a few Americans being held captive. No one has any hard evidence, and these officials say they are going only on hunches.

While the Vietnam list of 2,490 names may seem long, it's far smaller than the lists of missing in action from the two major preceding wars. There still are 8,800 men unaccounted for from the Korean War and 78,000 missing from World War II.

A number of possible explanations have been advanced in the cases of airmen whose planes crashed.

Many probably were unable to bail out and perished in wreckage which was never found. Others may have died on the ground but their bodies were never recovered. Some injured pilots may have wandered off into the jungle and died without their bodies being found, or they may have been captured.

From 1965 to 1973, fighters and bombers operated virtually around the clock from bases in Southeast Asia and from four aircraft carriers that operated in the South China Sea.

American pilots flew more than 1.8 million missions, and giant B-52 bombers accounted for an additional 117,794 flights. Helicopters, widely used in warfare for the first time, made 11.8 million sorties.

Many of those flights encountered fierce ground fire and more than 3,000 planes and 4,000 helicopters were shot down.

Although many of the pilots were recovered, hundreds of others were lost when their crippled planes crashed into the sea. They are considered unaccounted for, even though there are no hopes they have survived.

Hundreds of other planes and helicopters crashed in the dense jungles, where ground cover was so thick that it hid wreckage unless rescuers were literally standing on it. Even then, it was often difficult to spot.

The Pentagon says it knows for sure that about 1,200 of the missing were killed. In those instances, planes were seen to crash and burn

Faculty couple to resign positions

Robert Lynn, dean of the College of Business Administration, and Naomi Lynn, head of the Department of Political Science, announced Friday that they will resign from their posts at the University effective at the end of June.

Since Robert Lynn has been the business administration dean, enrollment in the college has risen from 888 to 2,562, and the number of college faculty members with doctorate degrees has tripled. Both the bachelor's and master's degree programs have been accredited during his tenure as dean.

Naomi Lynn has been instrumental in the development of the public administration program at K-State. She said she will miss the University.

"I resigned because I had a chance to do something different," Naomi Lynn said. "I'll be dean of the College of Public and Urban Affairs at Georgia State University in Atlanta. It's a challenging opportunity and the location is nice," she said.

Robert Lynn said he has enjoyed his experience working with students and faculty members at K-State.

"Since she has this opportunity, I'll be going down there with her. We don't want to be separated," he said. "I anticipate staying in academics. There appear to be a lot of opportunities down there in the area of business."

The couple will leave for Georgia July 1.

Father shoots, kills soul singer son

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Marvin Gaye, the smooth-voiced soul singer who topped the charts in the 1960s with such hits as "I Heard It Through the Grapevine," was shot and killed Sunday by his father after a fight, police said.

Gaye was at his parents' home on the eve of his 45th birthday when he became involved in the fight and was shot twice in the chest with a handgun. Police later questioned his father, Marvin Gaye Sr., 69, about the shooting, said Lt. Robert Martin.

"He became involved in a physical altercation with his father" around 12:30 p.m., Martin said. "Marvin Sr. subsequently armed himself with a handgun of unknown caliber and fired several rounds."

The elder Gaye was not immediately booked, Martin said, but was later taken to police headquarters. He added that police were contemplating seeking manslaughter or murder charges against the elder Gaye.

Gaye, whose career spanned nearly 30 years, was taken in critical condition to California Hospital. He was pronounced dead at 1:01 p.m., said hospital spokeswoman Michelle Barker.

The argument between father and son began Saturday night "over some insurance dealings," Martin said, adding the fight resumed Sunday as Gaye first ordered his father into the younger man's bedroom and then ordered him out again.

After the two men pushed at each other in the hallway, Martin said, the elder Gaye got a .38-caliber handgun and fired two shots into his son's chest, Martin said. Gaye's mother, Alberta, 71, who witnessed the shooting, ran to the next-door home of her son, Frank, who called police.

Gaye was first hired by Motown Records founder Berry Gordy as a drummer, then debuted as a vocalist in 1962 with "Stubborn Kind of Fellow."

He recorded the gospel-blues "Can I Get a Witness" in 1963, "How Sweet It Is (To Be Loved By You)" in 1964, and with Smokey Robinson recorded "I'll Be Doggone" and "Ain't That Peculiar" in 1965.

He won two Grammy awards in 1983 with his comeback hit, "Sexual Healing." He was nominated for a Grammy this year for "Midnight Love."

Gaye had a huge hit in 1973 with "Let's Get It On."

Anti-feminist leader to lecture

Phyllis Schlafly, leading figure in the anti-feminist movement, is to speak at 7 p.m. April 9 in Union Forum Hall.

Schlafly has addressed the topics of the Equal Rights Amendment, women's role in the family, sexual discrimination, abortion and national defense in previous lectures across the nation.

The talk is sponsored by the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee. Admission is free.

The committee has selected four panelists who will discuss various issues and address questions following Schlafly's speech. The panelists are John Exdell, professor of philosophy; Frank Saal, professor of psychology; Judy Davis, director of the Regional Crisis Center; and Dorothy Thompson, director of K-State Affirmative Action.

Schlafly has written nine books, is a syndicated columnist for Copley News Service and has spoken on women's issues and national defense to students on hundreds of college campuses.

She began a national drive against the Equal Rights Amendment in 1972 as founder of Stop ERA. In 1975 she expanded her anti-feminist movement by forming the Eagle Forum, a larger anti-feminist coalition, which has replaced Stop ERA.

Schlafly, mother of six, received a bachelor's degree from Washington University in St. Louis and a master's degree in political science from Radcliffe College. In 1978, at age 54, she earned her law degree.

Graduate to discuss research

Kai-Chung Leonard Yuen, graduate in biology, is to speak at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in Ackert 221 as part of the Division of Biology Seminar series.

His topic will be "The Mechanism(s) of in vitro and in vivo Polyoma Virus Assembly."

Yuen received his bachelor's degree in biology from the University of Wisconsin at Green Bay in 1978. After a year at North Dakota State University, he came to K-State for his graduate education.

He has been working with the polyoma virus — mouse cell system.

He has recently accepted a postdoctoral position in the laboratory of Bernard Moss at the National Institute of Health.

This seminar will constitute the public presentation of Yuen's doctoral research.

Professors to speak at conference

Two K-State faculty members are participating in a conference on "Teaching the Middle Ages" scheduled for Friday and Saturday at Emporia State University.

Winnifred Geissler, assistant of English, will present a paper on "Coherence in Camelot" from 10:15 to 11:45 a.m. Friday. George Keiser, professor of English, will chair a session on "Chaucer" from 10:15 to 11:45 a.m. Friday.

The conference, for teachers at the elementary, secondary and college levels, will feature speakers from across the United States and Canada. The conference is in Memorial Union, where the admission is free and the public is invited to attend. There is a charge for the luncheon and banquet.

The conference is sponsored by the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences with partial funding provided by the Kansas Committee for the Humanities and the Emporia State Endowment Association.

Jury finds local man not guilty of rape

A 21-year-old Manhattan man was found innocent Friday in Riley County District Court of charges connected with an October 1983 attempted rape.

Roderick Hanks was accused of attacking Carol Lipe and her roommate, Nancy Bell, junior in pre-professional business administration, on Oct. 16, 1983, in their apartment at 1016 Osage St. Charges of attempted rape, aggravated battery and aggravated burglary were brought against Hanks in connection with the incident.

The jury, comprised of nine women and three men, delivered the verdict at 5:45 p.m., after 2½ hours of deliberation.

Hanks' attorney, Charles D. Green, would not comment on the case Sunday. Riley County Attorney Colt Knutson could not be reached for comment.

USA Today begins area printing, distribution to expand market

By KATHY BARTELLI
Staff Writer

The Lawrence Journal World began printing USA Today, a relatively new national newspaper by the Gannett Co. Inc., Sunday in Lawrence.

The paper began publication in September 1982.

Dolph Simons Jr., publisher of the Journal World, said he was approached by Gannett executives almost a year ago about printing the paper. The contract was signed in June.

"They (Gannett) must have thought our location was good and the ability to transport was good," Simons said. "They have seen our paper and must have thought we did a good job of printing."

Edward Seaton, publisher of The Manhattan Mercury, said Gannett had "put out feelers" to see if the Mercury would be interested in printing the paper.

"There were only two papers seriously interested in printing it and they were in Lawrence and St. Joseph, (Mo.)" he said.

Seaton said he was not interested in printing the paper because he didn't believe the Mercury had the capacity to handle such an operation, and it would have detracted from the Mercury's primary concern.

"We were in the printing business in a very major way," he said. "It got to be a case of the tail wagging the dog. It diverted our attention from our basic business, which is the news business."

Seaton said to print USA Today, the Mercury would have had to make a multimillion dollar addition to the press.

"We would have had to put a major addition onto the building and doubled our press capacity," Seaton said. "It would have meant a substantial addition to the staff."

"I didn't think we had a very good chance to get it anyway because geographically the paper (Journal World) is closer to Kansas City," he said.

He said there were advantages to be gained by printing the paper.

"It's a very good paper and it's very good with color," Seaton said. "It will improve the color quality in Lawrence. The Journal World will have a lot more capacity than it had before."

The Journal World has doubled the size of its press and added an entirely new press crew, Simons said.

"They are all Journal World employees," Simons said. "We just have two crews, one for the Journal World and one for USA Today."

The paper will be printed Monday through Friday, but not on holidays. The paper is currently printed at 23 other sites.

Previously, the nearest locations the paper was printed in included Fort Collins, Colo.; St. Cloud, Minn.; Kankakee, Ill. and the Dallas area. The first press run in Lawrence was at 11 p.m. Sunday.

"The USA Today people here are pleased and enthused by the response to date," Simons said. "They are extremely pleased with the circulation overall, which is over one million, and it continues to grow."

of Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia have far more information than has been disclosed about what happened to the missing men.

The Pentagon scoffs at assertions by the Vietnamese that they have turned over all the information they have on the MIAs. Vietnam produces small amounts of information on a regular basis, U.S. officials note, particularly after American pressure is increased.

their schedules around open house at K-State. And people come from miles away, in terrible weather, but they still come," he said.

Each open house involves months of preparation and coordination from students and faculty on a strictly volunteer basis, Jane Miles, student coordinator of the event and junior in accounting, said.

"Planning for this open house began a year ago Saturday. There is a certain amount of work done each month," she said.

"It is a lot of work, but it is worth it when you see families getting involved and planning their children's futures. It is really nice to see hard work come together and be so successful," Miles said.

The people and departments involved in planning open house receive a certain amount of pride for their efforts, said Drew Sonntag, junior in architecture and design and junior class coordinator of the landscape architecture open house.

There is more to the University than people think there is, Matt Hinkin, junior in radio and television, said. "Open house just demonstrates this."

"I didn't even know that a lot of the organizations that I saw set up in the Union existed until I saw them, and I've been coming since I was in high school," he said.

Shawna Smith, a high school junior from Belleville, played in the Belleville High School jazz ensemble in the Union courtyard Saturday.

"I really enjoy coming up to the K-State open house and performing. It gives me the opportunity to see the college and learn more about it," she said.

Involvement in open house helps University students appreciate the purposes of the event and helps people understand various aspects of the University.

"I enjoy open house more now than when I was a senior in high school because I know more people and I am also involved with open house through the residence hall that I live in," Sharon Feltner, senior in fine arts, said.

Jo Galbraith and her son Danny, of Wichita, visited campus to view its facilities.

"My husband graduated from K-State, and we came up to show Danny the college," she said.

"I am thinking about majoring in business, and since my dad came to K-State, I thought I would look at the business college and the University in general. The open house here is really a good way to acquaint a potential student with the University. It makes it easier for high school students to learn about K-State. The people at K-State seem like my kind of people," Danny said.

The atmosphere of the 1984 Rendezvous with KSU was one of fun, people and excitement.

"This year's open house was very successful, with increased participation each year. I just get a great feeling of joy being involved with open house. There is nothing I enjoy more than selling K-State," Bosco said.

Lebanon policy a Reagan failure

The Marines are finally out of Lebanon.

The Associated Press reported that President Reagan announced Friday that the multinational peacekeeping force "is no longer a necessary or appropriate means" of allowing the United States to achieve its political goals in Lebanon. The Marines, who have been on U.S. ships off the Lebanese coast since February, will be redeployed elsewhere.

Reagan made this report to Congress because of an October 1983 resolution which authorized the Marines' stay in Lebanon for 18 months.

The Lebanon tour was costly. A total of 265 military personnel died, including the 241 who perished as a result of the suicide bombing of the Marine headquarters at the Beirut International Airport. Reagan said the venture cost approximately $60 million in this fiscal year.

The multinational peacekeeping force included the United States, France and Italy. The Italians left earlier this year; the French are now making their exit. While all three nations are either out of Lebanon or in the process of leaving the country, the differences in attitude of the Lebanese people toward the process was evident.

The Italian and French troops were treated like heroes. They were paraded out of Lebanon. The Italians were hugged and kissed by the Lebanese. Both nations' troops left in daylight, in pride.

The Americans, on the other hand, left quietly. No daylight parades, no hugs. The Marines left their underground tunnels at the airport, where they were often caught between cross fire between rival Lebanese factions.

BRIAN LA RUE
Collegian Columnist

It was ironic that when the Marines left, the rival factions were fighting over which group would get the Marines' base. The Marines were situated in an area between mountains and the sea. They were in the perfect area to be sitting ducks for sniper fire and mortar rounds.

The American government called the troops "peacekeepers," yet the government was not allowing the Marines to keep the peace. They were forced to stay at the airport, defending a hole they couldn't defend without being allowed to leave the airport.

The government tried to help the Marines. The USS New Jersey sent retaliatory fire into the hills, but it didn't stop the fighting — it just destroyed the countryside.

The Americans sent bombers into Lebanon to knock out Syrian strongholds. Even this move failed. The Syrians shot down one plane, killing the pilot and holding the navigator as a "prisoner of war."

The aviator, Lt. Robert Goodman, was returned after the Rev. Jesse Jackson traveled to Damascus to talk to Syrian President Assad. Jackson's trip and Goodman's release served as further embarassment for the Reagan administration.

American support of the Marines' presence in Lebanon was lukewarm before Oct. 23, 1983. That Sunday morning will be remembered as the "Beirut Massacre." A truck filled with explosives entered the Marine compound and exploded in front of the Marine headquarters. Many of the 241 Marines killed died in their sleep.

After the incident, support for keeping the Marines in Lebanon plummeted. Some believed the Marines were a pawn in a complicated power struggle involving Lebanese President Amin Gemayel. Some thought America had no business involving itself in another country's problems. Some were against keeping the Marines cooped up at the airport like sitting ducks.

It was inevitable the Marines would have to pull out of Lebanon. The withdrawal, which occurred in February, took the Marines out of Lebanon and onto ships offshore. Friday's announcement freed the Marines from the myth that they could still play an important role in Lebanon.

Reagan's foreign policy has been dealt another blow. It can now add the Lebanon fiasco to its list of failures. It couldn't "solve" the conflict in Lebanon when the Israelis were threatening to make Beirut a mass PLO cemetery. It couldn't help Israel and the Arab nations reach an agreement on the future of the Palestinians. It failed to have Israel and Egypt continue the Camp David peace agreements.

Since Reagan is up for re-election this year, there will probably be no more failures this year. One must wonder what the next failure will be and when and where it will occur.

Students owe learning to faculty

All-University Open House exhibits Friday and Saturday showcased student learning in the many specific fields of study at K-State. What wasn't apparent were the "silent heroes" — K-State faculty.

Often the accomplishments and qualifications of the faculty are overlooked. Behind the display tables in the Union for various colleges were students, but behind every student were several faculty members.

K-State President Duane Acker said in an interview last week that 100 faculty in one college hold degrees from 120 different colleges and universities in the United States and abroad. This demonstrates the deep regard K-State faculty has for education.

Not only do the faculty meet University standards, but they often exceed them. This is shown by the prestigious awards and honors bestowed on faculty members and the many research grants and fellowships received by them each year.

It is apparent that most faculty enjoy their work. Many of them have the opportunity to work for related industries for more money than they receive as a University faculty member, but choose to teach instead.

This depth of and enthusiasm for education is passed on to students, who themselves become better qualified to serve society. Behind student quality is the quality of our faculty — an important asset in maintaining quality education at K-State.

David Bevins, for the editorial board

License tag change unnecessary

When the Department of Revenue recently decided to change the design of the state's automobile license tags, it created a legislative controversy.

The department proposed eliminating the traditional tag with the two-letter county designation, single initial and series of numbers in favor of a "SAM 123" design. These tags would be permanent, with three letters and three numbers, a reflector sticker at the bottom bearing the county name and another sticker for each year of valid tag use.

But last week rural legislators objected. Rep. Dale Sprague, R-McPherson, changed the measure to reinstate the two-letter county designation between the letters and numbers. Sprague said the abbreviations are especially useful in rural counties, allowing residents to determine when people from out of the county are driving around.

And, of course, recognizing the letters serves as a game for children during lengthy road trips, legislators said.

Even among recent legislative wrangling about the drinking age and pari-mutuel betting, the House has come through a winner on this measure. The new tag system is supposed to save about $70,000 annually, but removing the county designations is unnecessary. Kansas license tags need not lose the unique county abbreviations.

Allocations aren't spending spree

Few things in life are more fun than spending money, and few things are more difficult to face than bills, but Student Senate gets to do both during April.

It's tentative allocation time — time to take all the money we College Joe's have put into the Student Governing Association kitty and divvy it up among all the student groups that ask for some of it.

For next year, the kitty is running about $760,000. Naturally, requests from all the student groups for money for next year total about $780,000. So the fun of spending all this money is tempered with the expectation of a pretty big bill — and we can't spend more money than we have.

Strangely enough, less than 20 percent of the money senate spends each year goes to groups which present their budgets from a zero base — from the ground up. More than 80 percent of our student dollars goes to groups which are called "line items." Being a line-item means a group receives so many dollars per student each year, so its budget fluctuates as enrollment goes up or down.

(The phrase "line item" has something to do with the fact that budget figures are presented as individual lines for each group, but beyond that, I have no idea where that tag came from. I guess it beats calling these things "frozbots" or something.)

BRIAN O'NEILL
Student Senator

For instance, the Union doesn't get X amount of dollars each year per se; instead, it receives X dollars per student each year. Lately it has been getting $24 per year for each full-time student and $12 per year for each part-time student. And you thought you got to use the Union free!

The other line items are Student Publications Inc., the corporation that publishes the Collegian, along with the Royal Purple yearbook and the Campus Directory; Recreational Services, managers of the L.P. Washburn Recreation Complex and intramural sports; Associated Students of Kansas, our lobbying group in Topeka; the college councils; and Fine Arts Council. Of the $50.50 you pay each year for student activities, about $41.92 goes just to these groups.

Because they're line items, these groups don't have to build their budgets from the ground up each year. Instead, they are "reviewed" every so often. But their budgets are so big that senate just doesn't have the time or people to check up on these groups very well. So most of the budget-cutting senate does to line up requests with revenues comes from the non-line-item groups — and remember, they take up only about 17 percent of the total allocation.

Given the long-term enrollment outlook, can this continue? I don't think so — it seems to me that at some time soon senate will have to look at changing the process so that all student dollars are reviewed in the same way.

Meanwhile, if you want to catch a senator, try the Union Big Eight Room during most of April. We'll be camped out there, spending your money, balancing the biggest budget most of us will have to deal with in our lifetimes.

Letters

Review harms original nooner objectives

Editor, Re: "Ill-suited voice masks fine guitar music," in the March 28 Collegian:

This letter is in response to the "ill-suited" review of Doug Sharpe's nooner performance on March 27.

Being a nooner coordinator, I schedule performances for the ongoing nooner series. Our flier advertising applications states, "anyone with any kind of talent" may apply. Nooners are not intended to be a professional showing of talent but are intended to provide a variety of entertainment by students, for students.

Why was the nooner reviewed by a staff writer when the services of a Collegian reviewer are usually provided? The reviewer should have taken an objective view like that of past performance reviews. The initial idea of reviewing nooners is to inform the campus what was available to them and to encourage students with talent to apply to "do a nooner." With such subjective, one-sided techniques of reviewing aimed at unnecessary humiliation of the performer, others would not like to be put in the same position of being completely slammed! This reviewer obviously has never shown his "talents" on a stage in front of an audience or in a newspaper on review writing!

'Employee' status unjust

Editor, Re: "Council to discuss changes in campus parking manual," in the March 28 Collegian:

I would like to congratulate all the faculty at K-State on their promotion to the rank of employee. Such devotion to duty is commendable. Perhaps Senate Bill 833 will also promote the entire faculty to the rank of slave.

Practicality controls grades

Editor, Re: Lauri Diehl's editorial, "Midterm proposal ineffective," in the March 27 Collegian:

Your editorial on midterm grades overlooks a practical point. In some courses, the request for midterm grades comes before there is anything to report. The students attend a lecture class with no roll taken and no written work until later. Which is more honest and effective: to report no grade or to report a blanket C? I choose not to report. Is perhaps the real problem that students are afraid?

Performers display versatility in production of Dance '84

By CONNIE WOODARD
Staff Writer

Dance '84 showcased the versatility of K-State dancers Friday and Saturday as participants switched techniques from jazz to classical ballet through the 11 pieces presented in McCain Auditorium.

The dance concert was sponsored by the dance section of the Department of Physical Education, Dance and Leisure Studies.

Review

Keith Banks, senior in physical therapy, was a prime example of the range of the dancers. He excited the audience in two duets; modern and ballet, and in the jazz piece "TZ."

Aptly named, "Family" opened the program with music by The Pointer Sisters. Thirteen dancers, framed in a family portrait, mimed words of a song describing the advantages of steamheat over noisy radiator pipes. Low lighting created many shadows and made the dancers hard to see. After a slow start, the tempo picked up and the smooth jazz technique of the dancers was seen. Dancers costumed in black, white and red played to the audience in a piece they obviously felt comfortable performing. The steam effects were excellent.

Two choirs and 19 dancers joined in a religious dance "Leitourgia." The choreography complimented the music about joy, praise, suffering and peace. It was refreshing to hear junior high boys of the Manhattan Middle School Choir, who were not afraid to let their voices be heard.

"Tutu Much" held the audience in stitches and displayed some of the antics existing in competitive ballet corps. The spoof showed dancers upstaging and tripping each other in gaudy costumes that consisted of yards of netting.

"Galvanic," an abstract contemporary ballet, was the first piece that highlighted the talents of Banks. He and Beth Freshnock, senior in accounting, wore red and black unitards and preyed upon each other like a male and female spider.

They twisted and curled into sustained and stretching shapes, then sharply snapped into a difficult lift; attacking the movement as if attacking each other. The ballet illustrated how a male dancer can be used for much more than a support for the female.

Linda Westby, instructor of dance, performed a classical ballet solo, "In Our Garden," to music by Schumann. This whimsical piece displayed precision footwork while she maintained flitty and carefree arm movements. She presented images of a young girl dancing for joy, using movements that a girl imagines inside herself when she is happy and wants to dance but doesn't know how.

A finely polished jazz piece, "TZ," earned applause three times before the piece was over. Choreography, lighting, special effects and costumes came together to make an exciting experience. With lacquered hair and shiny and glittery faces, the six dancers displayed a quality equal to that seen on the television show "Fame" this season. Taking their bows, the dancers broke into wide grins knowing their performance was a job well done.

"Plaisir" was the first dance in the concert that reminded the audience they were viewing a student production. It was a style piece set to baroque music that stretched the technique level of the dancers involved. Relaxing to watch, it gave the viewer a glimpse of what court dance might have looked like had it been performed by women.

"Prelude," choreographed by Susan Warden, assistant professor of dance, was correctly billed as a work in progress. The dimly lit stage was bordered by what appeared to be piles of dirty laundry. The music was reminiscent of a soundtrack for impending doom, like whistling bombs dropping onto the auditorium. Stiff linear movements contrasted with arms that would suddenly go limp. Three dancers constantly encircled their arms around the other three. What could have been protection became entrapment.

"Under the Moon," a modern piece choreographed by Banks, was an intimate lovers' duet. Banks and his partner Jean Hwang, sophomore in pre-medicine, conveyed that movement can replace words when they do not suffice in expressing what a heart feels. "Like the wings of a bird, my heart soaring way up high," were words sung that closely described the images seen.

"Danube," the final piece in the program, choreographed by Luke Kahlich, assistant professor of dance, closed the program as a grand finale. The audience exclaimed at the ingenuity of the stylish and garish costumes created and constructed by Tim Blacker, senior in theater. The dance depicted one man's view of women. Westby's delicately coy and catty movements conveyed humor and satire. The technique levels of Westby and Linda Johnson, senior in theater, were reinforced by partners Robert Bailey, junior in pre-professional business administration, and Scott Smith, guest artist. While the four were featured in the dance, they did not monopolize, but were well integrated into the whole.

Ads show different strategies

By SUZANNE LARKIN
Staff Writer

The alleged "war" which has been taking place between McDonald's and Burger King isn't a war as much as it is a difference in advertising strategies between these two fast-food giants.

Signs of the apparent battle include the flame broiling advertisements as well as the fact that in January, both lowered the price of their hamburgers to 39 cents.

"There is no war between Burger King and McDonald's, but if there were one, it would be one-sided. We just both have a different strategy in regard to the way we advertise our hamburgers," Jim Garrett, owner of the Manhattan McDonald's, said.

Lou Wagner, owner of the Manhattan Burger King, also said there was no war between the two fast-food establishments.

"I don't know about any 'war' between McDonald's and Burger King, at least there is no 'war' here in Manhattan," he said.

Stephanie Skurdy, director of media relations for the McDonald's Corp., said that McDonald's would be diverting its energies if it responded to Burger King's advertising campaigns, emphasizing the appearance of their (Burger King's) hamburgers.

"Everyone knows about the hamburger wars on television, the competition between the fast-food hamburger industry, but at McDonald's we don't play on comparative advertising. We don't put ourselves up against our competitors — we don't need to," said Steve LeRoy, manager of media relations for McDonald's at the corporate headquarters in Oak Brook, Ill.

However, critics have said that the chain's high-quality image is slipping. Its advertising is confused and its rapport with the customer is out of touch, said Michael Culp, a restaurant analyst at Prudential-Bache Securities Inc. in Kansas City, Mo., in a January 1984 article in Businessweek magazine.

With more fast-food chains popping up in many areas (and with a more stable and sound economy) people are now willing to spend more money for better food, said Roger Lipton of Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co. in the same article.

"People used to be content with a clean place, reliable quality, and courteous service, but that's not enough these days. People are willing to pay more to get more," Lipton said.

But McDonald's is not worried about the growth of new fast-food chains. The numbers of customers frequenting McDonald's is consistent, Leroy said, and McDonald's operations will stay the same.

"McDonald's has its own way of promoting itself and we are going to continue to do so just as we have done for years. Obviously it works because we serve over 17 million people a day. We have never had a down quarter, and for the first nine months of 1983, sales rose 10 percent to $6.4 billion, while net income spurred 13 percent to $263 million," LeRoy said.

"The people who always come to McDonald's are still coming, even though more chains are evident. Our competitors are critical of the amount of stores we have in operation and the growth of our new stores each year. They try to find fault with our chain and our advertising strategy," he said.

"With the addition of new chains, the fast-food industry becomes more competitive, which is good for the industry," Leroy said.

Each fast-food chain has its own strategy, and McDonald's is no exception and will make no changes in their future format, Leroy said.

"Our strategy is to play on the fact that you have to wait longer at McDonald's to get a special order than you do at Burger King. Our 'flame' broiling is also a plus in our advertising," Wagner said.

"Through our media strategy, we have successfully pointed out the major differences between ourself and McDonald's. McDonald's is a terrific company, they concentrate on doing what they do well, but they are very slow in looking for new products — we're not," he said.

So the golden arches are still standing. A little shaken by the surge of new competitors maybe, competitors that say McDonald's is a thing of the past. Yet McDonald's is predominantly ahead of its competitors and according to LeRoy, "planning to stay that way."

Two killed in weekend accidents

Two people were killed in weekend accidents on state roads, including a 22-year-old Beloit man who died early Sunday in a one-car accident four miles east of his hometown in north-central Kansas, authorities said.

Kenneth H. Krier was killed when a car driven by his brother, Thomas J. Krier, 26, of Beloit ran off U.S. 24 and rolled several times, the Kansas Highway Patrol reported.

Both men were thrown from the vehicle, a patrol spokesman said. Thomas Krier was listed in stable condition Sunday at Mitchell County Hospital in Beloit.

A Kansas City, Kan., woman was killed in a one-car accident in her hometown early Saturday, police said.

Carlene Gail Carpenter was alone in her car when it went out of control, skidded off a highway and traveled 90 feet down an embankment before overturning, police said.

Famed psychiatrist leaves hospital

TOPEKA — Dr. Karl Menninger, a psychiatrist and author who helped establish the famed Menninger Foundation, has been released from a Topeka hospital where he had been undergoing treatment for bronchial pneumonia.

Menninger, 90, was admitted to Colmery-O'Neill Veterans Administration Medical Center Tuesday after complaining of trouble breathing. He was released Saturday morning, according to hospital spokeswoman Lori Wade.

Menninger's daughter, Rosemary, said he had been battling the flu for a week before he was hospitalized.

In 1976 Menninger underwent surgery at the Mayo Clinic for removal of a brain tumor. Although a portion of his face was left paralyzed and his speech was slurred, he surprised associates by making a nearly complete recovery.

Menninger, who established the foundation with his father in 1925 to treat and study psychiatric disorders, has devoted much of his later years to the study of criminals and prisons. His best-known book, "The Crime of Punishment," was published in 1968.

Hope gives comic lecture at SMU

DALLAS — Southern Methodist University students who signed up to learn comedy from Bob Hope got plenty of examples in his first lesson.

The 81-year-old comedian told the students in his "What Makes Us Laugh" seminar that SMU had been trying for a long time to get him to teach a course, "but I thought I'd wait a little while — until I had more experience."

Hope took the stage of SMU's Bob Hope Theater last week before students enrolled in the course and about 300 people who bought tickets.

"I was going to open with a prayer, but I was afraid Congress might hear about it," Hope said.

He told the students that Ronald Reagan used to be a liberal Democrat. "That's almost like Lawrence Welk playing punk rock."

The students asked if he had any advice for young comics.

"I try to eliminate all young comics," Hope said.

Chileans renew protest against regime

By The Associated Press

SANTIAGO, Chile — A resurgence of mass protest has locked Gen. Augusto Pinochet and his foes into what many Chileans fear will be a long, violent struggle over the country's future.

Nearly a year after the first widespread demonstrations against him, Pinochet remains one of the few entrenched strongmen in Latin America and sounds as determined as ever to stay in power.

A mixture of military force and concessions has failed to weaken the labor and political movement seeking to drive the 68-year-old army commander from the presidency and restore democratic rule to the 11 million people of Chile, the long, narrow country along South America's Pacific coast.

These Marxist and centrist forces mobilized popular discontent over Chile's severe economic crisis to disrupt life in major cities last Tuesday during the first "Day of National Protest" in five months.

Their effectiveness in diminishing public transport, school attendance and commerce has encouraged talk of an attempted general strike as the next step in trying to convince the armed forces that Pinochet cannot govern the country.

But deep ideological divisions — aggravated after the 1970 election of Marxist President Salvador Allende and still unhealed — have kept the opposition from devising a widely accepted alternative to the authoritarian constitution approved by voters in 1980 and extended to 1989 by Pinochet's mandate.

Allende died Sept. 11, 1973, the day Pinochet seized power in a military coup.

A small guerrilla force has shadowed the largely peaceful protest movement with frequent sabotage of rail and power lines, blacking out Chile's 1,000-mile long central valley three times since mid-December. But this has heightened middle- and upper-class apprehensions about a quick return to civilian rule and has strengthened Pinochet's hard line.

In last week's nationwide demonstrations, five Chileans were shot to death. The protests were only partially contained by army troops and riot police trying to enforce overnight curfews in the three largest cities. Three other people died in subsequent guerrilla attacks, including the bombing of a busload of riot policemen in downtown Santiago.

"I am afraid this is going to be a tough year, with lots of repression," said the Rev. Ignacio Gutierrez, vicar of the Roman Catholic Church's human rights agency, Solidarity.

Last year, 62 people were killed in the series of one-day monthly protests launched in May. In August, Pinochet moved from repression to political concessions, trying to win over the moderate opposition by promising a congress to be elected in 1986 or 1987.

But the talks with the Democratic Alliance of five non-Communist parties broke down.

The liberalization scheme appeared to collapse a week ago when the regime reimposed a state of emergency that had been lifted in August. Fifteen protest organizers were arrested and ordered without trial to spend 90 days in remote towns in the Atacama Desert.

The Christian Democrats, who governed Chile from 1964 to 1970 and are the largest party today, are in a dilemma.

They worry that the growing polarization will strengthen the well-organized Communist Party. Yet they feel pressure to harden their own stance.

"With Pinochet there can be no transition to democracy, no possible dialogue," Gabriel Valdes, the Christian Democratic Party president, said in an interview. "Morally and politically, there is no way we can surrender to his regime."

Pinochet's reluctance to share power with a congress has also alienated long-time conservative supporters.

Manuel Antonio Garreton, a political scientist of the opposition Socialist Bloc, said, "The regime may be unpopular but it is not weak."

He and most other analysts agree that Pinochet commands unswerving loyalty where it matters most — in the 53,000-man army.

Candidates prepare for New York primary

By The Associated Press

In the waning days before the crucial New York primary, Walter F. Mondale won the endorsement Sunday of the New York Daily News, Gary Hart made pasta during a visit to an Italian neighborhood and the Rev. Jesse Jackson implored his Democratic presidential opponents not to ignore him.

During a locally televised debate that highlighted the charges and countercharges between Hart and Mondale, Jackson said: "They don't have any right to go back on this again and ignore me. The issue to me is not the negatives. It's the attempt to neglect my presence. The issues I raise and the constituency I represent will not go away."

Hart called the sparring between himself and Mondale "penny ante," but the former vice president said the exchanges have not been "petty."

Jackson called Reagan "the master of deceit," while Mondale called the administration "one of the tawdriest in modern history." Hart described it as "one of the most marginally ethical in our lifetime."

Delegate-rich New York will send the second-largest bloc to the Democratic National Convention.

Carlin explains Glenn's failed bid for presidency

By MIKE TURNER
Government Editor

The John Glenn presidential campaign failed because of flaws within the candidate, poor campaign organization and general bad luck, said Gov. John Carlin.

Carlin, who said he has no regrets over his early support of Glenn's bid for the Democratic presidential nomination, spoke Saturday in the Union Catskeller in conjunction with All-University Open House.

In a talk titled "Election '84," Carlin said Glenn was "very qualified" to be president, but was not the ideal candidate from a political perspective. Glenn did not like a lot of physical contact, participation in calling people or asking for help, Carlin said.

"He proved conclusively that you've got to be willing to ask," he said.

Glenn's campaign organization was never firmly established, he said. Any national campaign is usually established over many years.

"Being successful the first time out is not real easy," Carlin said. President Ronald Reagan kept refining his system, and Mondale's political machine has been developing for many years, he said.

"In politics, anybody who has been successful has been, to a certain extent, in the right place at the right time," he said. Glenn never got any of those breaks.

Carlin said it was expected that the Glenn campaign would be ready for the scrutiny of national exposure. When that expectation was not met, people expected him to fail. That expectation of failure then contributed much to Glenn's eventual decision to withdraw from the race, he said.

But Glenn's campaign was not a total failure, Carlin said. Glenn showed there are some liabilities which need to be looked at in the Mondale campaign. Gary Hart took advantage of the message Glenn was able to get across.

Hart, demonstrating freshness and newness, took advantage of the situation and started his bandwagon. Now it appears there is a two-way race for the Democratic nomination, he said, adding that it appears Jackson sometimes acts as a mediator between Mondale and Hart in debates.

Some view the division between Democratic support to be disastrous, Carlin said, because it divides party unity in the attempt to unseat Reagan.

But he said he is from "the other school of thought." He said he thinks the Democratic convention will be more interesting and people will be more aware of the issues in their quest to find the right nominee.

Carlin attributed Mondale's caucus win in Kansas to organized labor. He said Hart would do better than Mondale in a general election because Mondale has an image of liberalism which is tied to the Carter years.

"I question Mondale's ability to get elected," he said. But if Mondale is elected, that will show he overcame his tie to the Carter administration and that he was able to rise to the occasion."

Kelly Miller, senior in finance, and Krista Lindgren, junior in accounting, listen to Gov. Carlin's views while showing their support for President Reagan's re-election bid.

Carlin said he is not currently backing any one of the three remaining Democratic presidential hopefuls. He said he is more concerned with bringing support together after the Democratic convention.

"I support Mr. Uncommitted," he said. "I can best provide help and leadership by staying in position to bring people together to oppose as efficiently as possible the incumbent president."

Tax breaks may affect college aid

By The College Press Service

WASHINGTON — Most programs which give parents tax breaks for paying college costs tend to help families that would send their children to college anyway and exclude families who need the most help in financing education, the College Board has found in a study of education tax exemptions.

Moreover, President Reagan's proposals to broaden some tax exemptions for college payments could cut into funding for the direct student aid programs helping the neediest students the most, Lawrence Gladieux, director of the board's Washington office, said.

The board estimates about 65 percent of the families that benefit from the federal tax laws aimed at helping them pay for college have incomes above the national median.

The incentives now include exempting scholarship and grant money from taxes, letting parents take deductions for their college-attending children, subtracting amounts of college loans from taxable income and other accounting measures.

In February, Reagan again proposed allowing parents to deduct part of what they pay in tuition from what they owe in taxes and letting people establish special education savings accounts that would generate tax-free interest.

"We wanted to raise a caution about adopting policies that sound good — such as reinforcing family saving for a college fund — but which are very expensive," Gladieux said.

"If the nation wants to give priority to encouraging youngsters from less-advantaged families to attend college, current and proposed tax breaks do not appear to meet that goal as well as conventional student aid based on need," he said.

Bernardo Mongil and Kurt Wetzel, sophomores in pre-veterinary medicine, wash Wetzel's horse Friday afternoon in preparation for the LAR.

Little

American Royal

I stood looking at a poster on a bulletin board in Weber Hall. "Sign up to participate in the Little American Royal," it read.

As a four-year agriculture student, I had heard about the LAR, but I failed to take advantage of the opportunity to participate. This year was going to be an exception.

Before I actually committed myself, I decided to find out more about the show. The LAR, I was told, began in 1924 as an exhibition and parade of prize-winning livestock. Four years later, it was changed to a fitting and showing contest to involve students.

If I signed up to show, I was promised I would learn more about the animal science industry. A University animal would be supplied for me to show, and I would be given all the help I needed in learning the art of showing the species of my choice.

That sounded easy enough, so I signed up not only myself but also my roommate because the LAR isn't just for ag majors. The contest was open to every K-State student, so why not enter a micro-biology major, I thought.

My roommate was "easily" convinced in the 56th annual LAR sponsored by the Block and Bridle and Dairy Science clubs. We hurried to the table where the sign-up sheets were posted, paid our entry fees and selected the species we wanted to show.

"Show a Hereford heifer if you want to show cattle. They are small and have a gentle disposition," we were informed.

Two days later we expectantly drove to the purebred beef barns to meet our heifers. The students who were supposed to help us through this ordeal pointed to two large feed lots containing mud about a foot deep and said we would find our heifers out there.

Our names had been put in a hat and drawn out to determine which animal we would show. I received number 326, and my roommate was given 322.

The 250 participants in the LAR showing sheep, swine, dairy, beef and horses were all going to find their animals at the same time. I decided to visit all these facilities to see what others were going through.

I was relieved to find that everyone was having the same experiences my roommate and I were encountering. We waded through a foot of wet soupy mud, which wasn't all mud I'm sure, chased our animals up and down a pen and finally got them cornered so we could put a halter on them.

This is where the learning about the livestock industry first-hand came into play. I learned these nice-dispositioned hereford heifers could throw hooves at the speed of light and had absolutely no qualms about flattening me face first in the "dirt." So much for "small and the nice disposition" ploy used to convince me to sign up.

I wanted to discover what the people in charge were doing to make sure there really would be a LAR to show in if I ever convinced my heifer she would like to cooperate and participate in the contest with me.

I found there were 16 committees in charge of the contest. They had been working all year on the LAR plans, so I decided that a month of trying to tame a heifer wasn't too bad. The committee worked with a budget with money from both sponsoring clubs and money made from the previous LAR.

With all the hard work going into the preparations, I decided there was definitely going to be a well-planned organized show with or without No. 326 and I.

Both No. 326 and No. 322 had names when we began this endeavor, but I can't remember what they were because they were called so many other names by the people who were helping us "break" our heifers.

Breaking our heifers resulted in my roommate on crutches and a beef barn employee with a broken hand. Obviously, the heifers were a little more hard-headed than we thought. This was the end of the showing career of my micro-biology major roommate.

But I continued on and with a lot of help from people who have shown cattle before, No. 326 became tame and even easy to lead.

The other contestants showing other species were encountering the same phenomenon. The longer they worked with their animals, the tamer and easier they were to handle. All the long hours after class and on weekends were starting to show results.

The next step in the preparation for the show was clipping and fitting the animals. I was handed a set of clippers and shown how and where to trim the hair. I was given a list of show supplies to buy, which included items like spray adhesive and shaving cream. I also was told where to put them and how to apply them on the animal on the morning of the show.

That morning started at 4:30 a.m. for me and other contestants involved in all areas of the show. I bathed my animal just as everyone else did, fitted it as everyone else did and attempted to lead it to Weber Arena as everyone else did.

That is the exact point where my day stopped being like everyone else's. The nice-dispositioned heifer decided to have a foot race with me to Weber. She was just starting to win, and I was beginning to wonder if you call 911 to report a missing heifer in Manhattan when my father miraculously appeared and saved the day.

I could see everyone else was ready to show. The arena was complete with five showing rings for each species so everyone could show at the same time. The stands were full of supportive parents and friends like those who were there to watch me. Various agriculture queens were in the arena to help pass out ribbons. The student masters of ceremonies were all in place, and the show began.

When it came time for my class, the students in charge of lining up the classes couldn't find me because I was outside on Weber lawn observing the grass at a microscopic range after being knocked face first to the ground. Once again, Dad helped me up, caught my heifer (which got away) and shoved me into the arena.

After I finished showing, the judge walked up to me and offered me some friendly advice for the next time I show.

"Excuse me, Miss, but you have mud and grass all over your clothes, your heifer's hair coat has all fallen down and her tail is a disaster. You really should be more careful," he said and left shaking his head and chuckling.

I watched the ease with which the winners showed. I was impressed with the knowledge of the various showmen and enjoyed watching the reaction of joy the winners expressed.

When I left the arena, I thought my day was over. All I had to do was to take my entry back to the barns and put her away.

Two hours later, after a trip through all the feed lots at the research unit and a quick trip by the College of Veterinary Medicine, I finally cornered my heifer in a large feed lot. All that was left was to take the show halter off her.

She dodged me, tried to run over my father and almost knocked me in the mud. Once again my father came through. He pulled me up out of the muck just in time and pulled the halter off. With that task completed, my learning experience with the LAR was over.

Animals are led down a road on the way back to their pens following the LAR.

Asbestos proposal outlines new limits

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Occupational Safety and Health Administration, trying for 13 years to cut worker exposure to unhealthy asbestos, is about to propose new and sharply lowered limits, sources said.

"It's down to a matter of a sentence or two" before the proposal is accepted by the Office of Management and Budget and sent to printers by OSHA, said one well-placed source involved in developing the government's new workplace asbestos protection standard.

He and other officials said they could not comment publicly until after the proposal appears in the Federal Register, a daily government publication, probably sometime this week.

Several sources said the proposed new limit might be as low as two-tenths of a fiber per cubic centimeter of air, against the current limit of two fibers per cubic centimeter. A cubic centimeter is about the size of a small sugar cube.

OSHA Administrator Thorne Auchter, whose resignation took effect last Friday, excused himself from the final development of the standard because he is becoming president of B.B. Andersen Co. Inc., a Kansas construction firm, another source said.

But Auchter, who has been harshly criticized over three years by labor groups as too pro-business in handling job safety issues, was at the center of the government effort to produce a new and tighter regulation, sources said.

Thousands of workers who worked in shipbuilding during World War II, for example, have brought suits against Johns-Manville Inc., saying they were irreparably harmed by exposure to airborne asbestos fibers.

On Nov. 2, OSHA resorted to the seldom-used regulatory tactic and placed emergency temporary standard on exposure of some 375,000 workers to asbestos, a known cause of lung ailments, perhaps cancer. It immediately lowered the legal asbestos exposure level in a workday from two fibers per cubic centimeter of air to one-half.

OSHA estimated that within six months, the emergency standard might have saved the lives of 80 asbestos-exposed workers. But the standard was challenged by the Asbestos Information Association, an industry group, and overturned by a federal appeals court.

The court agreed that while asbestos "doubtless may present a grave danger to workers," OSHA failed to demonstrate sufficient cause to issue the standard. It noted that OSHA circumvented normal procedures requiring it to seek public comment and produce more documentation.

The asbestos industry is believed prepared to support a one-half fiber exposure limitation as long as OSHA goes through normal rule-making procedures and seeks comment from all interested groups.

Unions for workers in the asbestos industry want to get the exposure limit reduced to one-tenth of a fiber per cubic centimeter of air.

One source said the budget office, which has thwarted some past OSHA standards as too costly to industry, concluded now that lowering the exposure limit to two-tenths of a fiber would not cost much more but would carry significantly improved health benefits.

But the source said in the final rule OSHA will suggest optional exposure limits. It would be left to OSHA to decide after the new rule has been run through the public comment period, about 60 days.

Mattel invents toy parts visible through X-ray

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Prompted by a request from pediatricians, toymaker Mattel Corp. has developed a new type of plastic that shows up on X-rays with the hope it will help doctors reduce deaths and injuries among children who swallow or inhale small toy parts.

Drs. H. James Holroyd of the University of Southern California, and Joseph Greensher, chief of pediatrics at Nassau Hospital on Long Island, N.Y., announced the development of the so-called radiopaque plastic at a meeting of the American Academy of Pediatrics in Phoenix last week.

"Mattel spent three years trying to come up with a plastic that was moldable, would not be breakable and still would be radiopaque. It makes a dramatic difference," Holroyd said in a telephone interview.

X-rays pass right through most plastics, while radiopaque materials block some or all of the rays, leaving a shadow on X-ray film. Holroyd said the new Mattel plastic "shows up (on an X-ray) like a piece of lead."

Mattel, one of the nation's largest toymakers, has used the new plastic to make the small parts for its 1984 line of toys. Spokesman Jack Fox said the company will make information on the process used in making the plastic available to its competitors upon request.

Young children who ingest small toy parts can suffer respiratory and intestinal problems, asphyxiation and death unless the object is located quickly and removed.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission said it received reports last year of 3,758 cases where toys or parts were swallowed. There also were 668 reported cases where they were inhaled and entered the breathing apparatus of children.

Commission spokeswoman Ann Sherr said no information was available on the number of deaths involved in those cases.

But Holroyd estimated that 300 children die each year from inhaling small items.

More families find 2 incomes essential

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — More than three-fifths of all married couples in the United States have become two-income families, up significantly from earlier decades, the Census Bureau reported Sunday.

Some 26.3 million couples, or 62 percent, had both husband and wife employed in 1981, the most current statistics available for the study. That was up from 50.1 percent of married couples with two incomes a decade ago, and only 40 percent in 1960.

"Millions of wives went to work in the '70s. The good life in America increasingly requires a household economic team of two workers," economists George Sternlieb and James W. Hughes explained in an income study in the privately published American Demographics magazine.

The report also noted that wives earned more than the husbands in 16 percent — or 4.1 million — of married couples with both spouses working.

Most of those women had no minor children at home, the report said, and they were more likely than other wives to have college educations and to be professionals.

The 25-34 age group was the most likely to include wives who earned more than their husbands.

While average income for husbands was $20,870, it rose to $27,340 for those with four years of college and $32,860 for those with five years or more.

Newly crowned Miss Manhattan-K-State, Shelly Orr, junior in music, receives a congratulatory kiss from boyfriend Tim McCall, sophomore in radio and television, on the Municipal Auditorium stage after the pageant Saturday night.

Judges name Shelly Orr Miss Manhattan-K-State

Shelly Orr, 22, was crowned Miss Manhattan-K-State before a sellout crowd Saturday at the "Go for the Gold" Miss Manhattan-K-State Scholarship Pageant in Municipal Auditorium.

Orr, a student of music at Manhattan Christian College and K-State, also was named Miss Congeniality by her fellow contestants, for which she received a 14 karat gold serpentine chain.

Along with her title Orr was awarded a $750 scholarship, wardrobe selections from two clothing stores, a cosmetic glamour case and the traditional flowers, trophy and crown.

First runnerup was Shelly Vanover, senior in elementary education. She received a $300 scholarship, flowers and a trophy. Second runnerup Karla Tenbrink, senior in business education, received a $200 scholarship as well as a trophy and flowers.

In addition to flowers and a trophy, third runnerup Chystra Stallwitz, junior in industrial engineering, and fourth runnerup Lisa Grigsby, senior in social sciences, each received a $150 and $100 scholarship, respectively. Stallwitz also won the Judges Interview Award and received a 14 karat gold serpentine chain.

Over $2 million is awarded each year in such local, state and national contests. The Manhattan pageant is the longest-running preliminary pageant in the state, having been sponsored by the Manhattan Jaycees for the past 27 years.

Orr, who said she hopes to be a gospel music performer and direct music groups, sang the gospel song "Upon This Rock" in the talent competition. She will travel to Pratt to compete in the Miss Kansas Pageant in July. The winner at Pratt will represent the state in the Miss America Scholarship Pageant in Atlantic City, N.J., on Labor Day weekend.

Vacationing students earn chance to appear in daytime soap opera

By DIANE KERSTING
Collegian Reporter

Spring break was more than just sun and surf for two K-State students; it was an opportunity to be cast in one of their favorite soap operas.

Mary Schalansky, sophomore in family, child and human development, and Lori Teichmann, sophomore in pre-nursing, will appear as extras in a bar scene on the daytime soap opera "As the World Turns."

The scenes will be shown this week from 12:30 to 1:30 p.m. Monday through Friday on CBS stations.

Schalansky and Teichmann were members of the group that traveled to Daytona Beach with the Union Program Council Travel Committee for a spring break vacation.

"We were just looking around at this College Expo in the Plaza Motel, which was close to ours," Schalansky said. "It's sort of like a fair where you could do all kinds of things to win T-shirts and buttons and stuff, but you didn't have to put out any money for it."

When they came upon a booth offering an opportunity to read a script and have it filmed, both girls decided to give it a try since it was connected with a favorite soap opera and it sounded fun.

"Lori was really excited because this is her show," Schalansky said. "I knew how much it would mean to her."

Although Teichmann said she is a faithful viewer, Schalansky only watches half of the show before she has to go to class.

"It was a part I'd seen earlier. They just told us to read this script for the director," Schalansky said.

After the "practice" scene had been filmed and sent to New York for reviewing by the producer, Schalansky said they were thanked.

"It's kind of a talent search, I guess, so the producer can look over it to see if he thinks there's any talent there," she said. "Then they asked if we'd be around Friday."

When we said yes, they told us to meet at Top of the Boardwalk (a bar) for an afternoon disco scene shooting and to come dressed for an afternoon disco."

Both girls arrived at the bar and five scenes were shot, beginning at 2 p.m. and ending at 7 p.m.

"Knowing the parts probably helped (to get the chance to appear in the show), but they never really told us what they were looking for or what we were judged on — maybe expression," Schalansky said.

The bar scene involves four main characters and a dance contest between two of them and two other couples who Schalansky speculates were flown in to comprise the main background, "because they seemed so professional and had their dance routines all worked out."

Javelin toss highlights outdoor track meet

Ray Hansen throws the javelin an Olympic Trials-qualifying distance of 260-10 during Saturday's track meet.

Staff/Andy Nelson

By JUDI WRIGHT
Staff Writer

K-State's men's and women's track teams finally got the chance to perform outdoors Saturday as the Wildcats hosted one of four scheduled track meets for the outdoor season at R.V. Christian Track.

Unlike the rain that postponed the home meet last week, the weather cooperated on Saturday and allowed the Wildcat track squads to perform outdoors for the first time this season.

"We were obviously happy just to have the opportunity to run," Head Track Coach Steve Miller said. "We were disappointed though with several of the teams not showing up. Fort Hays State (University) was snowed out and thought we cancelled the meet. Northwest Missouri (University) was faced with the same situation — there seemed to be snow all around us, but not here."

One of the highlights of the weekend meet was the top performance turned in by Ray Hansen competing in the javelin. Hansen won the event with a throw of 260-feet-10, more than 16 feet longer than the second-place throw.

Miller said Hansen's throw "qualifies him not only to the NCAA meet, but also the Olympic trials."

"This was Ray's best throw in two years," Miller said. "He had a little bit of a problem last year, but his consistent throws on Saturday (all of them over 250 feet) really proves to Ray that he's back to performing at his best."

The men's squad also was aided by the first-place performances of Steve Wallace in the 100-yard dash, Jon Piles in the 1500-meter run and Alfredo Rosas in the 5000-meter run. Wallace finished with a time of 10.9, Piles had a time of 3:50.4 and Rosas finished in 14:23.1.

In the 1500-meter run, K-State grabbed the top five finishes with all the athletes running under 3:52. Finishing behind Piles were Bryan Carroll with a time of 3:50.6, Steve Smith in 3:50.7, Ray Mosier with a time of 3:51.8 and Mike Rogers in 3:51.9.

Kelly Wenlock and Anne Stadler were double-event winners for the K-State women. Wenlock was the top performer in both the long jump (18-6 $\frac{1}{2}$ ) and the triple jump (36-feet-1 $\frac{1}{2}$ ). Stadler won both the 800- and 1500-meter runs with times of 2:12.8 and 4:11.1, respectively.

"I'm really pleased with Anne's performances, especially since she's only a freshman," Miller said. "Anne ran close to national qualifying times in both events despite the fact that she ran unchallenged."

Other top performers for the women were Roxie McKee in the javelin with a throw of 151-feet-4 (teammate Julie Waage took second with a throw of 149-feet-2), Donna King finishing the 100-meter run in 12.4 (Dana Brown followed with a second-place time of 12.6) and Jacque Struckhoff in the 3000-meter run with a time of 9:32.1.

Crystal Hicks, Michelle Maxey, Wenlock and King comprised the 400-meter relay team that captured first place with a time of 47.6.

"I was pleased with the performance of our athletes," Miller said. "We really needed the performance to prepare ourselves for the upcoming Texas Relays this weekend."

Guidry hopes to end opening-day loss jinx

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Ron Guidry will be trying to break an opening-day jinx when the New York Yankees and Kansas City Royals launch their 1984 baseball season Monday afternoon.

The Yankee lefthander has never been a winner on opening day.

"This is about the sixth or seventh time that I've been the opening-day starter and I've never won one," Guidry said Sunday when the Yanks and Royals went through a light workout under cold, cloudy skies. "I guess I've just been a slow starter. Monday afternoon's forecast called for a possibility of thundershowers."

The Royals' choice to open the season is another lefthander without an opening-day victory, Bud Black, who was in the minor leagues at the start of every other season.

Black, who notched a 10-7 record after being called up last year, admitted he will be fighting nervousness.

"It's very exciting," he said. "It's an honor to be named by your manager as your team's pitcher on opening day, especially when you've got some good, solid veteran pitchers like we have. It's quite a thrill for me."

For many fans of the Royals and Yankees, the opening of the 1984 season may be most notable for players who are missing.

The Yankees, with Yogi Berra making his second tour as manager, are without relief ace Rich Gossage and third baseman Graig Nettles, who both now play for the San Diego Padres.

The new-look Royals, who have seven rookies on their 25-man roster, will also be missing Amos Otis and George Brett. Otis, the team's centerfielder almost from the birth of the franchise in 1969, was not picked up by the Royals and now plays for the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Brett, the all-star third baseman who struck the famed Pine Tar home run against Gossage in Yankee Stadium last year, will be sidelined the first 6-8 weeks of the season with a knee injury.

Dave Righetti, who threw a no-hitter last year, has been sent to the New York bullpen as Gossage's replacement in one of the most interesting experiments the game has seen this year. The Royals' bullpen is still stocked with Dan Quisenberry, who set a major league record with 45 saves last year.

Men's tennis team nets first victories

K-State's men's tennis team posted its first wins of the year Saturday, beating Drake University and Bethany College at L.P. Washburn Recreational Complex.

The Wildcats were perfect against Drake, blanking the Bulldogs 9-0.

Kris James, playing in the top position, posted a 6-1, 6-3, win over Tom Essman. Mark Hassenflu beat Scott Keenan 6-3, 6-4, in No. 2 competition. Playing third, Scot Sandlin defeated Ron Rubin 6-3, 6-1, while No. 4 Richard Blevins picked up a 6-0, 6-1, victory over Steve Schneider. Zane Burke topped Eric Litterer, 6-2, 6-1, in No. 5 play while No. 6 Clark Renfro defeated Paul Alleruzzo, 6-1, 6-1.

In doubles play, James and Blevins defeated Essman and Keenan, 6-0, 6-1. Sandlin and Hassenflu topped Schneider and Litterer, 6-2, 7-6, and Jim Medina and Burke defeated Rubin and Alleruzzo, 6-1, 6-1.

Against Bethany, K-State used three wins in doubles play to pick up a 5-4 win.

The Wildcats picked up the dual victory, despite losing four of six matches in singles competition. Blevins and Sandlin were the only K-State players to pick up wins — Blevins defeating Bjorn Stenquist, 6-3, 6-3, and Sandlin topping Todd Beaudoin, 6-3, 6-3.

In doubles, the Wildcats swept Bethany. James and Blevins defeated Kirk Crawford and Bob Bell 6-1, 6-4. Hassenflu and Sandlin won 6-2, 6-1, over Todd Beaudoin and Stenquist, and Burke and Medina defeated Rick Bellah and David Cross, 6-2, 6-2.

The men's dual record stands at 2-8.

"Those were our first two wins. The guys really needed that to help their confidence," Head Tennis Coach Steve Webb said. "We feel like we can win today and Tuesday."

We really need that going into the Big Eight because things get considerably tougher there."

The Wildcats host Northeast Missouri State at 2:30 p.m. Monday at the Rec Complex.

KU sinks K-State crew team

The University of Kansas dominated K-State as it swept three races in Saturday's crew races in cool temperatures and calm waters at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

In the men's varsity eight-man, KU finished with a time of 6 minutes and 19.8 seconds, which topped the Wildcats' time of 6:24.7.

The Jayhawks took first in the men's novice eight-man with a time of 6:35.2. K-State's time was 6:41.4.

In addition, K-State's women's novice eight's time of 7:30.2 was just 2.2 seconds off KU's winning time of 7:28.

One crew member commented that while the water was calm, K-State was still at a disadvantage.

"It's (Tuttle) the smoothest I've been on, it was great," oarsman Joe Lorson, said. "(But) we need new boats badly to be competitive."

The K-State crew uses wooden shells which are heavier than the carbon fiber ones that KU has.

"Carbons have about a 20-second advantage in a two-mile race," Lorson said.

Women's novice crew member Linda Hughbanks said she noticed improvement in the women's team.

"The boat rode pretty well through the race. We did a lot better than at Austin (at the Heart of Texas Regatta). There we finished 6 seconds behind KU, so we're getting closer," she said.

Women netters fall twice, post 1 win over weekend

By VIKKI WATSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The women's tennis squad lost a 6-3 dual meet to Southern Illinois University and grabbed a 8-1 victory over Stephens College in Friday's action at Southwest Missouri State University.

The K-State netters also lost a 9-0 decision Sunday in Manhattan to Oral Roberts University.

Against Southern Illinois, K-State grabbed its three wins in the No. 6 singles and No. 1 and 2 doubles spots. Sophomore Lisa Creighton took the only victory in the singles department, defeating Kathy Harney, 4-6, 6-2, 6-3. The No. 1 doubles team of freshman Judy Miller and sophomore Kim Black defeated Heidi Eastman and Alessandra Molinary by default, while the No. 2 squad of senior Tamie Peugh and sophomore Carlye Madelen beat Stacy Sherman and Harney, 6-3, 6-3.

Peugh, also playing at the No. 1 singles position, lost a 6-2, 7-6 match to Eastman. In addition, No. 2 singles player Sue Peugh went down to defeat, suffering a 6-0, 6-0 blanking by Mary Pat Kramer.

Miller, Madelen and Black also lost their respective Nos. 3, 4 and 5 singles matches. Miller suffered a 6-3, 7-6, 6-4 loss to Molinary. Madelen received a 6-3, 7-5 setback at the hands of Stacy Sherman, and Black lost 6-2, 6-3 to Amanda Allen. Susan Peugh and freshman Erica Anderson at the No. 3 doubles spot lost 6-0, 6-2 to Allen and Kramer.

K-State found the action against Stephens College to be easier, winning every match except the No. 2 singles competition. Sue Peugh took the only Wildcat loss, losing 6-3, 6-4 to Carol Rader.

Tamie Peugh won the No. 1 singles competition with a 2-6, 6-1, 6-2 victory over Allison Watts. Miller also recorded a 6-1, 6-4 win over Susan Bass at the No. 3 singles position, while Madelen took a 6-1, 6-1 victory over Kelly Grummert in No. 4 singles play. Black and Creighton rounded out the K-State victories, with Black beating Kim Kole, 6-1, 6-4, at No. 5 singles and Creighton downing Tami Nelson, 6-2, 6-1, in No. 6 singles action.

All three of K-State's doubles squads entered into the win column with Miller and Black defeating Rader and Bass, 7-5, 6-4; Tamie Peugh and Madelen teaming to beat Grummert and Watts, 6-0, 6-4 and Susan Peugh and Anderson winning 6-2, 6-3 over Kole and Nelson.

The results were dismal in Sunday's meet with Oral Roberts, however, as the Wildcats failed to win any matches during the day.

Tamie Peugh was handed her second defeat of the weekend with a 6-4, 6-2 loss to Vicky Martin in No. 1 singles. Sue Peugh lost, 7-5, 6-1, at the No. 2 singles position.

In doubles competition, Miller and Black lost 6-3, 6-2 to Martin and Willette, while Tamie Peugh and Madelen were defeated 6-1, 6-2 by Livesay and Hostutler. Susan Peugh and Anderson took a 7-6, 6-1 loss at No. 3 singles to Michelle Myne and Rachel Williamson.

Despite the disappointment of the two losses, Head Tennis Coach Steve Webb said he was pleased for the chance to resume outdoor play.

Staff/Andy Nelson

No. 1 singles player Tamie Peugh concentrates on a return during her match against Oral Roberts University's Vicky Martin on Sunday at the L.P. Washburn Tennis Courts. Peugh lost the match as ORU overpowered the women's tennis team in the contest.

Ewing, Olajuwon 'a natural attraction'

By The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Patrick Ewing versus Akeem Olajuwon for the national championship.

"It will be a natural attraction," said Houston Coach Guy Lewis, who will send Olajuwon and his Cougar teammates against Ewing and Georgetown for the National Collegiate Athletic Association basketball title tonight.

The matchup, promises to rival some of the dream showdowns between basketball's giants.

There was Elvin Hayes, an earlier Houston big man, against Lew Alcindor of UCLA. There was Bill Russell against Wilt Chamberlain in the pros. Last year there was Ralph Sampson against Ewing.

But this one is different because the players are so similar and they've never gone against each other.

"The biggest difference is the color of the uniform," Lewis said.

Both are foreign-born. Both are 7-foot juniors, Olajuwon weighing 250 pounds, Ewing 240. Both are All-Americans, renowned defensive players, shot-blocking intimidators.

"If the referees let us play, it's going to be a physical game," said Olajuwon, a native of Lagos, Nigeria, who literally dropped in on the Houston campus four years ago.

"I think they enjoy the challenge of playing against each other," said Lewis, who has guided the Cougars into the Final Four for the third straight year and fifth time overall. "They're close to the same size and do the same things. Each causes the opponent to shoot seven, eight, nine percentage points lower because they're good shot blockers as well as good rebounders."

Georgetown Coach John Thompson held to his belief that Ewing, born in Jamaica, is the "best big man in the country" but said it was difficult comparing greatness.

Both players brush off the individual matchup, saying it's Georgetown against Houston and winning the national championship that's the most important thing.

"Like Coach said, it won't be me against Akeem, it'll be Georgetown versus Houston," said Ewing.

Golf team places third

The K-State men's golf team grabbed third place Friday in the 29-team Park College Invitational at Parkville, Mo.

The Wildcats totaled 624 strokes — 310 in the first round and 314 in the second — to finish behind Iowa State University with 617 and the University of Kansas with 621.

Robert Sedorek, who was second medalist with 152, led the way for the Wildcats with rounds of 73 and 79. KU's Jim Phillips notched first medalist honors with 151.

Jim Fiscella was K-State's second golfer with rounds of 79 and 79 for 158. Kevin Crow, 79-81, shot a 160, and Allen French, 89-75, rounded out Wildcat scorers with a 164.

"I was fairly pleased because both days we started out, the temperature was about 32 degrees," Ray Wauthier, men's golf coach, said. "Considering that, I was pretty pleased with the way the guys played."

K-State will play next at 11 a.m. Friday at Salina in the Bethany Invitational.

NU sweeps Wildcats

The K-State baseball team began its Big Eight Conference season Saturday by dropping a pair of nine-inning contests to the University of Nebraska, 6-1 and 12-2. The Cornhuskers also grabbed both ends of a twin bill Sunday, 6-0 and 4-1.

In Saturday's opener the Wildcats took a 1-0 lead in the third inning when Jay Kvasnicka doubled and later scored on a hit by Cary Colbert.

Nebraska came back to score two in the bottom of the inning and added one in the fourth, one in the sixth and two more in the eighth.

Wildcat hurler John Caresio, 1-3, suffered the loss. He went the distance, giving up nine hits, walking nine and striking out three. Kvasnicka, Colbert and Scott Graves each had two hits, pacing a nine-hit Wildcat attack.

A single by Todd Thaumert knocked in Kvasnicka to give the Wildcats a 1-0 lead in the first inning of the second game.

NU struck back quickly, scoring four in the second, five in the fourth and three in the sixth.

Back-to-back doubles by Kvasnicka and Thaumert produced the 'Cats' only other run.

Scott Lichlyter suffered the loss to drop to 0-1.

The Wildcats were shut out in Sunday's first game as NU pitching limited the 'Cats to four hits.

The Wildcats, 6-9, have lost nine games in a row.

Miss Journalism candidates duke it out

Nancy Newsprint, senior in journalism, is running for Miss Journalism 1984. As part of her campaign, she has formed a platform promoting her cause.

As your nominee for Miss Journalism, I plan to work really super hard to bring this department up from the gutter. I promise to always curl my hair every morning, and never wear T-shirts with gauche descriptions like "Journalists do it daily," and icky-ola things like that.

I will also try to solve world peace, world hunger and the nuclear thing, race or whatever, although I am getting out of shape.

I will be an ambassador figure, joining all elements of the department into one strong, united, All-American hole, so we can stand strong against the business college and get some funds for once.

I plan to be the best Miss Journalism I possibly can, with my utmost enthusiasm and bubbly personality and social skills, and ever will be. Good luck to all the other kids who will try to live up to my lead, because I'm a hard act to follow.

God bless us, EVERY one!

Edna Editing, copy editor for the Collegian, had several complaints about Newsprint's platform.

Miss Newsprint, as your fellow copy editor, I have several complaints with your platform — grammarwise.

I refer you to several errors and unclear statements in your platform.

What is icky-ola? Where did this language come from?

Yes, it is the nuclear race and you'd better get in shape — to meet the president.

Sowe is not a word. Could you possibly mean so we?

Really, you must CLEAN UP YOUR ACT if you're going to represent us!

Vicious Libel, junior in journalism, slammed Newsprint, referring to her simple ways.

I think Nancy Newsprint is a simpleton and just another sorority girl looking for a way to beef up her resume because she knows she has neither the talent nor the intelligence to represent the department!

I feel pity for the poor wretch, but not enough to move me to cast a vote for her. The only thing that should be cast is Nancy Newsprint — back into the pit which this viper slithered out of.

This department does not need the likes of a vermin such as Newsprint, who sweats profusely from the underarm as well as the upper lip.

Renae Reporter, senior in journalism, defended Newsprint as the Miss JMC 1984 candidate. Reporter nominated Newsprint for the honor.

As the person who nominated Nancy, I feel compelled to speak in her defense. Nancy should be Miss Journalism because she is cute and she has nicer clothes than I do.

I like to think Nancy is my friend, but she never told me I could be and I know how Greeks are about choosing friends. I'm probably not good enough to be Nancy's real friend, but I'm happy to be able to help boost her cause.

I have tried really super hard to be like Nancy because she is soooooo neat, but I could never live up to her standards. I guess the real reason I think Nancy should be Miss Journalism is that it's obvious that she has just bunches of money — just look at her clothes, they're real neat.

Me, Ima Homebody, for Miss Journalism 1984? Oh, my! What a sweet honor. However, I am just a tad bit miffed — but not too miffed since women should not make a show of their emotions, you know, at the title of this award. For one thing, it should be called "Mrs. Journalism" — for it is obvious that a woman is nothing without a man, and I would surely give the award to my husband, Mach Hoe, who is my love, my life, my everything. I'm getting misty just thinking about it.

The qualifications that my opponent, Nancy Newsprint, exhibits are long, indeed. But let's be so, so completely honest, students of Kansas State. Women such as Nancy are appalling, taking up space in the working world that could be filled by a strong, competent man. Take the words of my idol, Phyllis Shafteley: Women want to get married, have children, clean their house and clean their husband's underwear, thank you very much. That Miss Newsprint is nothing more than an old feminist fanatic — always editing this and that and trying to be a reporter. A reporter? Come on, Nancy, Coach Hartman would never let you in his locker room anyhow.

If elected, my first order of business will be to plan the 1984 Journalism Banquet — if, of course, I can find a babysitter for my five kids that evening. I assure you voters that the banquet will be a smashing success. We ladies will do all the cooking and cleaning for the event, since we would shudder to think that a man would be asked to do such women's work.

I also will do my utmost to organize the "Wives of Journalists" club so that we may type, recopy and correct all spelling and style errors for our husbands, who no doubt are like every other journalist at K-State who can neither read, write nor spell. We will supply them with coffee, run their errands and massage their aching fingers when they're tired. Oooh, domestic duties. I just love it!

Next order of business would be to rid the Collegian and Royal Purple staffs of all women currently working for them. Long hours, prestige and pay should all be saved for our men because A WOMAN'S PLACE IS IN THE HOME. Cooking, cleaning and changing diapers are the pleasures every young woman really desires; these Collegian and Royal Purple ladies are simply squelching their true feminine wants and needs. They will be replaced by any man that we just happen to find on the street, because ANY man is better than a woman — or so my father, brother and husband tell me.

Women of K-State unite! We must defeat Nancy Newsprint in her bid for the title of Miss Journalism 1984. We must edit out all these women who demand equal opportunity and justice. Women are inferior and like it, darn it! Vote for me, Ima Homebody, for Mrs. Journalism 1984, because I promise...oh, excuse me, my laundry is done.

Timothy Wimpey, senior in home economics and journalism, has severe reservations about parts of Homebody's platform.

They say "A woman's work is never done," but that's because those silly girls won't let us fellows help. I'm appalled that she believes all us fellows should go to work in a smelly, nasty, yickey newsroom, when we have as much right to bake cookies and watch our favorite soaps as girls do (I wish GH would bring Luke back). And many of us fellows would love to bake and clean up at the journalism banquet. Girls aren't the only ones who want to get married, have babies and clean house.

County mall causes demise of University

By G.O. BOND
Public Financing Editor

In a surprise move today, the Board of Riley County Commissioners voted to apply for an Urban Development Action Grant and exercise eminent domain to close K-State for the construction of a suburban mall.

Manhattan city commissioners are in the final stages of the UDAG application process and plan to have the downtown redevelopment project, which includes a mall, completed by 1987. "We just didn't want to be left out," said Commissioner Rosy Rieger. "Of course, we have believed for a long time that the University is a blighted area, and that's what it takes to get free money from Washington these days."

The commission also voted to hire Forest City Enterprises of Cleveland to serve as developer of the proposed mall. Mel Roebuck, Forest City vice president, said in an interview from his Learjet that he is optimistic about the mall.

"What can I say?" Roebuck asked. "They (the county) offered me more money than the city did. I just decided to exercise that little clause in my contract with the city that lets me out."

"I walked into (City Manager Don) Harmon's office last week and said, 'Sorry, buddy. Business is business.'"

Commissioner Marjorie Morse, known for her stand against establishing a county leash law because it would cost too much, said county taxes won't increase as a result of "suburban redevelopment" because no local tax funds will be used.

Proponents of the downtown project used the same argument as Morse in election year advertising. City taxpayers will have to pay about three mills more in property taxes as a result of redevelopment.

Today's action led some to believe the University might be closed to allow for the demolition of buildings to make way for the mall. While K-State is probably three years away from meeting its demise at the hands of a wrecking ball, University officials are apparently digging in for a fight to stop the project.

"We never close the University, ever," said K-State President Duane Acker in a press release issued through Director of Communications Charles Hein.

Acker, who was on a fund-raising mission to South Yemen, could not be reached for further comment. Hein refused to discuss the matter in more detail.

Meanwhile at City Hall, Harmon was in conference with city staff, reportedly deciding who will take over as developer of the downtown project. While no names of developer candidates were released, a source said the city may consider Megaman of Military Sales Co., Junction City, for the post.

While Harmon was busy picking up the pieces left by the county's action, Sherman Hanna, head of the Department of Family Economics and husband of City Commissioner Suzanne Lindamood, a redevelopment opponent, was announcing his candidacy for county commissioner.

"Suzanne knows the tactics used by Mel and the others in getting funding for a mall," Hanna said. "I plan to draw on her expertise during the campaign and after I've been elected."

Plans for the mall have yet to be designed, but Rieger said she and the other commissioners would like to keep Nichols Hall and sell it to local bar owner Charles Busch to use as a multi-level club, tavern and restaurant. The establishment would be called simply "Charlie's Neighborhood," she said.

"We're real excited about this," Morse said. "Ever since we got Courthouse Plaza pushed through, we've been looking for another place to spend the rest of the fiscal year's finances. I think we've found it."

New signs to identify senators on campus

Lack of recognition has led Student Senate to seek new forms of identification.

At a special meeting last night, senators voted to establish a new "button bill." The new button will be triangular, neon orange and larger than previous senator identification buttons.

Several senators asked members of the Communications Committee, which designed the new buttons, why the buttons looked like slow-moving vehicle signs.

"Because these are slow-moving vehicle signs," said Mark Jones, committee chairman.

The button's design will save time for the committee, Jones said.

"Last year we spent a lot of time arguing over which colors wouldn't clash with our clothes," he said. "Now senators can go to the local hardware store and buy their own button."

The button is to be worn on the posterior, and will say "Caution: senator."

The "button bill" includes an enforcement clause. Senators failing to wear their button will be admonished with a "tsk, tsk" from other senators.

"Hearing the entire senate say 'tsk, tsk' is a fate worse than wearing the button itself," said Brian O'Neill, graduate senator.

One senator opposed the bill. "I ran for this office under an assumed name," said the senator, who refused to disclose his identity. "I gave the Collegian my roommate's picture for the election soapbox pages. If my parents find out I'm a senator, they'll cut off my allowance."

The other senators agreed the buttons are important. They also agreed they were tired of wearing blasé identification buttons.

Housing survey discovers dislike of shrimp shapes

By DORA DORMIE
Residence Hall Correspondent

Results of a survey of students living in residence halls released Friday show residents are generally emotionally attached to their vending machines and the proud owners of stolen fast-food restaurant milk crates.

The Department of Housing sent out 810 surveys over Christmas break, reaching about 20 percent of hall residents' mailboxes.

The return rate was 100 percent, which Tom Frith, director of housing, attributes to the fact that it was the only mail waiting for most students when they returned to school this semester.

"I believe the reason for the high return rate is that our survey was the only mail waiting for residents when they returned," Frith said.

The survey revealed that one of the most widespread concerns is the content of shrimp shapes, a common Friday entree in Derby and Kramer food centers.

Eighty-nine percent of the students surveyed expressed wonderment at the fact that all shrimp shapes are exactly the same size and shape, while 11 percent disagreed and found variation in both the shape and flavor of the shrimp shapes.

Volunteers from U-Learn, the campus information hotline, have researched thoroughly the question of the content of the shrimp shapes and have come to two conclusions:

1.— Shrimp shapes are neither animals nor plants inhabiting the sea.

2.— Shrimp shapes can be safely eaten by vegetarians — they contain no meat — and bear no resemblance in nutritional content to any form of seafood.

The largest number of positive comments was given about the effective publicity of events in the dorms.

Ninety-four percent of the respondents listed the "John-sheets" as one of their primary reasons for choosing a residence hall as a place to live.

Chiefs sign running back sensation

By VIRGIL ARGANOVITZ
Sports God

In a surprise move Saturday, the Kansas City Chiefs announced the signing of a 9-year-old running back sensation from New Jersey, Wilbert Humphries, to a five-year contract paying him an estimated $5.3 million per year.

Humphries, a 4-foot-8, 87-pound speedster who goes by the nickname "Chilly Willie," rushed for 265 yards per game while leading his third grade flag football team to a 7-0 record and the city championship.

"It's hard to believe that we were actually able to sign a back of his capabilities," said Chief's Coach John Mackovic. "With the 'other league' signing college underclassmen, we figured we grabbed a star right out of grade school."

Humphries, a very articulate little guy, who decided to forfeit his final three years of grade school said, "I'll take some art, recess and lunch classes during the off season until I get through sixth grade. I need to get through fourth grade reading class so I can understand my contract."

"People worry about my small stature, but I've got a message for them — I'm bad, I'm bad, I'm bad and I know I'm bad. I move so fancy, shuffle my feets, I'll leave the defense flat on their seats. I'll fake 'em to the left, I'll fake 'em to the right, cause I got moves that are dyn-o-mite. I drive opponents totally silly and that's why they call me Chilly Willie."

"The guy has got some moves that are unbelievable," Mackovic said. "One time he took a pithout, faked left, sprinted down the right sideline, hurdled an oversized second grader and sprinted 85 yards for the score. I guess you could say I'd been chilled."

Beatles' album shows 'lack of lyrical talent'

By M. M. MUSTARD
Cowlegian Reviewer

The wave of British music that has been inundating the airwaves recently has spawned the importation of a number of albums, and the recording of an even larger number of albums on American labels to meet the demand for British rock 'n' roll in the United States.

Unfortunately, Capital records has jumped on the bandwagon with the release of the first American album by the Beatles, the British quartet that is becoming increasingly popular in this country. "Meet The Beatles" includes the band's major American hit, "I Want to Hold Your Hand," as well as 11 other songs titled just as ridiculously.

Despite the fact that the Beatles have obtained some popularity among audiences in the United States, certainly the band's charm won't last long considering the lack of lyrical talent and the too-symphonic music displayed on "Meet The Beatles." The band members do a good deal of their own songwriting, and as a consequence the album is full of inane, immature songs.

The Beatles are not totally without talent, but a few measures are going to have to be taken if they plan on a lengthy career. One suggestion that could be made would be that they totally stop performing their own compositions, and stick strictly to recording music by songwriters who know how to write interesting and meaningful lyrics.

Riley County District Judge Jerry Mershon contemplates the question of one of more than 200 people at a rape forum Monday in the Ecumenical Christian Ministries chapel. ## Citizens question judge's ruling to release rapist

By KARRA PORTER
Staff Writer

Members of the judicial system as well as the general public learned something about rape Monday night. A standing-room-only forum, held at Ecumenical Christian Ministries Center, was organized in response to public outcry following the release of a convicted rapist after serving less than four months of his 8- to 20-year sentence.

In February, Riley County District Judge Jerry Mershon modified the sentence of Calvin Holland, who was convicted in August of raping a K-State student. Holland was granted probation after spending only 3½ months in jail. Under conditions of his probation, Holland must provide restitution to the victim, participate in weekly counseling sessions and undergo a 30-day alcohol treatment program.

Mershon came under fire from the audience of more than 200, more than one-third of whom were men. Many of the questions presented concerned Mershon's use of the presence of alcohol as a mitigating factor in the rape. Both the victim and defendant had been drinking the night the incident occurred. Mershon said 90 to 95 percent of the cases he sees involve alcohol abuse, and he must consider alcohol as a factor in cases. He said he did what he was legally bound to do, which is consider all factors in a case.

"I have a great duty and a burden to proceed with each individualized case on all the statutory factors that are central to that case and to look at the totality of the case and to balance society's interests and the victim's interests in my best judgment," Mershon said.

Mershon said the victim would not be benefited by jailing Holland, especially considering Holland's previous history and "personal attributes."

Among those mitigating factors, Mershon said, were Holland's clean criminal record, an excellent work history and his contributions to his family and society.

Mershon's comments were met with derision, however, when he said Holland was "suffering from self-depreciation and shame as a result of his crime." Mershon said he believed Holland was repentant, a view which was supported by county Chief Court Services Officer Carla Fredrickson, a report by the Kansas Diagnostic Center in Topeka and Riley County Attorney Colt Knutson.

Knutson defended Mershon's actions and said he would have made the same decision. Initially, Knutson distinguished rapes by their severity.

"If a woman is savagely raped, as we sometimes read about — perhaps terribly cut up, or raped for hours on end — the effect upon her is going to be different, and it's going to take a longer time to heal than if there was very brief penetration," he said.

The audience responded with a negative outcry, and a rape victim told Knutson that, judging by her own suffering, his views were wrong.

"As a former rape victim, I know that after the initial attack, there was nothing he could have done to me that...could possibly have made it much worse than what it was," she said. "And for a long time, I wished that he had killed me so I didn't have to live with the memory."

Knutson later said he had learned from the forum that his views on rape were wrong and said his office would welcome any information about rape. Mershon said he had also learned more about treatment of the crime in the judicial system.

The forum was capped by an appearance by Holland's attorney, Michael Moroney, who sat with Holland's wife in the audience. Moroney contradicted Mershon and Fredrickson's views about Holland's repentance and set off a roar of protest by denying any blame on Holland's part.

"He (Holland) did not have a bad attitude toward women. That

Gunmen injure 48 in rampage

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Three Arab gunmen rampaged down a busy Jerusalem street Monday, firing automatic weapons and hurling hand grenades in a 10-minute terror spree that wounded 48 people, police said. They said bystanders shot and killed one attacker, and officers captured the other two.

Police and hospital officials said one victim was in critical condition and another was seriously wounded, but most other injuries were minor.

The Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine, a hard-line member of the Palestine Liberation Organization, claimed responsibility for the attack in communities from Damascus, Syria.

It was the first such random shooting attack in the Jewish sector of Jerusalem, although it has suffered bombings in the past.

"This is something new," said Interior Minister Yosef Burg, who is in charge of the police. "We will have to learn from this."

Burg initially identified the three attackers as Arabs from Lebanon, but later his ministry said it was not sure where they came from.

Mayor Teddy Kollek said the guerrillas "are trying to prove that their account with us is not yet finished. Well, our account with them is not finished, either."

In the past, Israel has retaliated for terrorist incidents by attacking suspected guerrilla targets. On Sunday, Israeli artillery shelled alleged guerrilla headquarters in Syrian-held Lebanese territory to answer attacks on Israeli troops.

The rampage started in a

Judges name ex-Watergate lawyer as prosecutor in Meese inquisition

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Jacob A. Stein, a former Watergate defense lawyer, was named special prosecutor Monday in the investigation of Attorney General-designate Edwin Meese III.

A special panel of three federal judges chose Stein, 59, of Washington, "to investigate this matter and to prosecute for any violations of federal criminal law disclosed by his investigation."

"It is ordered that the independent counsel shall have jurisdiction to investigate any allegation or evidence of violation of any federal criminal law by Mr. Meese," said Judges Roger Robb, J. Edward Lumbard and Lewis R. Morgan.

Stein, described by the presiding judge in the Watergate trials as "one of the finest attorneys in Washington," said in a telephone interview: "I hope to carry out a dignified, thoroughly professional investigation."

"I was contacted by the three-judge panel today. I thought it was a high honor and I accepted," he added.

Stein refused to comment on how long he expected the investigation to take.

"I've got a mandate and an appointment order, and that's what I'm going to follow. The panel of judges has identified the nature of the investigation, and that is my map on the subject."

Attorney General William French Smith last week had asked the special judicial panel to name a prosecutor to investigate all allegations against Meese, President Reagan's counselor and top policy adviser.

The Justice Department asked that the prosecutor look into Meese's receipt of loans from, and his other financial transactions with, people who later got federal jobs; special treatment for businesses in which Meese had an interest; Meese's promotion in the military reserve, and what he knew about the receipt by the Reagan campaign in 1980 of then-President Carter's campaign materials.

Meese, whose nomination to succeed Smith as attorney general has been held up by the Senate Judiciary Committee while the investigation proceeds, has denied any wrongdoing.

Meese's lawyer and spokesman, Leonard Garment, issued a statement saying: "We are pleased that the judicial panel has acted promptly and has appointed a distinguished lawyer to serve as the independent counsel. We look forward to cooperating fully with him."

The appointment of a special prosecutor is provided for by the Ethics in Government

Act of 1978, which was passed as a result of the Watergate scandal. Under the law, if allegations are made against a top government official, the Justice Department must determine if they are frivolous. If they are not, the department recommends to the special judicial panel — whose members were named by Chief Justice Warren Burger — that the "independent counsel," as the special prosecutor is called in the act, be appointed.

Smith began a preliminary investigation to see if a prosecutor was needed after it was disclosed March 15 that Meese failed to include on his required financial disclosure forms a $15,000 interest-free loan which his wife received from Edwin Thomas, a California friend of the Meese family, to purchase stock. Smith noted that while the loan was outstanding, Thomas and his wife and son were appointed to federal jobs.

Others who helped Meese financially also received government jobs. Meese has said there was no connection between the financial help and the jobs.

He also has denied any knowledge of how the Reagan campaign in 1980 obtained Carter strategy documents, although some Carter campaign papers, with cover memos addressed to Meese, were found in Reagan campaign files.

Prominent world hunger specialist to deliver last Lou Douglas lecture

Joseph Collins will deliver the fourth Lou Douglas Lecture on Public Affairs this semester at 7:30 p.m. today in Union Forum Hall.

Collins, a prominent researcher and spokesman on world hunger and third-world development issues, will speak on "What Difference Could a Revolution Make?"

He is co-founder with Frances Moore-Lappe of The Institute for Food and Development Policy and author of a book on food and farming in the new Nicaragua. He also has served as an unpaid adviser to the Sandinista government on agricultural policy.

His visit is sponsored by the University for Man and Ecumenical Christian Ministries, in addition to other K-State colleges and departments, local churches, organizations and individuals.

Collins is the last speaker in the lecture series this semester.

Senate defeats cut in aid to El Salvador

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Republican-controlled Senate rejected a deep cut in proposed military aid to El Salvador Monday after being warned that cutting President Reagan's request could touch off a blood-bath in the Central American country.

By a vote of 63-25, the lawmakers defeated an amendment by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., to reduce a $61.7 million compromise appropriation for Salvadoran military assistance to $21 million.

By a similar margin of 63-24, the Senate rejected another move by Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont., to trim the military aid package to $20.5 million and couple it with $14 million in food assistance.

The administration was holding out for $93 million until recent weeks but agreed to support the compromise, saying the money is needed to prevent disruption of presidential elections.

Both the supporters and some of the opponents of Kennedy's amendment expressed misgivings about administration policy in Central America.

"We are pursuing a policy in El Salvador that ultimately can only succeed with the use of U.S. troops," Kennedy told the Senate.

Much of the debate centered around the impending runoff election between centrist candidate Jose Napoleon Duarte, the leader in the first round of elections, and his challenger, rightist Roberto d'Aubuisson.

Both Kennedy and Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, suggested that d'Aubuisson is linked to right-wing death squads that have been blamed by some human rights groups for an estimated 38,000 political murders in El Salvador since 1976.

"We are being asked to provide a blank check for the future of El Salvador when it may elect a president...tied to the people who have controlled some of the grossest violations of human rights that we have seen," Kennedy said.

Inouye told the Senate he believes Duarte will win the runoff, adding that if d'Aubuisson wins he would "do what I can to put a stop" to further military aid for the Salvadoran regime because "the evidence is rather compelling that he has had some role in the execution and formation of the death squads."

The Hawaii senator, who has strongly criticized the administration's Central American policies, said he supported the compromise because, "If we should decide at this moment to stop all aid that would be the signal to unleash the hotheads. What will happen will be a bloodbath."

Inouye appeared to be suggesting that the right-wing and the military would be the source of the violence.

Professor elected to council

Richard Vaden, professor of management, has been elected to the national council of the American Society for Public Administration. Vaden is only the third Kansan to win election to the society's national council in its 45-year history. His three-year term will start at the National Conference on Public Administration to be held in Denver this month. Vaden has served several years on the society's long-range planning and evaluating committee.

Vaden is a former president of the Kansas Chapter of ASPA, which meets monthly in Topeka, Manhattan or Lawrence. The 18,000 member national society and the Kansas chapter have as their objective the improvement of management of the public service at all levels of government.

Entomologist receives merit award

Jimmy Hatchett, professor of entomology, received the 1984 Award of Merit from the North Central Branch of the Entomological Society of America at the annual regional meeting last week.

Herb Knutson, emeritus professor of entomology, was named a NCB-ESA honorary member.

Hatchett is recognized nationally as an expert on the Hessian fly. Knutson is known for his research on grasshoppers.

The entomology department hosted the meeting March 26-29 in Wichita.

Art idea lecture re-scheduled

An "Ideas into Art" illustrated talk which was to have been given by Stuart Levine, University of Kansas English professor, on Thursday, has been re-scheduled for Friday.

Levine is to speak at 8 p.m. in Union 207.

His appearance is sponsored by the K-State Libraries and his talk is open to the public.

Graduate receives scholarship

The first recipient of a $500 Roscoe Ellis Jr. Scholarship at K-State is Kevin McInnes, graduate in agronomy.

The scholarship was provided for through a fund established with the KSU Foundation by the family of the late Roscoe Ellis Jr., long-time professor of agronomy at K-State.

The scholarship perpetuates the memory of Ellis and gives recognition to outstanding graduate students in the field of soils.

McInnes is currently a graduate assistant in the Department of Agronomy's Evapotranspiration Laboratory. His research is on the development of a computer model of the volatilization of ammonium-nitrogen from soils.

sportswear shop on King George Street. Shop owner Claude Danon said two men, speaking Arabic-accented English and carrying traveling bags, entered to buy jeans.

At the sound of a shout from outside, he said, they burst out of a dressing room — "one of them didn't have time to pull up his jeans" — brandished a gun at an employee and fired into the street from the doorway. Then they ran outside in opposite directions, he said.

A third man up the street was crouched and pivoting on one knee, shooting in all directions.

Larry Tzach said he was walking into his family's jewelry store when he heard the gunfire. "I threw my jacket from my hand, grabbed my pistol, cocked it and went outside," he told reporters.

"Just then I saw the terrorist running. I began shooting at him. I hit him several times. He fell."

The wounded assailant lay in the street for several minutes. "I thought he was dead," said Shalom Hendler, another shopkeeper. "Suddenly, he got up very slowly. His face was covered with blood. He leaned down and took another grenade from the bag and ran down the street," Hendler said.

Reporters later saw medics treating the bloodied man, who had fallen again, mortally wounded.

City to review lease for relocation office

Manhattan City Commissioners will consider authorizing Mayor Wanda Fateley and City Clerk Gregg Gibson to sign a lease agreement for the building at 221½ Poyntz Ave. at their meeting at 7 tonight at City Hall.

The building would be used as an on-site redevelopment relocation office for the Vector Corp., which will aid businesses that have to relocate because of downtown redevelopment.

Commissioners also will consider whether to have the city become a member and appoint a voting member of the Big Lakes Certified Development Corp. The firm can provide financial assistance to small businesses.

An ordinance dealing with a pay classification plan, based on the Job Evaluation and Base Compensation Study done by Hay Associates in February, will receive second reading.

Commissioners also will consider four measures concerning open public records:

— Second reading of a resolution which would establish a fee to people wanting access to or copies of such records.

— Consideration of a resolution declaring the city's policy regarding the records.

— Consideration of a resolution which would provide for the maintenance, preservation and protection of public records and establish procedures for gaining access to the records and copying them.

— A resolution appointing custodians for the records and providing for the designation of additional custodians if needed.

The commission also will consider first reading of an ordinance amending the existing ordinance regulating moving of buildings and structures in the city.

Reagan opposes talks with Soviets for banning anti-satellite weapons

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, setting the stage for a fight with Congress over curbing arms in space, said Monday it would not be wise to open negotiations with the Soviet Union on a treaty banning satellite-killer weapons that the Kremlin possesses and the United States still is developing.

In a report to Congress, Reagan said, "No arrangements or agreements beyond those already governing military activities in outer space have been found to date that are judged to be in the overall interest of the United States and its allies."

The administration argued it would be virtually impossible to verify compliance with any treaty, and that it even would be difficult to tell which Soviet space systems could be used as weapons.

Reagan said the United States would study the feasibility of restrictions on specific anti-satellite weapons — as opposed to a comprehensive ban — but that there are problems with that also.

"Until we have determined whether there are, in fact, practical solutions to these problems, I do not believe it would be productive to engage in formal international negotiations," Reagan wrote.

The president's declaration points the way toward a showdown with Congress later this year over a law approved overwhelmingly last year. The measure, sponsored by Sen. Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., bars advanced testing of the U.S. anti-satellite system unless the administration certifies that it is — contrary to Reagan's statement Monday — ready to negotiate a comprehensive ban of such weaponry.

Responding to Reagan's report, Tsongas said: "It is very clear this administration does not intend to pursue arms control in this area...The administration's approach is simple. It says no treaty can be verified, and that becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy."

Although his amendment was passed 91-0 by the Senate last year, Tsongas said, "It is also clear the Congress can't be counted upon to stand up and take a different stand" than the president.

Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said, "At the time we accepted the Tsongas amendment, Congress simply did not possess the information" in Reagan's report. "We'll have to repeal or modify the amendment."

"We had all hoped that space would be that frontier we could protect" from the arms race, Warner said. "At this time, there doesn't seem to be any hope."

Specifically, Tsongas' amendment to the 1984 defense authorization act bars the Air Force from firing at objects in space. That would be the next step, sometime next fall, in testing the U.S. system, which involves a small, two-stage missile launched by F-15 fighters at 60,000 feet to ram and destroy low-orbiting satellites.

So far, the U.S. weapon has been test-fired only at an imaginary point in space. The Air Force wants to try it next against balloon-like satellites.

Without acknowledging their own satellite-killer capability, the Soviets have submitted a draft treaty to the United Nations that would ban testing and deployment of space-based weapons. It calls for elimination of existing anti-satellite weapons, a prohibition on development of new weapons and a ban on attacks on satellites.

A senior administration official, speaking on condition he not be identified, told reporters: "We don't see how the proposal they have put forward would contribute to stability because it would be so difficult to verify and because it would undercut deterrence."

Health fair stresses responsibility, features new blood chemistry test

By DIONA NACE
Collegian Reporter

An optional blood chemistry test will be a new addition to the third annual "Health Yourself" health fair, which will be conducted from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Wednesday in the Union Ballroom.

Cindy Culver-Burke, instructor of health education, said the fair will include health education on alcohol and drug abuse, counseling, human sexuality, nutrition and many other areas. Those attending the health fair may have their blood pressure checked and their blood tested for anemia. Hearing tests, physical fitness assessments, vision and glaucoma tests also will be available. The fair is being sponsored by Lafene Student Health Center.

Optional blood chemistry testing, a battery of 18 tests, will be available for a cost of $7. The fee will pay for laboratory costs. The results will be sent directly from the lab to the patient on a computer printout, which will arrive in four to six weeks and will be accompanied by an explanation.

People wishing to take the optional blood test must fast for six to eight hours before the test, Culver-Burke said. The other services at the fair will be free to all faculty, staff and students.

Culver-Burke said the health fair was coordinated under the guidelines of the National Health Education Council, but minor modifications were made since many of the participants are students.

She said attendance at the past two fairs has averaged 600-700 people.

Culver-Burke said she believes the reason 600-700 people come annually for the Health Fair is not because it is a "freebie," but because they care about their health.

The health fair will be divided into 24 stations, with the last station reviewing results and acting as a referral service, Culver-Burke said.

"The primary goal is to offer a form of health education and to alert a person to some possible problems. It is not to take the place of a routine physical or diagnose diseases, but to make people aware and responsible for their health," she said.

Some of the organizations which will have health education stations are: Cooperative Extension, U-Learn, Pawnee Mental Health, Red Cross, K-State Dietary Club, Kansas State Department of Venereal Disease (Department of Human Services) and K-State Cancer Research Center.

woman enticed Calvin Holland into the situation," Moroney began, but was drowned out by cries from the audience. He continued, saying the verdict was improper and was only a result of the feeling in Manhattan about rape.

"This community is in uproar about rape, and this guy is the guy that got tried," Moroney said.

Moroney's comments led to questions of Mershon concerning his belief that Holland was sorry for his behavior. Mershon said he made a judgment of Holland's sincerity, one which was backed up by the professionals who recommended probation.

All three county officials said probation was a better alternative to prison, which might have made Holland more of a risk to society. Knutson said Holland had already suffered enough from prison, that his first night there was undoubtedly more terrifying, and thus more effective in changing Holland's views toward his crime than any other time he could have spent there.

Poor reasons for license change

A proposed bill in the Kansas Senate would require driver's licenses for those under 21 years of age to be different from licenses issued for people over that age, supposedly to help liquor store owners recognize if someone under 21 is trying to buy liquor.

The driver's licenses of people under 21 would have a different color background in the photograph than the other licenses. This would allow liquor store owners to tell at a glance whether an individual is old enough to buy liquor.

A measure to cut back on liquor sales to minors is a laudable effort, but this bill has some obvious defects which defeat its purpose.

The bill does not solve any problems liquor store owners face in dealing with those who attempt to buy liquor illegally.

The legislators failed to realize that most minors buying liquor do not show their own driver's license to the cashier in the liquor store. Most who attempt to buy liquor illegally either use fake identification or no identification in the hope that the liquor store clerk will not ask to see it.

Besides, those who are in the business of making false identification cards probably would not have much trouble matching the new background color.

The change in background colors supposedly would make it easier for liquor store owners to tell whether the driver was 21 when the license was obtained. Who cares how old someone was when they obtained a driver's license? What is important is the person's age at the time he is trying to buy liquor.

Under the proposed bill, 16-year-olds would receive a license with the different background. Theoretically, the license will next be renewed when the driver turns 20. Because he is not yet 21, he will still have a license which expires in four years, but with the under-21 background color.

Unless the 21-year-old wants to pay for a duplicate license with the correct background color for those over 21, bar and liquor store employees will still need to look at the date of birth to tell whether the person is of legal age.

Although the effort to crack down on the illegal purchase of liquor by minors is commendable, this particular bill is not the solution. Further analysis of the problem and new ideas for driver's licenses, such as license numbers which serve as a code to age and physical characteristics of the card holder, may prove more effective in solving the problem.

Smokers receive minority status

Smokers have been labeled the persecuted minority of the decade. In many instances, most recently in San Francisco offices, smokers have been outlawed from lighting up wherever and whenever they please.

Such restrictions may have had an unexpected and positive effect. According to recently released results of a poll by the American Cancer Society, only 29 percent of American adults smoked in 1983, compared with 37 percent in 1980.

Smokers may complain about discrimination, but the society's figures seem to indicate smoking is losing its overall appeal. Other figures indicate the ranks of teen smokers declined 25 percent between 1974 and 1979.

A rising health and fitness conscience in the last decade no doubt also contributed to this decline in smoking. Such a change toward a healthy attitude is truly praiseworthy.

Hart credits staff with errors

WASHINGTON — When Gary Hart was first asked why his official biography incorrectly listed his age as 46 rather than 47, he blamed it on a mistake by someone on his staff.

When Hart denounced a television commercial for Walter F. Mondale, only to be told there was no such commercial, he blamed the mistake on bad staff work back in Washington.

A bit later, when Hart was asked about one of his own ads, he said it could not have been aired. It was a mistake — not his, of course, but a staffer's.

And when Hart was confronted by a letter in which he enunciated a different policy toward moving the United States Embassy to Jerusalem than the one he adopted recently in New York, he said the letter had been written by — you guessed it — a staffer. It was a mistake.

You are forgiven for detecting a pattern here and for concluding that Hart is the opposite of a stand-up guy — maybe a fall-down guy. He is fast becoming the candidate of the dog-at-my-homework ticket — a man who is willing to take responsibility for almost nothing. After all, what's a staffer for?

It is possible, of course, that a staff member really did misunderstand the senator's position on moving the embassy to Jerusalem. That's understandable. Hart himself was on film saying that while he favored moving the United States Embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, it should be done only as part of a larger package of Israeli-Arab negotiations. Any staff member should be excused for concluding that what his boss was saying was really his position.

The other mistakes, too, were ultimately Hart's. A man who has already run one presidential campaign (George McGovern's in 1972) and two of his own senatorial campaigns ought to know better than to denounce a commercial that is not, in fact, being aired. Hart might have been fed bum information, but it was his responsibility to check.

The same holds for his own ads. Hart is supposed to know what he is putting on the air since television commercials are at least as important as any single speech. If Hart knows ahead of time what he will be saying in a speech, he ought to know ahead of time what his advertising people are saying for him. That's his job — or one of them.

It must be Hart's delusion that he will be held to the same standard of non-responsibility as President Reagan. He is mistaken there. In the first place, the president stands up for his aides no matter what. He sees their oath of office as akin to the marriage vow — for better or worse, for richer or poorer. It matters not to him which of these it is — richer, poorer, worse or even richer and worse, as is the case with Edwin Meese III.

And in the second place, the public long ago realized that the president really is not responsible for much of what his administration does — even, sometimes, for what he says. The man has evolved into some sort of constitutional monarch, representing not his own policies, not his own decisions, not even his own rhetoric, but the nation itself. The president has even managed to put the Lebanon fiasco behind him, but he did it without blaming a single staff aide. For Reagan, godless communism serves the purpose that staff aides do for Hart.

But Hart, by his own testimony, is supposed to be head and shoulders above Reagan — especially intellectually. He is the candidate who quotes Leo Tolstoy's "War and Peace" and does not mean the movie. He is the candidate of new ideas, the one with a thoughtful position on anything thoughtful, the one who has written two books, the last delineating his programs. Unlike Reagan, Hart asserts that he is always in charge. In fact, his campaign has been criticized because Hart is supposed to be too much in charge — the campaign manager as well as the candidate.

Maybe Hart is just going through a rough period in the campaign. Maybe he is tired and short of sleep and maybe that is the explanation for all his gaffes. Whatever the reason may be, though, his incessant buck passing is hardly a new idea. In fact, it looks awfully much like something we have seen before — the old scapegoating.

GIRL SCOUT COOKIES! WHAT ARE YOU TRYING TO DO, KILL ME?!

The empire strikes out

YANKEE GO HOME! YANQUI IMPERIALISTA!

Some of my earliest memories as a child in Bolivia are of seeing messages like these painted on mud walls. I can remember seeing those slogans and wondering what they really meant. My parents, for example, were "Yankees," but they certainly did not advocate a "United States Empire."

Outwardly I scorned "gringos" just as much as the next kid. But inwardly I remember thinking that perhaps those "artists of the night" were really exaggerating. My opinion was that a lot of U.S. businessmen would like an empire, but that those days were really over.

In September 1982, I was at a small party in Madrid, Spain. Also at the party was a Bolivian, currently working in the revolution in Nicaragua. He showed me some Nicaraguan posters denouncing the "imperialist CIA" for trying to overthrow the Sandinista government. I told the man the posters were not just an exaggeration; I believed they were a form of propaganda to keep the Nicaraguan revolution rolling.

But when I got back to this country a few months later, I found the CIA had come out of the closet. Not only was the administration admitting the policy of "covert" destabilization of Nicaragua, it was being discussed — with straight faces — in Congress. This week Congress is on the verge of approving $21 million more to further the harassment of a neighboring government.

The point is, I have looked at this and the rest of our foreign policy. The best answer I can find is that these are the policies of an empire after all. People say, but how can this be? We are the "land of the free" and the "guardians of democracy." I say, then we should be ashamed, shouldn't we?

The big difference between our empire and the British Empire (as long as you consider the different points in history) is the British admitted this "relationship." They even bragged that "the sun never sets on the British Empire." On the other hand, we do not openly admit our international system. We have developed euphemisms to refer to it, yet we have come to expect the rights of empire.

When the British supported dictators and other despots overseas they called it indirect rule. When we do the very same thing we call it guarding democracy or fighting communism. Where the British called the areas they controlled an empire, we call the area we struggle to control "the free world."

The daddy of our imperialist euphemisms is the phrase "American interests." This is the nebulous concept that justified our invasion of Grenada. It is the phrase that allowed us to overthrow the democratically elected president of Chile. American interests "force" us to overlook 45,000 civilian deaths in El Salvador, including the rape and murder of five U.S. churchwomen.

Defense of U.S. interests apparently called for Marines to go to Lebanon. U.S. interests allowed us to overlook the murder of a presidential candidate in the Philippines.

The point is, however, that if these interests we defend were not imperialist interests, we would not have to constantly defend our actions. We would not continually "have" to overlook people's human rights if we were not defending our right to violate their rights.

Granted, our empire is not identical to the British Empire. But it certainly fits the definition recently given by Albert Franklin, former Foreign Service officer and retired K-State professor:

"Imperialism is a relationship, one side of which considers itself entitled to overlook the humanity of the other, to value only its tangible produce and its sweat; the other side of which accepts the role of inferior, or peon, but only as long as it remains unaware of its own identity and its history."

Nicaragua became aware of its identity and its history, and overthrew Somoza. Now, we are in the process of overlooking — denying — its humanity.

I reject the idea that our "interests" have to be synonymous with domination. We have "U.S. interests" in Great Britain, but we don't tell the people of that country how or by whom they should be ruled. They are our partners, not our subjects.

We have had multiple opportunities to accept Nicaragua as a partner. This is either inconceivable for the Reagan administration, or it just doesn't suit the administration's fancy. We have two strikes against us with Nicaragua, and our player at bat does not appear to have a "good eye."

If you think Nicaragua is a communist plot to take what is "rightfully ours," surprise your roommate and do some homework. Come hear Joseph Collins' Lou Douglas lecture tonight. It is titled "What Difference Could a Revolution Make?"

Next time you see Congress debating sending aid to Nicaraguan rebels, think of it as money going to defend the U.S. Empire. If this doesn't bother you, then you had better be prepared to reach deep into your pocket. You see, the sun never sets on American interests.

Army exhibit undermines theme of college

Editor,

The arch introducing the College of Arts and Sciences open house display in the Union had a great unifying effect. This year's theme, "The leaves are many, the roots are one," added to the spirit of cooperation and fairness. One display, however, the military science DARCOM exhibit, seemed a big and ugly leaf that should have been scaled down to size.

Military science is a relatively small department, yet it commanded at least 10 percent of the space dedicated to the college. By size alone, military science overshadowed many of the larger departments.

The display had little to do with the purpose of open house — that of discovering K-State. A table at the exhibit offered some information about the program at K-State, but the bulk of the exhibit — six large panels, complete with two television sets, free literature and a video game encouraging passersby to shoot the enemy — promoted not K-State but the U.S. Army and its fantastic weaponry. Some of the pamphlets distributed seemed aimed at recruiting the 18-year-old into a full-time military career than encouraging his participation in a university.

My final objection is the attitude of the DARCOM exhibit. As the rockets fired on the television screen and the kids fired at the targets, I opened to the first sentence of the DARCOM pamphlet: "To win the next war, if and when it comes..." Hoping to find somewhere acknowledgment that just maybe we can't "win" the next war, I read the entire pamphlet. No luck. The last sentence was even more disheartening: "Combat ready to engage any enemy, anywhere, at anytime...and win!" No sense of compromise, of diplomacy, of tolerance; only the mentality of us and them, winning and losing — a mentality that aside from holding great promise of world destruction, is the antithesis of this year's theme of such a vast and varied college.

Education vs. new coliseum

Editor,

Re: Kecia Stolfus' editorial, "Library should be funded first," in the March 27 Collegian:

Stolfus has a point in saying the library plays a vital role in academic studies, but this point was not stressed enough. Sports programs are an important part of any university, and I would be the first to protest if K-State were to lose its sports funding.

But aren't the students' education more important than a new coliseum? As much as I enjoy football games, I would much rather be able to find the books and materials I need in the library than have a new, padded seat for the football games. Sports, a luxury, should play a secondary role to education, the necessity, in any university.

Canada confiscates illegal bracelet

OTTAWA — Customs officials in Canada have seized a bracelet they say was made of elephant ivory that was donated for a charity auction by French actress Brigitte Bardot, who campaigns for protection of endangered animal species.

Customs officials say it appears to have been made of ivory from an elephant tusk. Such ivory is banned from import into 86 countries under an elephant protection treaty observed by Canada and France.

Bardot, 49, who for years has publicly opposed the annual seal hunt off Newfoundland, contributed the $300 bracelet to Quebec's Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Drug center puts patients to work

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. — Despite its celebrity reputation, nobody gets off easy at the Betty Ford Center for Drug Rehabilitation. During her stay, actress Elizabeth Taylor said she had to take out the garbage.

Ford, wife of former President Gerald Ford, joined industrialist and recovering alcoholic Leonard Firestone to create the $5 million center.

"The center is a realization of a dream that evolved out of my own recovery," said Ford, who was treated at the Long Beach Naval Hospital in 1977 for addiction to alcohol and pain killers.

Patients have included Taylor, Johnny Cash, Peter Lawford and Desi Arnaz Jr. Marketing officials say 700 patients have been treated at the center during its 17 months in operation, at an average cost of $5,000 for 28 days.

Firm closes bets on baby's sex

LONDON — The oddsmaking firm William Hill has stopped taking bets on the sex of Princess Diana's baby after accepting some heavy wagers on whether she will have twins, a spokesman said Monday.

Diana, 22-year-old wife of Prince Charles, is expecting the couple's second child in September.

"We have now suspended the book in case someone, somewhere, knows more than we do," the spokesman said. "If she does have twins it will cost us over 10,000 pounds ($14,000)."

When the books closed, odds were 10-11 on a girl, and even on a boy.

Truman home to open despite fire

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. — The Harry S. Truman home will be open to public tours as scheduled May 15 despite a fire Sunday that heavily damaged a building that was to serve as a National Park Service headquarters, officials said Monday.

The park service made the decision Monday in the wake of a fire that caused heavy damage to the three-story Independence residence, Norman Reigle of the park service said. Fire officials said the blaze apparently was started by a torch used by a workman repairing the roof.

The park service had planned to occupy the building, which is within walking distance of the Truman home, within the next two weeks. Public restrooms were to have been located in the headquarters building.

British invest billions in U.S. economy

By The Associated Press

LONDON — Some all-American institutions, such as McDonald's hamburgers, Standard Oil Co. of Ohio and Travelodge motels, have a decidedly English accent these days.

Since Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government abolished currency controls in October 1979, British investment overseas has flourished and business executives see no end in sight with the American economy booming.

British industrial, banking and portfolio investments in the United States are valued at more than $115 billion, according to a compilation of 1980-1982 figures from the U.S. government, the Bank of England and London stockbrokers.

The British are now the leading major investors in U.S. corporations, according to 1982 figures compiled by the U.S. Commerce Department.

"Sounds like we're trying to get the colonies back," said Peter Warman, financial director of the British Car Auction group, which has invested $45 million in the United States since 1981 and become the second largest American auto auction chain.

"At the moment there is a tremendous interest of companies to invest in the United States," said Walter Goldsmith, chairman of the Institute of Directors, which represents top executives of major British corporations. "We are seeing a revolution in this country toward management being outward looking."

Rocco Forte, chief executive of Trusthouse Forte, which solely or jointly owns or franchises the 546-unit Travelodge chain and is expanding into luxury motels and exclusive hotels, said bigger British companies have to look overseas to expand.

"The United States is an unashamed capitalist system. The creation of wealth is not frowned upon. You go into the United States and everything is possible. In this country, in the past, people who made money were frowned on and even hounded and persecuted," he said.

"Mrs. Thatcher has changed the attitude toward business and I'm now very bullish on Britain... But on an international scale in the hotel market, the United States is very important. It's a growing economy and one wants to be in it for that reason," said Forte, whose American operations made $17.9 million profit in 1983.

Rival hoteliers Grand Metropolitan have also expanded into the U.S. market, buying the Intercontinental hotel chain from Pan American World Airways in 1981 for $500 million.

In the food industry, England's Northern Foods bought Keystone Foods of Philadelphia in 1982 for $60 million and became the biggest manufacturer of McDonald's hamburgers. Bluebird Inc., its first American venture, claims to be the largest producer of cooked, canned and smoked hams in the United States.

Hanson Trust got into the U.S. market 10 years ago and runs a $1.64 billion operation producing everything from shoes to fish meal, lace and Ball Park frankfurters. Its Volume Services group will be providing all the eats and drinks at the Summer Olympics in Los Angeles.

The British have hardly missed an industry. They're in mining, oil, chemicals, metals, machinery, textiles, lumber, paper, finance, insurance, real estate, agriculture, fishing and construction.

The U.S. Commerce Department's latest figures estimate British banking assets in the United States were estimated at $28.28 billion in 1980, the last year for which it had figures, and all other industries at $68.4 billion dollars in 1981.

On portfolio investments, estimates for 1982 by the Bank of England and brokers Phillips and Drew put investments made by unit trusts at $1.72 billion, by investment trusts at $4.75 billion and by pension funds at $12.15 billion. Unit trusts are roughly equivalent to U.S. mutual funds, and investment trusts are those in which investors hold shares in the fixed capital of a company.

The British are ranked first in their amount of direct investment in U.S. corporations, according to 1982 figures of the U.S. Commerce Department. Using the standard of investors who acquired at least 10 percent of an American company's value, the department said direct foreign investment in corporations totaled $101.8 billion, with the United Kingdom accounting for $23.3 billion, followed by the Netherlands at $21.4 billion and Canada at $9.8 billion.

State-owned British Petroleum probably has the biggest investment in the United States — a 53 percent interest in Sohio valued at about $8 billion plus about $2 billion mainly in oil exploration territory and mineral rights.

"We're in there because the States is the biggest energy market in the world... and one of the healthiest and most prosperous," said BP spokesman Peter Smedley.

Not every British investment across the Atlantic has been profitable.

Less than three years ago, London's Midland Bank paid $798 million for a 57 percent stake in California's Crocker Bank, America's 12th largest bank. Today, the investment is valued at $330 million. The California operations of Barclays and Lloyds banks also suffered million-dollar losses in 1981 and 1982.

Thatcher's government has urged businessmen to invest abroad, saying Britain should build up a portfolio of overseas assets whose proceeds will be especially valuable when North Sea oil and its vast revenues decline.

Bruce Evans, Kansas City, Mo., stalks opponents while closing in to attack their position during the game.

The Survival Game

The man is dressed in camouflage clothing. As he crouches in the underbrush, he sees his opponent on the edge of the clearing. He raises his pistol, taking careful aim. Keeping a bead on his target, he slowly squeezes off the round.

As the round strikes his opponent, a large stain spreads on the shirt above the heart; but he doesn't fall. Instead he raises his hands and says, "I'm hit. I'm out." That's because the stain is not blood, but paint. Also, these "soldiers" are not playing for real. Rather, they are participants in a game that has been gaining popularity during the last several years.

Two years ago, the National Survival Game incorporated and was granted a trademark for the game and copyrighted the rules.

"The National Survival Game is much like an adult version of tag, capture the flag and hide and seek," said Debra Dion, public relations director for the National Survival Game. "The rules state that a player must be 18 years old or older."

"Players can't get hurt. The pellets break on impact and we urge the players to wear safety goggles. The act of shooting is merely a marking of one's opponent."

Dion said the survival game stresses the sharing of an adventure.

"The game seems to bring about a bonding and camaraderie. There is a healthy physical exertion. By the end of the day the players are laughing, smiling and tired," Dion said. "Each player is placed on a team and after the game, everyone relives the adventure with the others."

Dion said she doesn't think the players have problems making the distinction between fantasy and realism.

"The game creates an illusion of fear. You know nothing can happen, but you're still scared," Dion said.

Although the players often wear camouflage clothing, which are the trappings of the military, Dion stressed that the game is not military-related at all.

Kurt Degenhardt, the Kansas City, Mo., dealer for the National Survival Game, said the game has been available to players there for about a year.

"Once people play, they're hooked," Degenhardt said. "Typically, the people I get out are 18 to 40 years old. And, it is coed. One weekend, some of the Johnson County sheriffs played their wives. All kinds of people play in all kinds of weather. The people are just fun-loving people who are not easily scared."

Degenhardt associated the game to a Sunday afternoon neighborhood softball game. The difference is that, unlike the softball game where the player spends a certain part of the game sitting on the bench or standing around in the field waiting for a play, the player of the survival game is constantly on the move, at his or her own pace.

Eight players on a recent Sunday afternoon weekend divided into two teams of four. One team defended their flag while the other team attacked and tried to capture the flag. Each game ended when the flag had been taken or when all the defenders had been eliminated.

Andy Partridge of Kansas City, Mo., played several times last summer. He convinced some of his friends to give it a try.

"I play because it's fun. Each game you play is different because of the people and the weather. This is not real serious. I got out of the Army about a year and a half ago. In the Army you do this for your life. Here, nobody's an expert. It's just a game," Partridge said.

Bruce Evans, also from Kansas City, Mo., said the excitement of the game made him decide to try it.

"When we were little kids we used to play war. This is just a grown-up version. I think it will be a real challenge," Evans said.

The action on this Sunday afternoon varied from slow-paced one-on-one to all four players rushing the opponents together. Some games had only a few shots fired before one player rushed in, grabbed the flag and ran back out again.

Other games lasted for a considerable period of time before all the defenders were eliminated. Some players emerged at the end of the afternoon's play with only one or two paint markings, while others had numerous yellow, white or blue spots on their bodies where they had been "shot."

"Headshots don't count and we discourage players from aiming for the head. But if someone falls or ducks when fired at, the paint pellet may strike them in the head," Degenhardt said.

The afternoon's play was peppered with such comments as "Come on guys, let's eliminate a couple of these guys" or "You want to surrender?" When one game ended halfway through the afternoon, one player flopped on the ground, saying "Time out, that's work."

At other times, team conversation consisted of hand signals so members could sneak up on the opponent. The next game might be more vocal: "Be mobile, we're moving too slow. Go in on them, cut them off!"

Cost for an afternoon of play varies. Degenhardt offers group rates which are several dollars an hour lower than the regular player rates.

The average cost for the players during this 1½ hours on Sunday was about $17. This included the rental of the pistol, paint pellets, the compressed air for the pistols and the hourly rate. The game is limited to a designated pasture area on the outskirts of Kansas City, Mo.

"This game appeals to the primal instincts of the players," Degenhardt said. "We're going to be around for a long time."

In another scene, two young men faced each other across a table. Between them was a map, miniature men and miniature military equipment. One man consulted a manual and then moved one of the pieces. Then the other consulted the manual and moved a piece. Both were intent, unaware of what was going on around them. One would think they were determining the fate of the world.

Actually these men are "wargaming." Wargames are board games which often are based on historical military battles.

"I've been wargaming for about 14 years," Capt. Robert Cole, assistant professor of military science, said. "I think along with all other wargamers, I started with Risk. The next game was Tactics. It was the first real board game to come out, and then the gaming companies started coming out. I really got into it when I met a couple others who played and it went from there."

"What I like to do is see if I can change the outcome. Wellington's Victory (one of the board games) is based on Napoleon's Waterloo. The French player can try to correct Napoleon's mistakes and change the historical outcome," Cole said.

"An appreciation and interest in history is helpful," he said, "because many of the games are based on actual historical battles."

Cole opens the Military Science Building on Wednesday nights so those interested have a place to play.

"Wednesday nights are not limited to cadets. We don't advertise and we're not an organized club. I just make a place available to those interested in playing."

"Some of the games help cadets in their military science courses because they are on a tactical level and can give the cadets an appreciation for tactics. They learn what can happen when you leave flanks weak or the rear undefended. It is an inexpensive and effective way to learn from mistakes. The strategy comes after you play for a while."

"Players don't realize until afterward how ruthless they've been. It's difficult to simulate the actual

Democrats battle for New York votes

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Walter Mondale, Gary Hart and the Rev. Jesse Jackson toured New York on Monday in a frantic, final day of campaigning for the state Democratic presidential primary — the biggest prize so far in the "red-hot" race for the party's nomination.

Mondale, the leader in the polls, visited several upstate cities, where he appealed for support on the basis of a "lifetime of public service...I'm not a guess-what candidate who just shows up on the scene today and asks for your votes," he said in an obvious, though unnamed reference to Hart.

Hart, also campaigning upstate, counter-attacked on "special interests" and campaign contributions. "We cannot elect a president to reform the campaign finance laws of this nation who goes into office beholden to those special interest groups who have financed his campaign on that basis," he said.

Mondale takes no campaign contributions from political action committees, but there are dozens of independent committees set up around the country that are supporting the former vice president and accepting thousands of dollars from political action committees.

Jackson, hoping for a strong turnout among black and Hispanic voters in New York City, campaigned in Harlem and Brooklyn.

"We will clean the garbage off our streets," he said. "We will take the handguns off the streets."

Jackson finished third in the public opinion polls, but he has been predicting, "We'll win."

All three contenders put in exhausting days — an effort justified by the big prize of delegates at stake in today's statewide primary election.

The 252 delegates are the biggest single-state cache so far in the election calendar. Only the California primary on June 5 will award more.

The primary comes at a time when Mondale is trying to complete a comeback in the Democratic presidential race. He campaigned as front-runner for more than a year, only to be defeated by Hart in the first primary — in New Hampshire on Feb. 28.

Hart quickly ran off a string of successes that had Mondale reeling.

But three weeks ago, Mondale won the Illinois primary and said his comeback was on track.

The former vice president has 731.25 delegates, Hart has 437 and Jackson has 93.5. Others account for 93.5, while there are 212.25 delegates uncommitted to any contender.

It takes 1,967 to win the nomination at the July party convention in San Francisco.

The most recent ABC News-Washington Post poll, based on interviews conducted Friday through Sunday, gave Mondale 41 percent in New York, Hart 30 percent and Jackson 22 percent. The survey of 326 likely voters carried a margin of error of 6 percentage points.

In addition to New York, Wisconsin will begin allocating 78 delegates at party caucuses on Saturday and the Pennsylvania primary next Tuesday will award 172 delegates.

That's more than 500 delegates up for grabs in the space of eight days, and the winner of New York would have momentum leading into the two other states.

"If we lose we're in trouble," Mondale said Sunday. "But if we win they're going to have to make a pretty good grab at our coattails to catch up with us." He made his remarks in a private meeting with teachers, but confirmed them for reporters on Monday.

The former vice president began his six-city tour of New York before 7 a.m. in Rochester, where he greeted unionized factory workers. "Need your help," he told workers entering the plant. "Remember me tomorrow."

"This primary hits at a time when at a time the campaigning is red hot," he said at an airport rally.

Hart is trying to regain the momentum that was his until three weeks ago.

Referring to the likely impact that the New York primary will have on future contests, he told a rally in Albany: "You can send a message to the people of Pennsylvania, the people of California and the inhabitant of the White House. And that is, we are ready to recapture our future and avoid this slip back into our past."

Hart has outspent Mondale by a considerable margin in New York, and in his tour of the state on Monday, he hit continuously on the theme of "special-interest money."

"You can be assured as of this date and throughout this nominating race that not one cent of political action committee money will go to this camp or any of its delegate slates, unlike my principal opponent," he said in Buffalo.

Jackson spent the day in a lengthy round of campaign appearances around New York City.

casualties," he said.

Barry Tyler, freshman in history, also is an ROTC cadet and a member of the Kansas National Guard at Clay Center.

"This game, Squad Leader, is simple because the rules are in a programmed text. It's a good game for squad action, even though it's World War II," Tyler said.

When asked about the popularity of survival games, these wargamers had ready opinions. Survival games are those which are played on an open field and the players actually choose teams and oppose each other.

"Those guys worry me," Cole said. "We call these (board games) wargames instead of conflict simulations. These other wargames get into the personal aspect of taking on an opponent. Board games are impersonal. It's only a game piece. It's not real."

"When I wargame, I use it to take out my frustrations," Tyler said.

"These people who shoot at each other with paint pellets are more interested in aggression. In a way, it's childishness, like a snowball fight. I have fun and enjoy it (wargames), but I don't get personally involved."

Women's golf squad to swing into action

By TOM FAY
Collegian Reporter

The K-State women's golf team swings into season-opening action Thursday at the Southwest Missouri State Invitational at Springfield.

"It's a young team. We're playing one freshman and four sophomores and the girls have improved over last year," Lila Levin, women's golf coach, said.

She said the team has a good chance of finishing higher than ever before in the Big Eight Conference.

"We had 10 girls in the fall and this semester we have seven, but I have two girls who are sitting out a year. They've transferred in from other schools and they have to wait a year before they're eligible," Levin said.

"We take five (women) to a tournament and keep the four best scores that we get," she said.

Levin said it would be nice if she had enough women to make a varsity and junior varsity team, but since there aren't enough she can't do that. Right now, practically everybody on the team gets to play.

Sophomore Terri Alexander will be playing in the No. 1 spot this spring, as she did in the spring and fall of 1983.

"She's (Alexander) been our low scorer all year," Levin said. "She's a smart golfer. She plans her shots and thinks well on the course. She faces the pressure well."

"One of the girls that played No. 2 last semester, freshman Nancy Borthwick, had to quit after the fall semester," Levin said.

The No. 2 golfer for this spring will be Anne Hegarty, who held the third spot in the fall. Sharry Dercher, a sophomore walk-on, and sophomore Paige Harrison will be playing in the third and fourth spots. The only freshman on the team, Shelley Sherman, the 4A state champion last year, will be filling the fifth position.

"I think our goal right now is to shoot in the mid-80s. The No. 1 and No. 2 players' averages for last year were in the high 80s and Nos. 3 and 4 four averaged in the low 90s," Levin said. "Our daily average for the team is 325. We've just got to work on taking 20 strokes off that average, then we'll be competitive."

Levin said she believes the women's team has improved overall and she's hoping to see continued steady improvement.

"We really need one girl who can score in the 70s to compete with other schools," Levin said.

She said the team gets quite a bit of practice in the fall because the weather's generally pretty good, but since there has been so much rain this spring, the team has been practicing in the Brandeberry Complex facility. The team uses the Manhattan Country Club course to practice outdoors.

On April 16-17, K-Staters will host their first invitational tournament at Manhattan Country Club, which will also be the site of the Big Eight Tournament in 1985.

Levin said the first invitational tournament is something to look forward to and it will give other schools the opportunity to come in and play the golf course before the 1985 Big Eight Tournament.

Overall, Levin said the main goal of the women's team in 1984 is to improve every time out.

Georgetown drops Houston

By The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Georgetown University's depth paid off in its first National Collegiate Athletic Association championship Monday night as freshman reserves Reggie Williams and Michael Graham led the way in an 84-75 victory over the University of Houston.

The dream matchup between the two 7-foot All-Americans, Georgetown's Patrick Ewing and Houston's Akeem Olajuwon, was never a key. Both were in foul trouble much of the game and played cautiously.

It marked the second straight time Coach Guy Lewis' Cougars lost the championship game, having been upset by North Carolina State University 54-52 last year. Houston also reached the Final Four in 1967, 1968 and 1981.

Georgetown's coach, John Thompson, and his players embraced joyfully as the final seconds ticked off, the memories of a runner-up finish to the University of North Carolina in the 1982 final wiped away.

On the Houston bench, Olajuwon and his Cougar teammates sobbed as time ran out.

Williams, a slender 6-foot-7 swingman, scored 13 of his 19 points in the second half and Graham, a burly 6-foot-9 forward, got 10 of his 14 points in the second half. The freshmen combined for 11 of Georgetown's 15 field goals after intermission.

Georgetown had three other players in double figures, led by David Wingate with 16 points. Most of his eight second-half points came on free-throws down the stretch. Michael Jackson had 11 points and Ewing added 10.

Sophomore guard Alvin Franklin, who kept Houston in the game after the intermission, was the top scorer with 21 points, followed by Michael Young with 18 and Olajuwon with 15.

The depth of the Hoyas, who finished 34-3, was never more evident than in the final 7:35 of the first half. Ewing was on the bench with two fouls, while Olajuwon picked up his second and third personals. Olajuwon picked up his fourth foul less than a minute into the second half, and played tentatively the rest of the way.

In winning their 11th straight game and 21st of the last 22, the second-ranked Hoyas culminated the rebuilding program that Thompson began when he took over a 3-23 club in 1972. The former backup center for the Boston Celtics has been criticized for some of his tactics on and off the court, but he said after the championship victory that "the bottom line is that my kids graduate."

"I don't have a problem with people criticizing us," he said. "I'm not concerned with my critics."

"I'm elated about winning the championship," Thompson continued, "but the hardest thing is to get here. Anyone can win one game."

For a while, it looked as if it would be Houston winning that elusive "one game."

The Cougars, 32-5, hit their first seven shots, including three field goals by Young and two by Reid Gettys to take a 14-6 lead. But Georgetown came back to tie it at 14 and again at 16 before taking the lead for good.

The Hoyas went into the locker room leading 40-30 at halftime behind a basket by Jackson and two by Wingate. They led by 12 twice early in the second half, the last at 44-32 before Olajuwon connected.

While the Nigerian All-American was sitting down for six minutes, Franklin picked up the slack with his jumper cutting the Georgetown margin to 51-47 with 13:56 to play. Franklin continued to drive the middle, but the shooting of Williams and Graham held off the Southwest Conference champions.

Houston three other times cut the margin to five points, the last on a field goal by Eric Dickens to make it 72-67. The Hoyas made good on the free-throw line down the stretch, as they snapped the Cougars' six-game winning streak.

Houston could take some consolation in rolling up 75 points against the Hoya defense, which had held opponents to an average of 57.4 points in previous games this season.

Georgetown, champions of the Big East, usually uses 10 players but had to do without standout defensive guard Gene Smith, who suffered a sprained right foot in a 53-40 victory over the University of Kentucky in the semifinals Saturday.

While Ewing he was sitting down to avoid further foul problems late in the first half, Olajuwon picked up his second and third personals before sitting out the last 42 seconds of the half. This marked the first time in four tournament games that Olajuwon did not play the entire game.

Ewing got his third personal with 12:08 to go and Georgetown leading 55-49. But he went out for only about a minute just before Franklin's two free throws cut the Houston deficit to 57-54.

Neither Ewing nor Olajuwon fouled out. Ewing, named the game's Most Outstanding Player, finished with three personals.

Joining Ewing on the all-tournament team were Houston's Franklin, Young and Olajuwon of Houston and Graham of Georgetown.

Ewing, Olajuwon confrontation just beginning

By The Associated Press

SEATTLE — The battle of big men Patrick Ewing of Georgetown University and Akeem Olajuwon of the University of Houston in Monday's night National Collegiate Athletic Association title game promised to be only the beginning of a classic rivalry, despite the fact that neither was a major factor in the contest in the Hoyas' 84-75 victory.

It also was a matchup between Georgetown, 33-3, and Houston, 32-4, at the Kingdome, but the first meeting between these bookend 7-foot junior All-Americans with similar, outstanding defensive abilities has captured the basketball world.

Perhaps no other college season has been so dominated by big men, and no other NCAA title game has pitted such a battle of big men.

Going into the game, Olajuwon held a slight statistical edge.

The Nigeria native, who has been playing organized basketball for only about five seasons, averaged 16.8 points on a 68 percent field goal mark, 13.6 rebounds and 5.7 blocks.

Ewing, a native of Jamaica who played high school ball in Cambridge, Mass., averaged 16.6 points on a 67 field goal percentage, 10.1 rebounds and 3.6 blocks.

Olajuwon outscored Ewing 15-10 in Monday's contest.

Both can be intimidating on defense, blocking shots, forcing the opposition to alter the arc of shots or pass off.

Ironically, the Ewing-Olajuwon rivalry is beginning as another is ending.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Elvin Hayes played against each other for the last time last week. Hayes, now with the Houston Rockets, is retiring from the pros after 16 seasons in the NBA.

Ewing-Olajuwon may eclipse that rivalry. They are almost identical players, where Hayes was more a true power forward and Alcindor a finesse center.

Aerial Wizards snare top spot in tournament

The K-State Frisbee club, the Aerial Wizards, went undefeated in five matches and captured first place in the April Fools' Festival tournament Saturday and Sunday in Lawrence.

Saturday the Wizards began their trek to their first-place finish by defeating the Bees from Kansas City, 13-7. The Bees were leading at halftime by a score of 7-4, but the Wizards came back in the second half and scored nine straight points to win the match.

In the next match, the Wizards were up against Fools Errand from Stillwater, Okla., and won 13-6.

The final game the Wizards played Saturday was a 13-7 victory over their archrival, the Wichita Gyration. The 13-7 win gave the Wizards first place in their pool and advancement to the semifinals.

Sunday the Wizards won in semifinal action against a team from Fayetteville, Ark., the Porker Platter Pushers, 15-7.

In the championship game the Wizards were again matched with the Gyration. In a time-consuming game that lasted 1½ hours, the Wizards finally won, 15-11.

"It was a hard-fought game with a lot of turnovers due to the windy conditions," Scott Dexter, player for the Wizards, said.

Dexter said Kirk Barrett played "inspirational defense" when he guarded Jeff Zimmerman, a former K-State student and a former player for the Wizards who now plays for the Gyration.

"He (Barrett) held the main disc (Frisbee) handler relatively intact keeping him out of the offense as much as possible," Dexter said. "Brad Dreese also played well, scoring a lot of points in his first tournament as an Aerial Wizard."

For winning the tournament, the Wizards received $225, and Dexter said the team plans to donate it to a charity.

The Aerial Wizards are a Frisbee team made up entirely of K-State students. The basic scoring procedure is that players try to pass the disc over the goal line for one point. Players cannot run with the Frisbee; it can only be moved by passing it from player to player. Seven players from each team are allowed on the field at one time.

Dexter said the game is a cross between basketball and soccer in its basic motions, because once the Frisbee is dropped or turned over, it automatically goes to the other team.

The Aerial Wizards participate in tournaments throughout the spring and the fall. They will participate in a local tournament April 14-15 sponsored by the L.P. Washburn Recreational Complex.

Struckhoff continues 'miracle' development

By JUDI WRIGHT
Staff Writer

In 1979, Deb Pihl came to K-State to run track and for first time to run cross country. Pihl, now a senior, has set many school and Big Eight Conference records in both sports since her arrival on campus.

K-State has another freshman sensation who is following in many of Pihl's footsteps and breaking some of her records before they can be recorded permanently in the record books.

Jacque Struckhoff, a native of Grinnell, has been improving by leaps and bounds since coming to K-State last fall after becoming the 1A state record holder in the half mile, mile and two-mile runs.

She began her college athletic career by participating in cross country — a sport that she too was attempting for the first time. In her first season as a cross country runner, she turned in fine performances and earned the position as No. 2 harrier for the women by the season's end.

This semester, Struckhoff has continued her improvement and has been a strong performer for the women's indoor and outdoor track squads.

During the indoor season, Struckhoff qualified for the National Collegiate Athletic Association finals in the second indoor meet — the University of Missouri Invitational on Jan. 28. Struckhoff had a qualifying time of 10:06.09 in the two-mile run. This time not only qualified her for the indoor nationals, but it also set a school record that had previously been held by Pihl with a time of 10:13.6 set in 1983. Struckhoff went on to better her record at the Big Eight indoor championships Feb. 24-25 with a second-place time of 10:03.58.

In the outdoor season, Struckhoff performed for the first time Saturday in the 3000-meter run and had a first-place finishing time of 9:32.1. She, along with the rest of the Wildcat track squads, has had a delayed start in the outdoor season due to meets being postponed because of rain.

"The weather definitely has its effects on the team's performances," Struckhoff said. "We're just hoping to start performing and have a good season."

Head Track Coach Steve Miller said he sees Pihl and Struckhoff as having some similarities and some differences when they both started at K-State.

"They both come from small 1A high schools and they came to K-State not having any experience in running cross country and ended up becoming strong performers," Miller said. "But, the difference between them includes the length of the distances they run. Deb runs the shorter long distances and Jacque the longer ones. Also, it took Deb two years to really start going and it's only taken Jacque two months."

"She (Struckhoff) is just kind of a 'miracle,'" Miller said. "I'd like to say we (the coaches) saw her perform and thought that she'd be great, but actually we saw her and thought she'd be just OK."

Miller said that Struckhoff didn't really strike the coaches as being impressive before she came to K-State because she had "no serious credentials for a college athlete."

"When we (the track coaches) started recruiting long distances runners, we saw the times that she had run off of nothing (very little serious training) so it was kind of a hunch," Miller said. "Now that she's been training all year, our hunch has been paid off."

Both Struckhoff and Miller agree that adjustments have been made since coming to K-State.

"Practices and training are a lot more intense at the college level than in high school. Up here (at K-State) it's all year long," Struckhoff said. "The athletes take it a lot more seriously because a lot is expected of them. In high school many of the girls would go out because it was just the thing to do."

Miller added that Struckhoff has had to make some mental adjustments, and adjustments with the rigors of training.

"Jacque had no problem physically adjusting because she started running really well. She was running faster in practices than she did her first couple of times competing," he said. "But, she had to make some mental adjustments like making herself realize that to run well in college she had to run 50 seconds faster than she had to when she won in high school."

For the future, Struckhoff has set her immediate goal as "reaching the NCAA outdoor finals in the 5000-meter run."

"I think Jacque can reach the outdoor finals in the 3000- and 5000-meter runs and be one of the top 10 finishers," Miller said. "I also look for her to score high in the Big Eight outdoor championships."

"We're just hoping to get through this season without Jacque getting any injuries. By the time she's a sophomore, Jacque will be something else," Miller said. "She's coming on really strong."

Reds clobber Mets in season opener

By The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Dave Parker delighted a hometown crowd with a two-run single, and Mario Soto baffled New York on seven hits as the Cincinnati Reds routed the Mets 8-1 Monday in the traditional National League opener.

Parker, a Cincinnati native who signed with the Reds as a free agent in the off-season, responded to a standing ovation with a bases-loaded single in his first at-bat as the Reds scored three runs in the first inning off Mike Torrez and claimed their ninth opening-day victory in 11 years.

Eddie Milner barely cleared the lowered eight-foot outfield wall with a three-run homer in the second inning that put the Reds ahead 6-1 and chased Torrez, 10-17 last season. Milner also had a single and a double in four at-bats to help the Reds win their first game under Manager Vern Riffe.

Soto, 17-10, a year ago with 242 strikeouts and league leading 18 complete games, fanned eight while going the distance in a match-up between the league's two worst teams of 1983.

The earliest NL opener in modern-day baseball history was played in a festive atmosphere before a crowd of 46,000 on a sunny and mild April afternoon.

Retired Reds catcher Johnny Bench led a traditional opening day parade through downtown and then was wheeled onto the field on a horse-drawn carriage. A fan from nearby Middletown, Ohio, chosen in a radio contest, threw out the ceremonial first pitch as elected officials and other dignitaries crowded the field.

Soto, who has never lost to the Mets in nine career appearances, made his third consecutive opening day start in style with two strikeouts in the first inning.

Cincinnati then struck for three runs in the first inning, loading the bases with none out on Gary Redus' double, Milner's single and a walk to Dave Concepcion.

Parker hit a ground single through a hole at second for two runs, and Concepcion scored when Dan Driessen hit into a fielder's choice.

Darryl Strawberry, last season's Rookie of the Year, homered leading off the second, but Cincinnati exploded for four more runs in the bottom of the inning.

Dann Bilardello doubled and Soto, trying to sacrifice, doubled a perfect bunt for a single. Milner then homered just inches over the right field wall, bringing on reliever Ed Lynch.

Concepcion led off the seventh with a homer off Craig Swan for Cincinnati's final run.

Rugby club records fourth-place finish

The K-State Rugby Club took fourth place last weekend at the All-Kansas Roundup at Emporia. The club opened Saturday with a 17-0 victory against the Pittsburgh State University Rugby Club, but dropped a 7-0 decision to the Kansas City Blues in its second game of the day.

After trouncing Emporia State University, 36-0, in its first game Sunday, K-State then was defeated by the Topeka Rugby Club, 4-0, in its final game of the tournament.

"Overall, the team played a good physical tournament," Kelly Coyan, club captain, said. "We got beat by Topeka — a team we beat in a tough game earlier — in a real close game."

Coyan said he was pleasantly surprised by the play of Mike Powers.

"Mike played well throughout the tournament," Coyan said. "We put him in a new position and he responded well."

Computer department to research automation in factories

By RHONDA BROWN
Collegian Reporter

General Dynamics has awarded a $35,000 grant to the Department of Computer Science for a state-of-the-art survey on flexible manufacturing systems (FMS).

"The project overall is an Air Force contract which General Dynamics got for building flexible manufacturing systems," Roger Hartley, assistant professor of computer science, said.

An FMS is a fully automated system. The goal of the researchers is to gather the information needed to design a factory or a manufacturing system that can operate without human intervention.

"There are many automated factories in Europe and Japan, but they're not completely automated. There's a lot of human intervention," Hartley said.

FMS research is a relatively new area, he said. There are only a handful of experiments like it being done in the United States.

"Initially the Air Force insisted that a survey be done of existing flexible manufacturing systems throughout the country and in Japan and Europe, if possible," he said.

"(Now) they also want a survey of available computer equipment and software for writing research systems."

There are four areas that are being surveyed, Virgil Wallentine, head of the computer science department, said.

The first area includes algorithms (programs) for controlling the robots, conveyor belts and information retrieval systems. An example would be numerical or computer-controlled machining systems, Wallentine said.

The second area involves deciding what real-time language is appropriate for controlling FMS systems, he said, adding that the appropriate real-time system is the third area.

"Real time means that you have to interact with the device in a certain time frame. If you don't, the value of control goes down immediately," Wallentine said. "If a robot is going down an aisle and you don't stop it in time, it will crash into something. So the value of your control goes down immediately."

The final area is the computer architecture and networks for controlling those devices.

The Department of Industrial Engineering also is helping with the research. Researchers in this area are working with the scheduling and control of the orders needed to manufacture on a FMS system.

"What we are going to do is...determine what knowledge and techniques that a human has that the computer must have to make rational decisions," Muthuraj Vaithianathan, assistant professor of industrial engineering, said.

"We've got to tell it (the system) the rules and the knowledge base; the experience has to be formulated as rules," Vaithianathan said. "So now the computer replaces the brain of the supervisor."

The computer would then be able to look at the rules and make a rational decision about how it is going to do what the human operator was doing, he said.

"In essence, it's a seed grant," Wallentine said of General Dynamics' gift. "We're hoping it will generate future projects that are more substantial," Wallentine said.

"Hopefully at the end of this small contract (grant), we can then go ahead and design the FMS system," Hartley said.

Professor criticizes food additive after purchasing stock in company

By The College Press Service

TEMPE, Ariz. — An Arizona State University nutrition professor who has publicly criticized the safety of the new artificial sweetener NutraSweet is fighting off an attack on his own credibility after it was discovered he purchased stock in the drug company that manufactures the sweetener.

ASU Professor Woodrow Monte has admitted he purchased "put" options in Searle Pharmaceuticals in anticipation of the stock price going down, prior to the airing of several CBS television reports on the safety hazards of the new food additive the drug company manufactures.

Monte, who has done research indicating the sweetener may decompose into harmful chemicals under certain circumstances, was one of the main critics of the new drug — generically known as aspartame — on the CBS programs.

"Put" options are orders to put a block of stock up for sale at a certain price within a set period of time.

Monte told the ASU student newspaper, the State Press, that he bought options on Searle stock several weeks before the program was broadcast in January 1984, anticipating the stock would lose value after the broadcast.

As it turns out, however, the Searle stock never plummeted the way Monte had speculated when he bought the options. Had the stock price dropped drastically, Monte would have made a handsome return on his $1,994 investment.

Instead, according to reports in the Wall Street Journal, Monte lost $1,224 in the stock options venture.

Now the Securities and Exchange Commission — the federal agency that regulates stock trading — is investigating Monte and several CBS employees for possibly trying to profit from changes in Searle stock prices brought on by the broadcast of their own information.

The controversy, of course, raises questions about the objectivity of Monte's academic research as well as about what would be illegal stock manipulation.

ASU administrators, however, said they aren't conducting any similar investigation on their own.

"I think the research he was discussing was probably legitimately a part of his research here," ASU Vice President Maureen Frye said.

"I've tried to keep the issue separate from the university," Monte said. "The NutraSweet research was my own work I did during the summer."

"But I knew Searle would get dirty and it would become a hot political issue," he said.

But such potential conflicts between professors' academic research and other outside activities are causing increasing problems and concerns at schools nationwide, sources said. In the 1980-1981 school year, for instance, 81 percent of 4,000 faculty members surveyed by the Chronicle of Higher Education reported they earned an average $5,700 a year from outside consulting and research activity.

Four out of five professors said they augmented their academic salaries with other professional work.

"I think, certainly, there are situations that exist where individual faculty members are conducting research on campus and their research is involved with corporations in which they have interests," Robert Kreiser, an associate with the American Association of University of Professors, said.

While it's not new for faculty members to mix their academic activities with outside business, he said the potential for abuse is greater now as more professors turn to outside jobs to supplement their income.

Moreover, schools themselves are teaming up with high tech businesses to help support research efforts and help attract companies to "research parks" adjoining campuses, opening the door for more academic and business conflicts of interest.

Mondale regains lead with New York win

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Walter F. Mondale won the New York presidential primary election Tuesday night and claimed the victory he needed to regain command over Sen. Gary Hart in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

"We had a very good day today in New York," Mondale said. "Apparently we did well across the board."

Based on polling-place interviews, the television networks said Hart was in a closer-than-expected contest for second place with the Rev.

Jesse Jackson.

Jackson was polling exceptionally well in New York City, apparently winning about 80 percent of the black vote.

Some 252 convention delegates were at stake — the biggest single-state prize so far and, next to California, the largest of the year.

"In New York, they (the Hart campaign) spent maybe three times, maybe four times as much money as we did," Mondale said. "But Americans weren't looking at that. Citizens of New York were asking that key question (who would make a better president), and I think that's why we won."

With 73 percent of the vote in, it was:

Mondale, 443,159 or 48 percent.

Hart, 283,162, 31 percent.

Jackson, 173,087, 19 percent.

The rest was scattered among Democratic dropouts.

Wisconsin Democrats held a "beauty contest" primary Tuesday, in advance of next Saturday's caucuses when 78 convention delegates are at stake. With 17 percent of the vote in, Mondale and Hart each had 43 percent of the vote.

Ninety-three percent of the Wisconsin voters voted and became the aggressor in the race, moving on to defeat Hart in the Illinois primary two weeks ago and taking aim in New York.

Hart said New York was not that critical to his chances for the nomination, and he already was looking ahead to Pennsylvania.

But New York is the kind of state that a Democrat must carry to defeat President Reagan next fall, and the Mondale victory would blunt Hart's claim that only he can capture the White House for the Democrats.

While there are still hundreds of delegates to be chosen, each state that Mondale wins makes it that much more difficult for Hart.

Mondale himself said the New York primary was critical to his own chances.

"If we lose, we're in trouble. But if we win, they're going to have to make a pretty good grab at our coat-tails to catch up," was his assessment.

Hart said the state was less critical to his "new ideas" candidacy and demonstrated with an afternoon of campaigning and fund raising in Philadelphia that he already is looking ahead.

Researcher praises Nicaraguan reform

By BRAD STUCKY
Collegian Reporter

Using an "idle lands to working hands" policy, the Sandinista government has redistributed former state land to Nicaraguan peasants, said Joseph Collins, researcher and spokesman for world hunger.

Collins spoke on "What Difference Could a Revolution Make?" in the Union Forum Hall in this semester's last Lou Douglas Lecture on Public Affairs. He is a co-founder with Frances Moore-Lappe of The Institute for Food and Development Policy and author of several books on food and farming in post-revolution Nicaragua.

He also serves as an unpaid adviser to the Sandinista government on agricultural policies.

The main objective of the new land reforms is to hand over land to the peasants and farmers, the majority of whom worked previously for landowners or rented land, Collins said. These people could usually barely support themselves.

The agrarian reforms of the Sandinistas are not like those of El Salvador, which have been made by the Washington administration in the United States. The pressure on Nicaragua's new government from peasants, commercial producers and Washington worked to make that country's leaders cautious. The new land plans, which took two years to fully implement, allow the farmers concessions unheard of during Somoza's regime, Collins said.

"With the new agrarian reform laws, property rights are protected, and there is no ceiling on the amount of land a farmer can own," he said.

"There is an obligation to produce. If the land is not productive, the landowner can be challenged and the land legally expropriated. If the land is taken, the individual will get a payment. If it is found that the farmer has abandoned the farm or is sabotaging the economy, the land will be taken away and no payment granted."

Joseph Collins

Since the new government came into power, about 21 acres per family have been distributed. About half of the beneficiaries are organizing cooperatives; the other half are family farms. More than 630 of the state farms were turned over to the peasants.

The fact that land has been redistributed to peasants provides a rebuttal to the popular argument that Nicaragua is Communist, Collins said, because most of the land in the Soviet Union and Cuba is state-owned.

The war with the U.S.-backed contras has not impeded the land distribution; rather, it has accelerated it.

Collins said the Nicaraguan government believes if the farmers actually have land rather than working a tyrant landowner's, they will be more apt to defend it, he said.

Land-related reforms include adult education programs to teach farmers basic skills such as book-keeping. This is part of the "literacy crusade" which has set the revolution apart from others. The farmers also have the ability to organize

Sen. Ed Reilly, R-Leavenworth, reads a news article proclaiming the Senate would vote on the drinking age bill Tuesday.

Senate delays voting on drinking-age bill

From Staff and Wire Reports

The Kansas Senate continued Tuesday to delay consideration of a bill to raise the legal age for drinking 3.2 percent beer in Kansas from 18 to 19.

Speculation was that Senate leaders did not yet feel they had enough votes to ensure passage of the bill, but Majority Leader Robert Talkington, R-Iola, denied that assertion and said the bill was delayed to keep other legislation from getting backed up behind it.

Senate President Ross Doyen,

R-Concordia, said in a late statement Tuesday that the measure will be debated on the Senate floor Wednesday.

Kansas Attorney General Robert Stephan has been looking into allegations made by Sens. Richard Gannon, D-Goodland, and Ed Reilly, R-Leavenworth, that some of the six members of conference committee, which reached agreement on the drinking age bill last week, held unannounced meetings in violation of the state's Open Meeting Act.

Staff/Jeff Taylor

Students gathered in the gallery of the Senate chambers Tuesday as legislators once again passed over the drinking age bill.

Discussion to focus on skirmishes

Incidents spur naval talks

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A U.S. Navy delegation will meet with Soviet admirals in Moscow next month for discussions aimed at heading off potentially explosive incidents at sea between their powerful navies, Defense Department officials said Tuesday.

High on the Moscow agenda will be the incident Monday in which the 37,000-ton Soviet carrier Minsk fired eight signal flares at the 3,900-ton U.S. frigate Harold Holt in the South China Sea.

The flares which struck the Holt did not cause structural damage to the frigate or injuries to its crew, said these officials, who spoke only on condition that they not be identified.

Reagan argues Congress' weapon mandate

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, challenging a congressional arms control mandate, says the United States should push ahead with developing an arsenal of satellite-killer weapons and not negotiate restrictions on them with the Soviet Union.

In a report sent to Congress Monday Reagan said the Soviets deployed an anti-satellite system of unknown dimensions and are trying to keep an advantage over the

Also to be discussed will be the March 21 collision in the Sea of Japan between a Soviet nuclear-powered attack submarine and the U.S. aircraft carrier Kitty Hawk. The collision caused minor damage to the carrier but sent the Soviet submarine limping home to Vladivostok at the end of a salvage ship's towline.

In November, a minor collision involving a U.S. destroyer and a Soviet frigate took place in the Arabian Sea.

The meeting in May had been scheduled for some time under a 1972 U.S.-Soviet agreement intended to end naval confrontations between the two countries. Under that accord, senior U.S. and Soviet naval officers meet every year, alternating between Washington and Moscow, in a process that Navy Secretary John Lehman said last June had worked "very successfully" in reducing incidents around the world.

The three incidents have raised concerns in some quarters that Soviet-American political tensions might be resulting in a return to the sort of naval confrontations that marked the Cold War years.

One factor that may contribute to a resurgence of such incidents is that each navy is shadowing the other's maneuvers. Some U.S. Navy officials noted that the Soviet navy has become increasingly active in the Pacific in recent years, with its fleet there growing as the Soviets extend their global sea reach.

The Navy officially said little about the latest incident, which occurred in daylight Monday.

Reagan announced Monday — ready to negotiate a comprehensive ban of such weaponry with the Soviets.

Meanwhile, the Reagan administration today gave a cautiously optimistic assessment of the first round of talks between the East and the West in the Stockholm conference on security in Europe.

Ambassador James Goodby, head of the U.S. delegation, said all the participants spoke favorably about instituting procedures aimed at averting chances for accidental war.

City approves office for consulting firm

By WAYNE PRICE
Staff Writer

Manhattan City Commissioners last night authorized Mayor Wanda Fateley and City Clerk Gregg Gibson to sign a lease with the owners of a building at 221½ Poyntz St. to be used as a relocation office for the Vector Corp. consulting firm.

The on-site redevelopment relocation office, formerly occupied by H&R Block, would be leased to the city for $250 per month plus utilities and a $250 deposit fee.

Commissioner Suzanne Lindamood, the only commissioner who voted against the measure, wanted to know why Vector couldn't operate out of City Hall because its contract is contingent on the approval of mall developer Forest City Enterprises' contract.

Mayor Wanda Fateley shared a similar concern.

"My concern is, will we be in a position by the end of April to extend our services with Vector?" Fateley asked.

Lindamood also asked why Vector couldn't go to the individual businesses to do its preliminary work.

Commissioner Dave Fiser said that giving the firm an office would provide those businesses with more privacy.

City Manager Don Harmon said it has been his experience in working with appraisers, review appraisers and negotiators that such an office would be necessary.

When Lindamood asked whether office space is in the contract of the hired appraisers, and if not, would the city be reimbursed if it was used by them, Harmon said it was not in the appraiser's contract to provide office space.

Commissioners agreed to have the city become a member of Big Lakes Certified Development Corp. The organization provides financial assistance to small businesses being dislocated. Membership costs $50 and the commission would have to appoint a voting member. Harmon suggested the commission wait to appoint that person.

Commissioners also approved four measures which established the city's policy concerning open records.

A pay classification system based on the Job Evaluation and Base Compensation Study done in February by Hay Associates also was adopted.

India's first spaceman to use yoga

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — India's first spaceman soared into orbit Tuesday aboard a Soviet rocket, carrying an Indian flag and a handful of his native soil for an eight-day mission in which he will attempt to use the ancient art of yoga to combat space sickness.

Rakesh Sharma, 35, and two Soviet cosmonauts, commander Yuri V. Malyshev, 42, and Gennadi M. Strekalov, 43, blasted off aboard the Soyuz T-11 toward a rendezvous Wednesday with the orbiting Soviet space laboratory Salyut 7.

Before the launch, which was broadcast live for only the third time in Soviet history, Sharma said it was "a great honor" to be the first Indian in space. He is the second man from a non-Soviet bloc nation to fly into space aboard a Soviet rocket.

The three cosmonauts lifted off as scheduled from the Soviet space center at Baikonur.

As usual, foreign reporters, including Indians, were banned from the center. But the rare live television coverage showed the white rocket with its fiery tail roaring into the purple evening sky.

A report by the official Tass news agency said the ship was on course, with all systems functioning normal.

Searchers find Nichols cornerstone

A nine-month search for the 1910 cornerstone of Nichols Hall ended this week in the middle of campus.

University archivist Anthony Crawford uncovered the stone in a locked storage area on the top floor of Farrell Library. The cornerstone was wrapped and concealed by other archival items.

The cornerstone, which measures 19 inches high, 30 inches long and 8 inches thick, will be remounted in the building.

Video shows Landon Lecturer

A videotape of Hodding Carter's most recent edition of "Inside Story" is being shown four times daily in Kedzie Library today and Thursday.

Showing times are 9:25 a.m., 10:45 a.m., 1:25 p.m. and 2:25 p.m. Carter will deliver a Landon Lecture at 10:30 a.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium.

"Inside Story" reports weekly on the media. The 30-minute program is entitled "Timberman: the News from Argentina" and describes the return of press freedom to Argentina after 40 years of censorship and the death of more than 100 journalists.

Scientists research antibodies

Scientists at K-State are joining forces with Monoclonal Production International Inc. for research on a new method of monoclonal antibody production.

Monoclonal antibodies are a product of special genetic engineering technology that have application in basic research, animal health and human medicine.

Studies by G. William Fortner, assistant professor in biology, have been successful in determining if cell hybridomas, a combination of antibody-producing cells and tumor cells, can survive and produce antibodies in the uterine environment of domesticated animals.

Fortner is an immunologist who educated the antibody-producing cells to be adapted to the uterine environment and monitored cell growth and antibody production in this study.

The research was made possible by a combined effort between the Division of Biology and the College of Veterinary Medicine.

SCIENCE writer to speak Friday

Gina Kolata, writer for SCIENCE journal, will speak at 4 p.m. Friday in Ackert 221.

Her topic is "Reporting for SCIENCE: The problem of finding stories and reporting them accurately."

Kolata has a bachelor's degree in microbiology and was a graduate student in molecular biology at Massachusetts Institute of Technology before receiving a master's degree in applied mathematics from the University of Maryland.

Before becoming a writer, she was a copy editor and selector of reviewers for manuscripts sent to SCIENCE. She has also written free-lance articles for numerous publications and has co-authored two books on heart disease and the effects of high blood pressure.

Design students to show garments

Original designs will be displayed by apparel design students at a "Design Portfolio '84" show Sunday at the Manhattan Holiday Inn.

The show, in the Regency Ballroom, will spotlight special collections by senior design students. Entries will be judged by fashion professionals, and there will be awards in several categories. Many of the garments will be offered for sale after the show.

Is second-hand smoke really physically harmful to others?

According to a publication distributed by the American Lung Association, researchers have calculated that two-thirds of the smoke from a burning cigarette goes into the environment. Even more smoke is dispersed by cigars and pipes.

Two types of smoke affect the non-smoker. Mainstream smoke, which is exhaled by the smoker and sidestream smoke, which goes directly into the air from the burning end.

Sidestream smoke has higher concentrations of noxious compounds than mainstream smoke. Some studies comparing the two types of smoke show that in sidestream smoke there is twice as much tar and nicotine, three times more 3-4 benzpyrene, a suspected carcinogen, and five times more carbon monoxide, which robs the blood of oxygen.

One study shows that after 30 minutes in a smoke-filled room, the non-smoker experiences an increase in the carbon monoxide level in his blood, higher blood pressure and a faster heartbeat.

The Federal Air Quality Standards' outside air limit for carbon monoxide is an average of nine parts per million (ppm). Research shows the amount of carbon monoxide generated by smoking seven cigarettes in one hour in a ventilated room is 20 ppm. Smoking 10 cigarettes in an enclosed car shot the carbon monoxide level up to 90 ppm, and the carbon monoxide level of smokers and non-smokers in the car doubled.

Some studies indicate that people with these high levels of carbon monoxide in the blood cannot distinguish relative brightness, lose some ability to judge time intervals and take longer to respond to taillights. Impaired performance on some psychomotor tests has also been shown. These levels of carbon monoxide in the blood also create physiologic stress in heart patients and the lack of oxygen can add distress for people who already have lung disease.

Officials hope to reverse enrollment trends

By TONA TURNER
Collegian Reporter

Although an overall trend of declining enrollment has faced the University during the past two years, individual college enrollments vary.

The University has been a growing institution for 125 years, but during the past two years, enrollment has dropped by approximately 1,500 students. Included in that figure is the 1,027 enrollment decrease in 1983.

K-State administrators agree that the main factors accounting for the enrollment decline are economic situations, fewer job opportunities in certain fields of study and fewer high school students (potential college students) than there have been in the past 10 years.

Nearly every college at K-State doubled its enrollment from 1963 to 1973. However, three of the seven suffered substantial losses from 1973 to 1978 and three others suffered losses from 1978 to 1983.

Enrollment in the College of Home Economics has consistently declined since 1973, dropping a total of 474 students. Current enrollment is 921 students.

Barbara Stowe, dean of the college, said the gradual increase in professional opportunities for women has accounted for most of their enrollment decline.

"More women are broadening their fields of study than ever before. Many...are entering law school," Stowe said.

But she said she expects the downward trend to reverse next fall. "Preliminary figures look very good as far as upcoming enrollment goes," she said. "Better salaries for careers in home economics are now available."

Students' interest in careers in the hotel and motel business has drastically increased. Interior design and textiles, family and child development and dietetic fields also are on an upward trend, she said.

To turn enrollment trends up again, the College of Home Economics has taken many measures of recruiting. Stowe said the college offers a dean's scholarship and 15 $1,000 scholarships every year to outstanding students.

College ambassadors, faculty members and an alumni network contact individual high school students as a step in recruitment.

Stowe said the addition of computer laboratories within the past six months and improvements in food service and restaurant laboratories will also help attract more students.

The College of Agriculture increased its enrollment by 645 students from 1973 to 1978, yet suffered a loss of 522 students from 1978 to 1983. Current enrollment is 654 students.

John Dunbar, dean of the College of Agriculture, said he only hopes next fall's enrollment will equal this year's enrollment.

Dunbar said the decline of enrollment in agriculture is probably due to the lower birthrate for this generation and the fact that agriculture-related income has not been as good as in other fields. He added, however, that there is a good market for agriculture graduates, citing an 80 percent placement rate.

The agriculture college has 87 ambassadors who aid in recruiting high school students throughout the state, Dunbar said.

Agricultural buildings such as Throckmorton Hall, Green Hall Phase 2 and the renovation of Weber Hall should also serve as an attraction to more students, Dunbar said.

The College of Architecture and Design followed the same pattern as the college of agriculture and uses similar recruiting techniques. Its enrollment from 1973 to 1978 increased by 124 students and from 1978 to 1983 decreased by 195 students. Enrollment is now 784, the smallest college on campus next to the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Enrollment trends in the College of Arts and Sciences have had an opposite trend. Enrollment numbers decreased from 1973 to 1978 by 1,412 students and increased from 1978 to 1983 by 387 students. However, college enrollment dropped 113 students again in 1983. Current enrollment is 4,357, making it the largest college on campus.

Many improvements in the arts and sciences buildings and equipment occurred in the past that attracted many students, but "nothing enormous has happened in the last five years to make any significant changes in enrollment," Kent Cartwright, assistant dean of arts and sciences, said. "Renovation of Nichols Hall will help our college once it gets underway," he said.

Recruitment is of great interest to the arts and sciences college, Cartwright said. Some of the recruiting activities include sponsoring discovery days with high schools, participation in the All-University Open House, offering scholarships and individual letter mailings.

The College of Business Administration has had a constant increase in enrollment. Between 1973 and 1978, the college increased by 425 students and increased again from 1978 to 1983 by 681 students.

Thomas Brown, assistant dean of business administration, said the main reason for this continued increase is the constant rise in the job market for business students. Marketing, accounting and financing departments currently have high enrollments due to job demands, Brown said.

Statistics show the largest percent of the increase in enrollment has been women, Brown said.

In regard to recruiting measures, the college sends letters to selected high school students but does not concentrate on recruiting methods.

"I think they have very little impact," Brown said. "It's the strength of the job market that counts and it's good (for business students)."

The College of Education also has had a constant increase in enrollment. Between 1973 and 1978, the college increased by 220 students and by 187 students between 1978 and 1983. Current enrollment in the college is 982.

Recruitment is not a big issue in the college of education.

"We just go with the University open house system," Jordan Utsey, dean of education, said. "We have a large number of transfer students from junior colleges, so we keep an eye out for them."

Utsey said students are attracted to the College of Education because of its expanded technology available, especially microcomputers; better faculty; and the fact that the departments moved into a new building (Bluemont Hall) in 1981.

"It gives us a new identity," he said.

The College of Engineering increased enrollment from 1973 to 1978 by 896 students and increased overall from 1978 to 1983 by 913 students, including last year's decrease of 132 students. Current enrollment is 2,466 students.

Recruiting is all-important and the college puts forth a super effort, John Dollar, assistant dean of engineering, said. "We keep at it all the time."

Dollar said the engineering college has 150 ambassadors who visit their own high schools and community colleges, giving demonstrations and talks about K-State.

Other than "hard" recruitment, Dollar said the increase in enrollment is due to job opportunities and technological advancements.

Durand Hall, the newest facility on campus, has more than $1 million worth of new equipment invested in it, Dollar said. Most of it is in computer systems.

Dollar said he is unsure of what the enrollment in engineering would be next fall, but said, "We're probably doing about as much as we can do."

The College of Veterinary Medicine has increased in enrollment every year also and is now educating 418 students.

Donald Trotter, dean of veterinary medicine, said recruiting is not a problem in the college because it only takes students from the arts and sciences college who want to pursue a degree in veterinary medicine.

unions and have an impact on future policy decisions, Collins said.

The impact of the revolution five years ago on food production has been helpful. With their own land and guaranteed prices, farmers have been able to produce much more than in pre-revolution days.

"Food production during 1981-1982 reached pre-revolution levels. Export crops have been doing well. During 1982-1983 coffee set a record in the history of Nicaragua. There have been better yields of sugar," he said.

Utech said the council's attitude was what upset him most. "They let people who run for office decide to invalidate the election," he said. "I knew what the decision would be within two minutes of when I went in there." They (council members) were a highly biased party, he said.

"My feeling is that the other candidates just took things in stride and did not campaign very hard," he said. "We campaigned pretty hard within our department (the Department of Engineering Technology)."

Utech said he intends to see if the decision can be appealed to the Student Tribunal.

"There has been a negative impact on some crops this year as a result of the 'Mr. Reagan's war' due to the intense fighting in some agricultural areas. The defense of Nicaragua also calls a lot of farmers away," he said.

There is a popular hatred of the contras by the peasants, Collins said. The farmers say they are the same as Somoza.

The contras' mining of Nicaraguan ports has caused international shippers to blacklist the country. The fact that the United States is blockading Nicaragua is an act of war in an undeclared war, he said.

Overall, there have been improvements in the standard of living. Formally, the most common cause of peasant death was diarrhea as a result of malnutrition.

There are fewer hungry people than there were five years ago, something Collins said he wishes he could see in the United States.

Engineers veto new council

By MIKE TURNER
Government Editor

The Engineering Student Council voted overwhelmingly at a special meeting Monday to invalidate the College of Engineering's Feb. 28-29 election of officers for next year.

There were petitions with about 300 signatures calling for invalidation of the elections, so it was decided to take the issue to the council, said Diane Johnson, current engineering council president and senior in electrical engineering.

Johnson attributed the invalidation to several administrative problems with the elections.

Max Martin, engineering council elections chairman and senior in construction science, said, "The elections were run this year like in all past years. This year there came up a dispute that IDs weren't being checked consistently, people were voting twice and there was electioneering (campaigning) going on around the (voting) tables."

At one time students were passing a sheet of paper down the table saying to vote for certain individuals, he said. One of the voting instruction sheets also included incorrect wrong information.

Some of the returns were extremely close, Martin said. With about 350 total votes cast, one person won a position by two votes and another won by seven votes.

Johnson said several candidates had not met the requirements to run for office. Candidates for an officer position must submit a petition with 50 signatures of supporters; candidates for sophomore representatives must submit a petition with 25 signatures, she said.

Candidates must also attend an Engineering Student Council meeting prior to becoming an official candidate, Martin said. Most of the election winners had not done so.

The council voted to hold a new election April 10-11 in the Union, Johnson said. The original election was held in Durland and Seaton halls. Times for the new election are not yet established.

The new election will have more stringent guidelines, Martin said. The elections will be much like the student body general elections, in that voters will have to give their signatures and social security numbers and no campaigning will be allowed within 50 feet of the polling booths, he said.

The council also will enforce the rules regarding candidates' eligibility, Martin said.

"The elections were not declared invalid because of any candidate, but because of the election procedures," he said. "Current guidelines were not enforced, but the new guidelines will be followed."

Council president-elect David Utech, junior in engineering technology, said he does not think the council's action was fair.

"It's the council's responsibility to see that people check IDs," he said. Only one person said they did not check IDs regularly, and two others said they did not check them only occasionally, he said.

Utech said the council's attitude was what upset him most. "They let people who run for office decide to invalidate the election," he said. "I knew what the decision would be within two minutes of when I went in there." They (council members) were a highly biased party, he said.

"My feeling is that the other candidates just took things in stride and did not campaign very hard," he said. "We campaigned pretty hard within our department (the Department of Engineering Technology)."

Utech said he intends to see if the decision can be appealed to the Student Tribunal.

Rapist's defense furthers abuse...

Riley County District Judge Jerry Mershon recently released convicted rapist Calvin Holland on probation and required that he spend at least 30 days in inpatient alcoholism treatment. Holland had served 3½ months of an eight- to 20-year sentence for rape.

Public outcry was tremendous, and a forum was held Monday night at the Ecumenical Christian Ministries Center to discuss the implications of Holland's altered sentence with Mershon and Riley County Attorney Colt Knutson.

Mershon tried to explain his reasoning behind the altered sentence. The judge said he believed the victim would not benefit from Holland's incarceration, especially when considering factors such as Holland's previously clean record and "personal attributes." Mershon said he considered this case (as he said all cases should be considered) on its individual characteristics. Therefore, he decided Holland could best be rehabilitated outside of prison walls.

Mershon's reasoning does have some merit. Considering the current condition of prisons, Holland's reform might have been lost in the adjustment to prison life.

However, this man is not a juvenile delinquent who took his daddy's car out on a Saturday night and got himself in "a little trouble." This is a man who raped a woman, and despite what Holland's attorney, Michael Moroney, might maintain, the guilt is Holland's alone and should not be shoved onto the shoulders of the victim. Holland raped a woman and his sentence was in accordance with his crime.

Moroney also denied the rape was Holland's fault. He said the victim "enticed Calvin Holland into the situation."

As in most rape cases in today's courts, the woman is persecuted for being the unwilling victim of a violent crime. The defense in the New Bedford, Mass., gang-rape trial used this tactic, and the defense in the Manhattan, Kan., trial of Calvin Holland repeated such abuse. It's amazing what distance discrimination can span.

Karen Bellus, for the editorial board

...wife faces moral struggle

Monday night's rape forum proved effective in changing the attitudes toward rape of Riley County District Judge Jerry Mershon and Riley County Attorney Colt Knutson. The outcry of many citizens in response to particular comments by Mershon and Knutson emphasized the need for a better understanding of the consequences of rape.

More than 200 people attended out of concern for community treatment of rapists and their victims. But one person there may have had difficulty interpreting the severity of the crime: the wife of the convicted rapist Calvin Holland. She attended the forum with defense attorney Michael Moroney.

In a brief person-to-person argument with a citizen who questioned Holland's attitude toward women, Mrs. Holland defended her husband, saying that in 13 years of marriage, Holland had never treated her as he had the rape victim. She seemed to share Moroney's belief that Holland was unjustly tried and convicted of the rape.

Maybe Mrs. Holland's attitude would change if she were a rape victim herself. Then again, she might have conflicting feelings about the incident. As a wife, she has chosen to stand behind her husband, even in view of his infidelity. But as a woman, she should feel hurt and humiliated that such violent injustice has been done to another woman. She should be aware that every woman, herself included, is a potential rape victim.

Mrs. Holland may indeed struggle with this conflict between her marital role and the consequences of being female. But her defensive attitude is steered in the wrong direction. Promoting more effective treatment of rapists and changing degrading attitudes toward women is paramount to defending individual interests in a particular rape case.

Engineering council elections in dispute

Editor,

In almost 20 years of teaching, I've never felt the need to discuss a problem with the student newspaper, but this appears to be the time. About a month ago the College of Engineering held an election for the officer positions on their student council. The students in engineering technology decided they would put forth a slate of candidates. They asked instructors to announce the elections in class and some instructors even let students leave class to vote. The result was that three of the four won and the fourth tied. You would think congratulations would be in order, but there is more to the story.

The current council members, which included the defeated candidates, didn't like the results. They started circulating a petition to have a new election. On what basis? One can't openly state that your only reason was that it didn't turn out as you had hoped. So the reasons were that electioneering had taken place, the faculty actions were unethical and IDs were not carefully checked.

Now what impartial group will sit in judgment on these petitions? Why, the current council, complete with defeated candidates. Both council faculty advisers stated, either during the meeting called to discuss the petition or after, that the faculty action not only was not unethical, but was desired. Apparently the petitioners even felt that way, for at least one instructor formally presented the petition in class.

All other charges about the election related directly or indirectly to mistakes the election board had made. These people too were council members. In the end, no one contended that any of the winners or faculty had done anything inappropriate.

Faculty adviser Assistant Dean John Dollar assured me that what was obviously an attempt by a few to have it their way would not be allowed to continue and no new election would be called. But he felt that a meeting was appropriate to discuss the matter.

At that meeting, council president Diane Johnson outlined the procedure that would be followed. A point-by-point discussion of the items raised by their petition would be discussed, followed by a general discussion of the whole. Instead, the question was called during the second item with no further discussion allowed. Need I indicate how this self-serving group voted?

And how about Dollar? Why, he was totally silent until after the vote. Then he admonished the group for what was in his words an anti-engineering technology position and action, but did nothing to stop it.

The other council faculty adviser, Hermann Donnert, agreed after the meeting with Dollar's statement, and added that he probably should have spoken up.

Dollar added this action leaves a stigma on the election winners that they had participated in some sort of wrong-doing, and all agreed they had not.

In the end, any mistakes were placed at the door of the council members who ran the election, and in Donnert's words, these errors were no worse than in previous elections. Dollar took no action, and the winners are left to decide whether to run again in a situation in which they cannot hope to win.

E.T. students are learning what blacks have known for a long time. You can be allowed to ride in the front of the bus, but that doesn't guarantee equality. Thank you, Dollar and Johnson, for making it clear this sort of activity is condoned in the College of Engineering. Only engineering Dean Donald Rathbone remains to correct this injustice. The students and faculty of the Department of Engineering Technology will be waiting to see what action he will take.

Public forum enhances perceptions of rape

Editor,

Monday night I attended the public forum on rape to learn more about this ruling and to express my disapproval.

Twelve hours later I am writing this as an expression of how I feel, since I seem to be unable to let go of this incredible ethical issue that has a vise-like grip on my mind and heart. To say this experience was very disturbing for me barely approximates my sentiments.

So many valid issues were raised to which I cannot even identify where I stand that I am honestly thankful this decision was not mine. I found my own position on the issue changing according to who the speaker was. Until the end of the forum and after a night spent thinking and dreaming about it, I now know that based upon the facts presented Monday night, I am not in agreement with Judge Jerry Mershon's ruling. I discovered, during the brief periods I did agree with his ruling, I was basing my reasoning upon facts or beliefs I later found to be incorrect.

One idea I have since abandoned is that the duration of the attack and the brutality with which it occurred should be taken into account in sentencing the rapist. After all, isn't an armed man who attacks a woman he doesn't know and rapes and mutilates her for many hours to be more feared, more dangerous to society, than that man who merely refuses to accept a "no" from his date and overpowers her by sheer force with no weapon and then quickly disappears?

One woman present at the forum, a rape survivor herself, made a very valuable contribution to my understanding of the situation. She shared with the group that after the initial realization that it was happening to her, there was absolutely nothing else the rapist could do to hurt her more, and for months afterward she wished he had killed her so she wouldn't feel the pain.

If the whole idea of punishment in our society is to be a reflection of what impact a particular crime has upon society's members, than certainly we must acknowledge a violent rape of long duration and a rape involving only forced brief intercourse as equal crimes. Only those people who have not experienced a rape could possibly perceive otherwise. As Dr. Bristow pointed out, the only correlation between the rape experience and the ensuing emotional trauma the victim suffers is whether or not the victim feared for her life at the time of the rape.

I was temporarily moved by Mershon's opinion that Holland had already suffered for his crime and felt remorse. I was further swayed by the realization nine years in the pen would serve only to transform Holland into a hardened criminal who upon his release would have no family, friends or job.

It was Holland's defense attorney himself who persuaded me this release was inappropriate. For if Michael Moroney does indeed represent Holland and his views, then a grave error has been made.

For anyone who missed this moving and thought-provoking evening, I am sorry, for its effect upon me was indeed profound. I am thankful that Mershon and Riley County Attorney Colt Knutson were present. I know their awareness of rape was vastly expanded. I have barely scratched the surface of what the forum encompassed, and encourage those who did not attend to question those who did. Not only will the questioner's own comprehension of this important community issue be increased, but it will allow those of us who did attend a chance to express and deal with some very troubling thoughts.

New rape criteria necessary

Editor,

One issue hinted at but not directly addressed at Manhattan's Monday evening rape forum is the one of adequate psychiatric evaluations of convicted rapists. Manhattan women are saying, among other things, that the current psychiatric system falls far short of what's needed to detect, pinpoint and treat hidden or obvious thought patterns indicating anger toward women, anti-women attitudes and inappropriate behavior toward women.

We must challenge the philosophical foundation of the psychiatric and clinical psychological system, with its apparent insensitivity to widespread and entrenched negative attitudes toward women. The present basis of understanding the disturbed person is comparison to a "normal": the mainstream, regular citizen in the community. There is no "normal" individual.

The concept is key in prevention. Males not knowing they have a hidden negative attitude toward women may exhibit signs or signals as yet unobserved by traditional psychologists. Some of these signs may be in the realm of everyone's experience, not only that of the "professionals."

A sign of an individual male not knowing his feelings about women on a continual basis and not knowing his latent anger toward women may be as simple as steaming, also called smoking.

Also, I'm skeptical of the utility of sports activity as an "outlet for aggressive impulses." Why not identify and deal with those more directly?

Women speaking for the community have the impetus to push for new psychological, new criteria of what's disturbed thought and behavior — specifically concerning attitudes of anger and violence toward women.

University for Man needs student funding

Editor,

With allocations due to come up before Student Senate next week, I feel it is now appropriate to address the subject of funding for University for Man.

In the three years I have been at K-State, I have noticed that each year UFM has received a smaller amount of money than the previous year. Although some people might argue that UFM is becoming more of a community-based organization, and students should not have to support its existence, the cold fact remains that approximately 4,600 students utilized its services last year, and that figure will probably rise in the future if UFM continues to grow.

I hope when senate considers how much money it wants to give to the support of UFM, it has thoroughly considered what UFM adds to K-State. Most universities have sports clubs and similar student groups, but UFM is rather unique to K-State, and it is the second most used student service at K-State. UFM offers students the chance to learn for fun and personal interest in a vast array of topics. It is a tool by which students may enrich their normal curriculums.

Mostly, UFM should not be looked upon as just another service for which money must be spent, but as a novel organization that adds more to the culture and learning atmosphere at K-State than can be expressed only in terms of monetary figures. It is an essential key to what makes the overall K-State experience special and different from any other university. UFM must be allowed to do more than merely survive. It must thrive.

Size of display adequate

Editor,

Re: Catherine Sayler's letter, "Army exhibit undermines theme of college," in the April 3 Collegian:

Sayler describes the DARCOM exhibit as "a big and very ugly leaf that should have been scaled down to size." If her concern is allocation of booth space according to departmental size, there were numerous infractions throughout the Union. Military science represents a gargantuan industry on the leading edge of technology, and cannot be accurately depicted by a single crayon poster.

She states, "The display had little to do with...discovering K-State." Again, many displays were similarly guilty. Our own vet school illuminated primarily aspects of veterinary training and equipment, but of ourselves she is not so critical. Sayler, in observing "pamphlets...seemed more aimed at...a full-time military career..." betrayed her ignorance of the ROTC program. She found "no sense of compromise, of diplomacy, of tolerance." Unfortunately, in all societies this side of Utopia, a strong military is essential when compromise, diplomacy and tolerance have failed.

Of age and crayons

Never underestimate the intelligence of the Kansas Legislature.

The same folks who brought us such moving battles over highway rest areas and the lightbulb-vs.-"pagan"-goddess-statue laughathon now present the latest in absurdities: raising the drinking age to 19 and the different, yet similar driver's license.

I'm not sure if Ripley can believe it or not.

The Legislature, ever mindful of the impending November election, is probably going to raise the legal drinking age for 3.2 beer and cereal malt beverages in this beloved state to 19. Why? Because it would be a compromise to keep the members from losing face in front of the liquor lobby, the anti-liquor lobby, the student lobby and, most importantly, the hotel lobby where the members are staying.

Can the legislators really justify raising the drinking age? No. The facts presented before the august body show raising the drinking age probably will put a dent in the amount of beer sold in the Sunflower State and make a lot of 18-year-olds mad.

The Associated Students of Kansas put up a valiant fight, but in the end said the "19 bill" was a moral victory. Phooey. Just because the state hasn't raised the drinking age to 21 doesn't mean ASK won. It just means the next Legislature will probably succeed in raising the drinking age to 20, and then to 21.

BRIAN LA RUE
Collegian Columnist

I say raise the drinking age to 65 if you really want to cut the death and suffering caused by alcohol. Shoot, if you're old enough to collect Social Security, you deserve a drink — especially when the system goes broke. But that's another column.

Proponents of raising the drinking age to 19 say this will help keep alcohol out of reach of high school students. I disagree. I expect to see another side effect of this bill: high school students will just make college-age friends who can supply the young people with booze.

Another problem with this proposal strikes those in college who we all know and love: the freshmen. A typical college freshman is 18 years old. By raising the drinking age to 19, all kinds of problems will result. What will happen to the age-old college tradition of "functions" (residence hall terminology for "beer bust")? Will IDs be checked? Will the attorney general swoop down to nab unsuspecting function barkeepers for serving a cold one to an 18-year-old?

Maybe this is what the Legislature had in mind with the different color background for driver's license photographs.

Under the proposal, license photographs would have a different color background for different aged drivers. The intent of the bill is to help liquor store operators tell if a person is old enough to buy liquor. Wow. What a lousy idea.

As Melissa Brune pointed out in an editorial in Tuesday's Collegian, counterfeiters won't be stopped by this idea. They probably will have access to the different colors before the state does. If anything, the colors could serve to hide some subtle counterfeiting errors.

Besides, what will happen if this proposal and the "19 bill" become law? Licenses are issued every four years. If a person receives a driver's license at 16, will he have to get a new one at 19, 20, 21 and 22? Seems like a waste of my tax money.

If the Legislature is really in love with the color-the-license bill, then it could amend it so drivers color in the licenses themselves. K-Staters could use purple, for example.

In fact, I think this is a neat idea. I vote to have the legislators buy themselves a box of crayons and color in their own licenses.

The members can then spend their time wisely, which is more than I can say for what they've done so far.

Senate reviews drop/add, retake rules

By CONNIE WOODARD
Staff Writer

In its continuing consideration of the University's class retake policy, the Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee on Tuesday heard an ad hoc committee's report against keeping the current policy.

The senate committee is considering a proposal to change the policy so that the original grade in classes retaken will be included in the student's cumulative grade point average.

Besides the retake committee, an ad hoc committee studying the feasibility of moving up the last date to drop classes also reported to the senate committee.

Michael Finnegan, chairman of the ad hoc committee considering the retake policy, said students would still be allowed to retake classes.

"The (ad hoc) committee recommends that the retake policy as it stands now be voided. Students could certainly retake courses, but all of the grades would count," said Finnegan, professor of sociology and anthropology.

For example, a student receiving an F the first time in a class and an A the second time would have both grades computed into his cumulative GPA.

The retake committee also discussed alternatives which would allow students to retake up to nine hours of classes. Finnegan said these proposals included forgiving the first grade received or substituting a retake grade for up to nine hours.

However, several faculty members on the retake committee objected to the alternatives because they would be difficult to regulate. They decided to recommend the policy making all grades count, Finnegan said.

The retake committee suggested this policy go into effect beginning in fall 1985.

Finnegan said the study of K-State's retake policy began when the retake committee was looking at the policy requiring students to have a 2.0 cumulative GPA to graduate.

After examining students' records, the committee decided this policy had not hurt anyone deserving to graduate. The retake committee did find that many students having grade problems when they were to graduate had retaken classes two or three times, Finnegan said.

"The real thing we noticed here is that the retake policy kept these people from getting caught at the dismissal level," he said.

F. Gene Ernst, chairman of the ad hoc committee on the drop/add policy and associate professor of architecture, said his committee recommended that the dates to drop classes be moved forward.

"We would recommend that it (the general catalog) be changed to read that the last day to drop a course without a W being recorded is the end of the 15th day of classes," he said. "After the 30th day of classes, courses may not be dropped."

Currently students may drop a course without a W being recorded until the 25th day of classes. A course may not be dropped after the 50th day of classes.

The committee also recommended adding to the policy that courses may not be added after the fifth day of classes except with the written permission of the instructor.

The current drop/add policy allows students to shift sections, which runs counter to the intention of balancing class sizes, Ernst said.

Donald Foster, University registrar, said the policy is designed to commit students to a class at an earlier time.

There are about 5,000 drop/adds each day of the first week of classes. There are about 65,000 by the end of a semester. However, statistics are not as important as the disruption of classes, he said.

Faculty members representing five colleges are on the drop/add committee. By consulting other faculty members in those colleges, the committee determined that most faculty members think they must mark time while students make up their minds to drop or add classes.

The problem is not so much students dropping the classes but the students who decide to add a class late, Foster said.

The Academic Affairs Committee took no action on either recommendation.

'Top' seniors refuse low-level jobs

By The College Press Service

"Top caliber" college graduates apparently have turned down enough low-level and middle-level management job offers recently to cause some employers to worry about a "mid-management vacuum" during the next few years, according to an employment consulting firm.

In an informal phone study of 50 of its corporate clients, Goodrich and Sherwood Co., a New York consulting firm, found the corporations are having trouble convincing some graduating seniors to accept jobs that may take them to factories in non-metropolitan areas, leave them with too many supervisors over them, or threaten to conflict with favored lifestyles, said Jack Gow, Goodrich and Sherwood's public relations consultant.

"Most of these guys (recent college graduates) want to start at the top and then work up a little higher," Gow said.

Gow says his firm's clients, which he describes as "all Fortune 500 companies," are finding even higher salaries aren't luring top graduates to jobs "at plants in geographic areas where they can't go sailing or golfing or skiing."

Gow said that the only companies not finding it difficult to fill these mid-management jobs that are now opening again are some high-tech industries.

"High-tech is the glamour industry now," he said, "like plastics was 20 years ago."

Despite companies' complaints, other officials who help place students in jobs after graduation haven't noticed students turning down many job offers.

"I'm not aware of that happening," said Lin'a Pengilly of the College Placement Council, a Bethlehem, Pa., association of campus placement officers from around the country.

"It could be that it's not happening, or it could be that it is happening and people just haven't started grumbling about it," she said.

In its most recent survey, released in October, the CPC found just the opposite, she said. Students were accepting recruiting offers earlier in the year to allay the insecurities of the recessionary job market.

Pengilly said CPC's hard data about this year's job market won't be available until late March.

Students haven't been turning down jobs in at least one rural area.

"Our recruiting year has been magnificent, considering our governor is trying to make our campus into a prison," said Jim Keller, placement counselor at the University of South Dakota-Springfield.

To reduce the state's budget deficit and take care of prison overcrowding problems at the same time, Gov. William Janklow has put the university campus up for sale. If not sold by May 1, the state will convert it into a prison, Keller said.

Student arrested in theater

A freshman in arts and sciences was arrested at an Aggieville theater late Monday night on a charge of smoking in a public theater.

Douglas Laverne White, 106 Marlatt Hall, was arrested by Riley County Police Department officers shortly before 11 p.m. Monday at the Varsity Theatre, 1125 Moro St. He was released from custody after posting a $300 bond, the minimum bond for misdemeanors prosecuted by the state.

Police said managers of the theater asked officers to remove two people who were creating a disturbance. When officers arrived, they found White, one of the two, smoking inside the theater.

White is scheduled to appear before Riley County District Judge Harlan Graham at 1:15 p.m. today at the Riley County Courthouse.

Citizens vie for station's license

WICHITA — The Federal Communications Commission is expected to decide April 11 whether to schedule a license renewal hearing on the fate of controversial Dodge City radio station KTTL-FM.

The station's owners, Charles and Nellie Babbs, have applied to renew their license. But Dodge City Citizens for Better Broadcasting have filed a competing application.

The citizens group became involved in the license renewal process after KTTL broadcast taped speeches by speakers who advocated racism and violence.

Nellie Babbs said in a telephone interview Tuesday she and her estranged husband still are operating the station. She said a contract they signed with a prospective new manager, John Carlson of Garden City, fell through when Carlson was unable to sell enough advertising. Mrs. Babbs said Carlson also was unable to secure the records he wanted for a new music format for the station.

Carlson was to have started as new manager Monday, Mrs. Babbs said, but he was reported by a friend to be in Denver.

Reagan defends Salvadoran aid

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, seeking support for his request on emergency military aid for El Salvador, told Republican congressional leaders Tuesday that Salvadoran soldiers may have to go into combat with only one clip of ammunition in their weapons, a White House spokesman said.

Larry Speakes, the spokesman, asked about a congressman quoting Reagan as saying Salvadoran troops are being sent out short of ammunition, said, "It is that bad."

Pressed for detail, Speakes quoted Reagan as telling the leadership meeting: "Some members of the El Salvadoran army may have to go on missions — that was his exact quote — with only one clip of ammunition."

Reagan's comment was made as he pressed for congressional action on his emergency military aid request for government forces in the embattled Central American country.

Rainfall raises state water levels

TOPEKA — For the second straight year the water level decline in western and south-central Kansas eased, according to yearly measurements taken by federal and state water agencies.

The water level dropped six inches in 1983 — the same as in the previous year — a sharp decline over the past five years. Officials attribute the results to above-average rainfall in the area and improved irrigation practices.

Records for the past five years show water levels in northwestern Kansas declined two inches annually from 1979-83 while the annual average from 1974-78 was 2.4 feet. The decline in southwestern Kansas was 1.7 feet from 1979-83 compared to 4 feet annually from 1974-78. Similar comparisons in southwestern Kansas were not available.

The measurement of the approximately 1,450 wells were part of a continuing investigation into the use of ground water in wells in the High Plains and associated aquifers. The wells were tested in January and February of this year by the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, Division of Water Resources, and the Kansas Geological Survey.

Weather

Mostly cloudy today, highs around 50. Northwest winds 15 to 25 mph. Clearing tonight, lows in mid-30s. Mostly sunny and warmer Thursday, highs around 60.

Group lists abuse in 98 countries

Report reveals cruel prison conditions

By The Associated Press

LONDON — At least a third of the world's nations torture or abuse prisoners, Amnesty International said today in releasing a catalogue of modern cruelty that the group said warranted the same revulsion aroused by Nazi extermination camps.

In a 263-page report titled "Torture in the Eighties," the human rights organization listed abuses in 98 nations.

The review, covering 1980 to mid-1983, marked the start of what the Nobel Prize-winning body said would be a campaign to expose and end "torture as a tool of state policy."

Cases of cruelty cited in the report ranged from small children in Iran's Evin prison being forced to watch their mothers tortured, to paininducing drugs administered to Soviet dissidents held in psychiatric hospitals.

Among specialized torture methods, it listed Syria's "black slave," an electrical apparatus with a heated skewer, and Chile's "parrot's perch," in which the trussed prisoner is hung upside down from a pole to force a "confession."

A string of Latin American and African countries were listed, many for "routinely" administering beatings, electrical and acid torture in their police cells and jails.

A section on right-wing Guatemala said "few of many thousands abducted" during the 1978-82 regime of President Romeo Lucas Garcia had survived. Some of the victims, their bodies dumped by roadsides, had been burned with cigarettes, castrated, slashed repeatedly or had limbs amputated.

A handful of Western nations received individual sections in the report. One of them, Spain, persistently tortured or otherwise abused prisoners — mainly Basque separatists, the report alleged.

In Italy, while torture was not common, there were an "alarming increase" in allegations of ill-treatment of suspected Red Brigade terrorists in 1982, it said.

The United States was among 32 nations that were referred to briefly after the individual sections. Amnesty said it had made "several inquiries" to state penal authorities about guards allegedly beating prisoners or spraying tear gas into their faces.

It also received reports from the United States of police beatings of suspects, and said that in some cases victims were paid damages and officials fined or jailed.

Amnesty, traditionally sensitive to charges that its regular reports of human rights violations concentrate on Third World and East bloc nations, did not try to pinpoint the worst offenders.

Amnesty said its evidence included testimony from released detainees, refugees, doctors and sometimes the attitude of governments toward the charges — silence or vague denials.

Amnesty has taken up the cases of 2,687 torture victims in 45 countries since 1980, more than double the number in the previous five years, Amnesty press spokesman Mark Grantham said.

"We don't know whether things are getting better or worse overall," he said. "What we do know is that our information is getting better."

Woman leads attorney race

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Janet Chubb, a Topeka attorney, apparently is the leading contender to become U.S. attorney for Kansas succeeding Jim Marquez, the Topeka Capital-Journal reported Tuesday.

The paper said Chubb, a former assistant state attorney general who now is in private practice in Topeka, is the only one of four nominees for the federal Justice Department position who is having a fullblown investigation of her background made by the department.

It also said sources indicated Chubb is the first choice of U.S. Sen. Bob Dole.

Chubb, who received her law degree from Washburn University, confirmed the background check had begun, but said she has no idea of her chances. If picked, she would be the first woman U.S. attorney for Kansas in history.

Other nominees are assistant U.S. Attorneys Tom Haney and Ben Burgess and Doug Comer, chief counsel for the U.S. Senate judiciary subcommittee on courts. Rusty Lefel, a Johnson County attorney and former treasurer of the state Republican Party, was a nominee but withdrew when he announced as a candidate for GOP nomination to Congress in the 3rd District.

Marquez, an appointee of President Reagan in 1981, resigned as U.S. attorney earlier this year to become chief of attorney for the U.S. Department of Transportation, which is headed by Secretary Elizabeth Dole.

ly, and headed for Salyut 7, where three Soviets have been working since a Feb. 8 launch.

The international crew is to return to Earth on April 10.

The 11th flight of the U.S. space shuttle, with five astronauts, is scheduled to begin Friday from Cape Canaveral, Fla. The 11 men in space after that launch will be a record.

Soviet space officials have said the Indian-Soviet crew will conduct 43 experiments, including an extensive photographic survey of India.

Sharma will do an experiment aimed at determining the effect of yoga on weightlessness and other problems associated with space travel.

The live coverage of the launch was part of a major publicity campaign for the mission that is a radical departure from all-Soviet space flights but typical of the Soviets' past international missions.

Group says TV movie contained propaganda

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — ABC stockholders will vote on a resolution sponsored by a conservative group calling for a probe of whether the network unwittingly disseminated Soviet propaganda when it aired the television movie "The Day After."

The resolution is sponsored by Accuracy in Media, a private media monitoring group based in Washington. It owns shares in all the commercial networks, and it sponsored the ABC resolution along with four other ABC shareholders who are also AIM members, John Hemenway, a spokesman for the group, said Tuesday.

Veronica Pollard, an ABC spokeswoman in New York, confirmed the network would include the resolution in proxy materials being sent to shareholders for the May 15 annual meeting. The network will recommend the resolution be defeated, she added.

"The Day After," which aired on Nov. 20, 1983, was a widely viewed made-for-TV movie on the aftermath of a nuclear war. Reed Irvine, AIM chairman, described the movie as "a potent propaganda weapon in the anti-missile campaign...which meshed with an important Soviet foreign policy goal."

The group's resolution states, in part: "We ask the board of directors to take note of the danger that ABC's facilities may be used to disseminate Soviet propaganda and to undertake an investigation to determine whether or not this has been done in the past and to devise measures to insure that it is not done in the future."

Authorities examine cookies after boy, woman find pins

By The Associated Press

PLAINVILLE — Cases of Girl Scout cookies were X-rayed after a 7-year-old Plainville boy found a straight pin when he bit into a "Kookaburras" cookie his mother gave him, police said.

In eastern Kansas, the Santa Fe Council of Girl Scouts planned Tuesday to have X-rays taken of 240 packages of cookies after a 21-year-old Bonner Springs woman found a pin in a "Samoa" cookie.

The Plainville boy was not injured Monday when he bit into the cookie containing a sewing pin, said Plainville Police Chief K.P. Wright. The police chief declined to release the identity of the boy or his mother.

Plainville authorities had X-rays taken of five cases of cookies selected at random, according to Wright. The X-rays showed no other box had been tampered with, he said.

No recall of cookies in Plainville, a town of 1,500 north of Hays, was ordered, but Wright urged any residents finding a cookie that had been tampered with to contact authorities.

The Bonner Springs woman, who asked not to be identified, found the pin when she was unable to break open the cookie with her hand, authorities said.

The woman had not attempted to swallow the cookie, and she was not injured, said Capt. Robert Sweeney of the Wyandotte County sheriff's office.

"We are very concerned," said Dianne Schultz-Gard, executive director of the Santa Fe Trail girl scouts. "We had hoped this would not happen here."

The FDA has received more than 150 reports of tampering with Girl Scout cookies from people in 24 states, officials said.

Tampering incidents have been reported with all seven varieties of Girl Scout cookies, said a spokesman for the Girl Scouts of the United States of America at the group's national headquarters in New York.

The FDA last week asked the FBI to investigate how pins, needles, glass and wood chips had gotten into some of the 130 million boxes of cookies that were to be distributed this year.

Legislators pass revised no-fault insurance bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Legislature passed Tuesday and sent to Gov. John Carlin bills revising Kansas' 10-year-old automobile no-fault insurance law, increasing the state marriage license fee by $8 and allowing family members to sue each other for pain and suffering damages in accident cases.

The no-fault measure was the most controversial of those measures, drawing the fire of trial lawyers because it triples the threshold at which injured people can sue for pain and suffering.

The no-fault bill barely garnered the minimum number of votes to pass the House, 63-61.

Among the other bills sent to Carlin Tuesday were ones which will:

- Increase the marriage license fee in Kansas from $17 to $25 to provide additional funding for family shelters for victims of domestic violence.

- Allow members of families to sue each other for pain and suffering for damages sustained in motor vehicle accidents.

- Create a state Teaching and School Administration Professional Standards Advisory Board and a state Professional Practices Commission to provide advice to the state Board of Education on those matters.

- Allow Kansas banks to establish automated tellers in other states.

- Set up a procedure for the involuntary commitment of drug abusers to state hospitals and community rehabilitation programs.

- Increase the minimum state income tax refund from $1 to $5, meaning the state will not make refunds of less than $5 but will give the taxpayer credit for the amount on next year's tax liability.

- License and regulate automobile and mobile home salesmen.

The no-fault insurance bill, which cleared the Senate 23-14 last Thursday, went to the governor when the House agreed to Senate amendments. The House sent the bill to a conference committee Monday, but reversed itself Tuesday and adopted the Senate version on motion of Rep. Rex Hoy, R-Mission, chairman of the House Insurance Committee.

It would increase the medical benefits provided in the law and raise from $500 to $1,500 a limitation which controls whether an injured person can sue for damages for pain and suffering when injured.

That limitation, which is aimed at reducing lawsuits for relatively minor injuries, does not prohibit suits to recover actual unreimbursed expenses and permits those who suffer broken bones to sue for pain and suffering even if medical expenses are less than the $1,500 threshold.

But it was that threshold which ignited a battle between lawyers and laymen in the Legislature.

Rep. Marvin Barkis, D-Louisburg, House Democratic leader and a lawyer, said the threshold should be reduced to $1,250, and Rep. Robert Frey, R-Liberal, another attorney, said the House had no business acting on the measure before the conference committee studied it.

However, Hoy said a majority of the House agreed with the Senate change in removing an inflation indexing factor which would have applied to the medical expense threshold, so the House ought to get on with action on the measure. They said the Senate would kill the bill if it were changed.

The increased revenue from the $8 marriage license fee hike would be distributed 32 percent to the Family and Children Trust Fund, 43 percent to the Protection from Abuse Fund and the rest to the state general fund.

The bill, which the Senate approved 34-5, sending it to Carlin, creates the Protection from Abuse Fund with that money to be used exclusively for financing temporary shelters for victims of domestic violence.

Approved 119-5 by the House and forwarded to the governor was a bill which will permit family members to bring lawsuits for the pain and suffering part of damage claims.

K-State baseball player Cary Colbert is considered a quiet leader by Coach Bill Hickey.

Colbert, Bascue lead quietly

By DAVID SVOBODA
Collegian Reporter

Bottom of the ninth. One out. Runner on third base with the Oklahoma State University Cowboys trailing K-State 5-4. A long fly ball is lofted toward right field. Wildcat rightfielder Brian Bascue circles under it and makes the catch for the second out.

The runner tags at third and streaks for the plate. Bascue unloads a strong, one-hop throw to the plate. Catcher Cary Colbert takes the throw and applies a sweeping tag. A cloud of dust and the bellowing of "he's out!" mark the end of a thrilling Wildcat win.

A little optimistic? Maybe. But the thought of Bascue and Colbert combining to lead the Wildcat baseball team in 1984 isn't that far-fetched.

Neither considers himself a team leader, but each is quick to point to the leadership ability of the other.

"I'll try to help any way I can, but I don't take full responsibility for providing leadership," Colbert said. "I'll be there with any help, or to answer any questions. I do think, however, that next year you'll see Brian as the leader of this team."

Bascue, a junior, said he doesn't currently consider himself a team leader because of his age. Bascue said he considers Colbert, a senior, the Wildcat leader on the field.

"I think Cary is more or less the leader of the team. He came back into the program a couple of months ago after being out for six months, and he's doing a heck of a job," Bascue said. "If somebody ever needs any help, he's always available to help them."

As their coach, Bill Hickey said Bascue and Colbert are quiet leaders — leaders who do so by example.

"Colbert gives the young kids a chance to look at somebody who knows how to go out and play and fills a leadership role without being really vocal. He just goes out and plays the game like it's supposed to be played."

"Bascue is the same kind of kid," Hickey said. "He's not a vocal kid. He just goes out every day to do the best possible job."

Both have been playing baseball since they were very young, and both credit their fathers with sparking their interest in the game.

"My father presented me the game, so I'd have to say he was the main factor in my staying with it as long as I have," Colbert said. Bascue said his experiences

Arbitrator's decision sets May 15 as reinstatement date for Wilson

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A baseball arbitrator has ruled that suspended players Willie Wilson and Jerry Martin should be reinstated on May 15, the commissioner's office announced Tuesday.

The ruling came after Wilson, of the Kansas City Royals, and Martin, a former Royal who had been working out with the New York Mets, filed a grievance of one-year drug suspensions levied by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn last Dec. 15.

At that time, Kuhn said he would review the players' cases on May 15 with possible reinstatement coming no sooner than that date. Kuhn made no guarantees the players could resume playing at that time.

Impartial arbitrator Richard I. Bloch made his decision after three days of closed-door hearings last month in Tampa, Fla.

"While my decision of last year made provision for review of the suspensions on May 15, I very much regret that Mr. Bloch did not find it appropriate to leave it up to me to decide the nature of my May 15 review and the date of their reinstatement," Kuhn said in a statement.

The commissioner's office said the arbitrator had made no decision on the grievance of another former Royal, Willie Aikens, who also was suspended for a year subject to the same revision. Aikens was traded to Toronto.

Bloch, who handles grievances as part of baseball's collective bargaining agreement with the union, said the reinstatement would stand "unless he (Kuhn) finds that aspects of their individual behavior in the interim require the continuance of the suspension."

All three players were convicted last November in federal court in Kansas City, Kan., of attempted possession of cocaine. They were fined and ordered to spend three months in federal prison. Another former Royal, pitcher Vida Blue, later pleaded guilty to charges of possession, but, at the request of the prosecutor, Kuhn's office delayed action in that case.

The following month, Kuhn suspended the three former Royals along with Los Angeles pitcher Steve Howe. Howe, who went into drug rehabilitation clinics three times last year, was suspended for a year without chance for early reinstatement. Howe did not file a grievance.

In making his ruling, Bloch upheld the right of the commissioner to "impose disciplinary suspension and probation in appropriate cases of drug activity by players," Kuhn's office said. "However, he also concluded that the suspensions of the two players for a period of one year, subject to possible reinstatement on May 15, 1984, should be modified."

The Major League Players Association filed the grievance on the players' behalf, in part, because it felt the suspensions were too severe in light of the prison sentences.

"We're generally satisfied and feel vindicated," said Don Fehr, acting executive director of the union. "But that doesn't mean we're happy with all of the circumstances. We felt that, without minimizing the penalty, the penalty should have been reduced further."

While Wilson said he would not comment on the arbitrator's ruling Tuesday, Kansas City General Manager John Schuerholz said, "We will be delighted to welcome Willie Wilson back on May 15. We are also delighted the arbitrator substantiated the commissioner's authority to deal with the drug situation because we need that authority."

In his statement, Kuhn said that Bloch recognized the seriousness of the drug problem and its possible consequences as "so obviously disastrous as to require no elaboration."

"The message should be clear to players involved with drugs: Appropriate discipline will be imposed, and it will be upheld in subsequent arbitrations," Kuhn said.

Black sharp in Royals 4-3 victory

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY — Onix Concepcion? Bud Black?

The New York Yankees seemed to be asking themselves "who were those guys," when the rookie-laden Kansas City Royals hung a 4-2 defeat on them Tuesday in the American League opener for both teams.

Black, who started last season in the minor leagues, held the Yankees to two hits through seven innings. Concepcion, who battled all spring to become the regular shortstop, made some outstanding defensive plays and homered on Ron Guidry's first pitch of the season.

"That kid Concepcion covers a lot of ground," said Yankees Manager Yogi Berra. "I didn't expect him to hit one out. He sure looks like he wants to play everyday."

The 5-foot-5 Concepcion made no effort to disguise his happiness. "I feel great. The first game of the year, the first pitch, and my first big league home run. And off a guy like Guidry. I just feel great."

So did Black.

"I was able to get good location on all my pitches and that was the key," he said. "Anytime you get two runs in the first inning, especially off someone like Guidry, it gives everybody a lift."

Guidry surrendered eight hits and all four runs in his five innings of work and is 0-2 in six home openers.

"Guidry seemed to be getting his pitches up, but he'll better," Berra said. "I'm not worried at all."

The game drew a small crowd of 10,006.

Black retired the first 12 Yankees he faced before he gave up a lead-off single to Don Baylor and a home run to Dave Winfield in the fifth.

Colbert

vocal kid. He just goes out every day to do the best possible job."

Both have been playing baseball since they were very young, and both credit their fathers with sparking their interest in the game.

"My father presented me the game, so I'd have to say he was the main factor in my staying with it as long as I have," Colbert said.

Bascue said his experiences were similar.

"I'd have to say my father, kind of like Cary's, was important to my baseball career," he said. "He coached many of my teams when I was little, and through high school he helped me out as much as he could. Even now, he still inspires me and helps me along the way."

Both players were not originally Wildcats. Colbert came to K-State after stints at the University of Iowa, where he played for less than a year, and Butler County Community College, where he played a year. A National Collegiate Athletic Association ruling concerning freshmen redshirting that which was handed down at a recent NCAA meeting at Dallas enabled Colbert to be eligible for an additional semester at K-State. Colbert, under a prior NCAA directive, was not eligible to play for the 'Cats during the fall season (the six-month layoff Bascue spoke of).

Colbert is frank in admitting that he nearly didn't wear a K-State uniform at all.

"Coming to K-State was a second choice for me. I'd already signed a letter-of-intent at Creighton (University)," Colbert said. "I told Coach Baker (Dave Baker, the Wildcat head baseball coach at the time) that Coach Underwood at Creighton was going to give me a full-ride scholarship, while K-State was only going to give me half."

"I more or less just bargained with him and told him that if he gave me what Creighton was offering, I was going to be here. He didn't and I went up to Creighton and signed a letter-of-intent. I came back the next day and Baker had changed his mind, so I signed a national letter-of-intent here."

Bascue also played small college ball, having been a starter at Garden City Community College for two seasons. Bascue came to K-State in an effort to sharpen his skills against good competition.

"I was hoping to play a higher level of ball than that played by NAIA (National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics) schools that had recruited me, and so I thought it was important I played in the NCAA," he said. "My brother played at KU, and he told me I didn't want to go to that program, so I decided to come here."

Both players said they have goals they would like to reach by the end of their collegiate careers, and both consider graduation their number one priority.

"I'm getting close to graduating...and baseball has helped me achieve that," Colbert said. "When I was out of baseball last fall, I really missed it. It's finally starting to sink in where I'm at."

His major is recreation, and he said he is looking forward to working in that field.

"I've been here two years, and we haven't been able to win in the Big Eight consistently. Right now, that's all I really want to do. I think we can," Colbert said.

Bascue said he would also like to conclude his degree work in recreation while becoming a better player.

"I'd like to improve myself in baseball to help the team win," he said.

Both said they would like to continue being involved with baseball following their careers at K-State.

"I'd like to coach, and I'd like to start out somewhere at a low level where I can learn, and then move my way up," Colbert said. "Baseball has been good to me and I enjoy it, and there is no reason I can't stay in it a little longer."

"I'd like to coach at some time after my graduation," he said. "I might try to play a couple seasons after I graduate, but eventually I'll probably get involved with coaching."

Hickey said he likes to talk of the two as individuals and how they conduct themselves.

"They come out every day and want to play. We're not looking for kids who just want to come to K-State to put the uniform on. Too many kids go into a college situation just to say they put the uniform on. These two young men, however, are serious about playing."

As the cloud of dust around the plate settles, Bascue and Colbert appear to have a clear command of where they're heading.

Businesses, agencies offer systems

Computers ease farm record-keeping

by LINDA MORRELL
Collegian Reporter

Computer companies are taking a hard look at new prospective customers — farmers.

Increasingly, farmers are implementing software programs into their farm businesses to keep cost records and to improve production.

A computer system can ease work on daily calculations and on monitoring of the business, said Bryan Schurle, associate professor of economics.

"The major advantage of computers is being able to ask 'what if...' questions," Schurle said, such as for budgeting or yield.

Another advantage is additional manipulation of numbers, he said. While a computer cannot analyze the numbers displayed on the screen, a farmer can. Farm records, budgeting and cash flows have become the major uses of software systems in farming.

There also are disadvantages to computer use on the farm, Schurle said, depending on the adaptability of the person to the machine. Too much positive publicity is given to farm computer use, and there are some failures.

"Some people really love the machines," he said, "and they drive some people nuts."

Arkansas farmer Sammy Hare agreed computers aren't for everyone. Programming can be time consuming, he said, and takes patience.

Hare has written many of the programs he utilizes, including his feed usage and sales and inventory records, although "the first time I ever sat down in front of one (a computer) was when they brought it to my home," he said.

Arthur Jenkins, a North Carolina pork producer, said he uses a computer system because his 10,000 annual-market hog operation is 50 percent office work.

Jenkins said he sees the computer's function as an aid for analysis of the market situation and for keeping accurate records.

To avoid loss risks, Jenkins keeps a written record of the management aspects of his operation, as well as a second copy stored on diskettes (which store computer information).

Specific programs are available by businesses and organizations to aid farmers with management decisions.

For example, several market agencies offer the Champ system, a computer hog auction system. Co-op organizations offer the Total Animal Performance Projection System (TAPPS) program, and Radio Shack has introduced the AgriStar system. AGNET is a nationwide telecomputer network under the Cooperative Extension Service which offers decision aid programs, such as feed formulation and finance programs.

A new computer system is to be introduced to the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS) on a statewide level in January.

Farmers can benefit from the ASCS system since the agency's personnel will be better able to make presentations on federal aid programs, said Jim Pugh, state ASCS office administrator.

"If the farmer plants X number of acres, we can show him what his potential payment will be," Pugh said.

This task is already done manually, but the computers will simplify, speed and make the process more accurate, he said.

The Crawford County computer system was the pilot program for the nation. Kansas, California and South Carolina will be the first states to initiate the system. All 2,800 county offices in the nation will eventually be able to compare notes, he said.

Future agriculturists also are learning the possible benefits of a computer in a farm operation through high school and college courses.

Many high school vocational agriculture students study computer skills in record keeping and management, as well as the technical aspects involved in programming computers.

AgriData Resources Inc. has developed an agriculture education network specifically for use in the classroom.

K-State's Department of Agricultural Economics currently offers a seminar in computer application in agricultural economics. Developing farm records and general ledgers are skills taught.

Faculty help create cuisine for monkeys

By TERRI BAIRD
Collegian Reporter

A special line of monkey food has been developed through the combined efforts of animal scientists from Michigan State University, the San Diego Zoo and grain scientists from K-State.

"This is truly one of those unusual and unique experiences that come along occasionally in one's lifetime," Keith Behnke, associate professor of grain science, said.

Behnke said the Lemar monkey is a ruminant type of animal which requires a diet similar to that of a cow. This means their nutritional requirements differ from other monkeys, which are monogastric.

"The Lemar (monkey) is significantly different, and the result is they have severe digestive upsets," Behnke said. "They also have an excess buildup of iron in their liver and a number of different medical, pathological and nutritional problems."

Behnke said grain scientists were contacted by Michigan State to utilize a new piece of equipment owned by K-State, which was donated to the University by Wenger manufacturing in Sabetha. The machine, called an extruder, was used to develop the monkey biscuit to meet the monkeys' nutrient requirements.

"With this consultation and some formulation and numerous phone calls, we came up with a formula," Behnke said.

The ingredients of the biscuit are similar to a decent feedlot backgrounding ration for cattle, Behnke said. It consists of wheat, wheat bran, dehydrated alfalfa and corn. It's a high-fiber diet which is good for the monkeys.

The San Diego Zoo began testing the monkey feed in its Lemar colony about six months ago, he said.

"The reports are very good," Behnke said. "The monkeys seem to be utilizing the material very well and getting along quite nicely."

The extruder is the same type of machine that manufactures pet food, cheese curls and other expanded products. K-State has what Behnke termed a small research model and is one of the few universities that has this particular type of equipment, which was donated at a cost of more than $100,000. The machine has also been used to develop a type of bird feed and shrimp feed, Behnke said.

Teams strive to set agriculture telefund record

Seventeen teams from departmental clubs in the College of Agriculture will participate in the 1984 Agriculture Telefund April 8-12.

The telefund, to be held in Union 212 from 6-10 p.m. each evening, will include 40 telephones available for taking pledges from college alumni, Julie Schuler, sophomore in animal sciences and industry, said.

Rachel Vining, sophomore in agricultural journalism, Keith Westervelt, junior in agriculture education, and Schuler are Agriculture Council chairmen for this year's telefund.

Lawrence Erpelding, associate director of agriculture resident instruction, said the Telefund goal is to surpass last year's amount of $57,000.

About half of the money will go toward scholarships, with 40 percent available for agriculture clubs, he said. The remainder will be used by the director of resident instruction to enhance educational programs in agriculture.

Erpelding said donors can request that their pledges be used for a certain purpose.

The clubs apply for funds to support good will tours and other activities. The only prerequisite is that the clubs help with the Telefund, Schuler said.

Each student that participates in the Telefund is eligible to win prizes for collecting pledges.

The University's telefunds are being sponsored by the KSU Foundation.

Campus news briefs

Coliseum Campaign passes goal

The Coliseum Campaign has reached $6.1 million, surpassing its original $6 million goal. Statewide fund-raising efforts to reach the revised $7 million target are continuing.

Art Loub, executive vice president of the KSU Foundation, this week announced the updated tally.

The Foundation is coordinating the fund drive among alumni and friends of the University to provide a portion of the cost of the $16 million multi-purpose facility, recently named the Fred Bramlage Coliseum by the Kansas Board of Regents. Bramlage, of Junction City, is serving as the campaign's national development chairman. The balance of the funding package will be provided by student fees and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Students to perform for children

K-State students who are studying story telling will perform for Manhattan area elementary school children Friday in the Purple Masque Theater.

Children's story-telling times are set for 9:30 to 10:20 a.m. and 10:30 to 11:20 a.m. The program, open free to the public, will be different each time.

Fifteen students are enrolled in "Story Telling," a Department of Speech class taught by instructor Mary Nichols. The readings are set for fulfillment of in-class performance requirements. Nichols said her students will visit Manhattan elementary and pre-schools later in April for their final short story readings.

Publisher to speak on education

Bill Meyer, editor and publisher of the Marion County Record, will speak on "Higher Education and the Press" at 3:30 p.m. Friday in Union 212.

Meyer's address, sponsored by the K-State Chapter of the American Association of University Professors, is open to the public.

Meyer also is expected to give his views on the mission of higher education in Kansas.

The Kansas journalist is the immediate past president of the Kansas Press Association and vice president of the William Allen White Foundation. He has appeared twice on the national MacNeil/Lehrer television news show and has lectured on media law, public relations and editorial writing at Washburn University, Wichita State University and University of Kansas.

Entries solicited for contest

The Department of English announced it is now taking submissions for its annual Creative Writing Contest.

The contest is open to all student's enrolled at K-State, and the deadline for submitting entries is Friday.

First, second and third place awards will be given in both fiction and poetry. Fiction entries should consist of an original work of no more than 7,500 words. Poetry entries may consist of no more than ten pages of poetry. First place winners will receive a $50 prize.

Visiting poet to read works today

Poet Brendan Galvin, professor of English at Southern Connecticut State College, will read from his work at 4 p.m. today in Union 207.

Widely published, Galvin has had poems in almost every major magazine, including The New Yorker. He has published four collections of poetry, the latest being "Winter Oysters."

The reading is free, and the public is invited. Galvin's appearance is sponsored by the Department of English and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Students to show original designs

Original designs will be displayed by apparel design students at a "Design Portfolio '84" show April 15, at the Manhattan Holidome. The show was earlier reported to be April 8.

The show will spotlight special collections by senior design students.

Shuttle liftoff shows planned

Two public planetarium shows of the liftoff of Space Shuttle Challenger are planned for Friday.

Shows begin prior to the liftoff at 7:30 a.m. and after liftoff at 8:10 a.m. in Cardwell 407.

ECM sponsors 'Arabian Nights'

An "Arabian Night" is planned for 7 p.m. Saturday at the Ecumenical Christian Ministries Center, 1021 Denison Ave. Festivities planned include music and singing with Arab musical instruments; dances from Egypt, Morocco, Palestine and Lebanon; a fashion show featuring Arab costumes; and Arab food.

The event is sponsored by the Organization of Arab Students. Tickets cost $6.50 and are on sale at the Union.

Colleges lack top computer software

By The College Press Service

As more colleges rig their campuses with personal computers — some now require all entering students to come equipped with their own micros — administrators and curriculum planners find themselves on the threshold of a new dilemma: the lack of sophisticated, quality software to run the machines.

"Ninety-eight percent of the software (on the market now) is junk," said Seymour Papert at a recent college convention in Chicago.

Papert is a math professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and one of the developers of the LOGO program language.

"Generally, not much quality higher education software has been developed, and what has doesn't have many avenues of dissemination," said Kim Wiley, research director with the EDUCOM Computer Literacy Project, a consortium of colleges studying the campus computer revolution.

"A lot of schools have started acquiring computers and training faculty to use them," she said. "And now that they're ready to go on to the next step (of selecting software), they're hitting a brick wall and asking 'What can I do now?'"

The college software problem stems mainly from a lack of commercial, "off-the-shelf" programs for specific subjects and disciplines, officials said.

Aside from mass-marketed word-processing programs, there has been a severe shortage of good programs for the liberal arts and even the sciences, they said.

"The amount of software is quite limited," said Joseph Moeller, dean of educational development at Stevens Institute of Technology.

"There's a long way to go in the development of quality software," he said. "A lot of it is still in the mode of page-turning (merely using the computer as an electronic textbook), which doesn't take advantage of the sophisticated ability of computer."

Indeed, college experts now argue that software should move from the traditional "flashcard" use of computers to a new, higher level of software which calls on students' abilities to synthesize and hypothesize what they are learning.

"That 98 percent of the software that Papert calls junk is basically drill-and-practice programs," said Marc Tucker, director of the Project on Information Technology and Education in Washington, D.C.

Most software simply uses the computer "like it was a 16 millimeter projector" to display information and check students' responses to questions, Tucker said.

"But a computer is a very sophisticated tool" which instead should be used to help students create models, synthesize information and create "What if?" scenarios, he said.

In a history course, for instance, Tucker said rather than drilling students on the dates of historic events, software should allow students to change the course of those events and test various history theories on computer models.

In the absence of such software, however, many colleges are now developing programs themselves.

Experts at Brown University, for example, are developing some "very sophisticated graphics programs" that allow student to make graphic models and take fuller advantage of computing power, Tucker said.

Likewise, University of Maryland researchers just developed a program which allows students in photo-optics classes to "build" optical systems on a computer instead of in a laboratory.

There is a need now for colleges to develop software for their own needs rather than using the general, often low-quality software available commercially, Moeller said.

But not everyone believes there is a dearth of quality, off-the-shelf software.

"The idea that most software is junk was all right a couple of years ago, but things have changed a great deal in the last several years," said Caroline Stauffer with Apple Computers' education division.

And as the market grows, more quality software will appear, she and other experts predict.

Senators to approve nominees

Student Senate will meet at 7 p.m. today in the Union Big Eight Room. Business conducted will include:

— Approval of appointments: a resolution approving members of University judicial boards and the student attorney general.

— First readings: a resolution commending the All-University Open House Committee.

Art Loub, executive director of the KSU Foundation, will speak during the senate's open period at the beginning of the meeting about the coliseum fund-raising drive. Anyone may address the senate during the open period.

Small crowd rallies to oppose aid cuts

By The College Press Service

WASHINGTON — National student leaders tried to stage a massive show of student opposition to proposed federal financial aid cuts last week, but not many students showed up.

About 300 students rallied outside the capitol March 26 to register their protest of President Reagan's proposed aid budget. If the budget passes, it would translate into about 900,000 fewer loans and grants during the 1984-1985 school year.

The event, part of the annual National Student Lobby Action Day, drew about 2,000 students in March 1983 and about 4,500 in March 1982.

As recently as the end of February, event organizer Kathy Ozer told the College Press Service she hoped some 7,000 students would participate this year.

The U.S. Student Association (USSA), of which Ozer is legislative director, the Coalition of Independent College and University Students (known as COPUS) and the National Organization of Black University and College Students cosponsored the event.

"Looking around, there are not as many people here as I expected," said Matt Carroll, a student at Brown University, who attended the rally.

"I was disappointed by the turnout," said Karen Canaday, an American University junior. "People are just cutting their own throats by not coming."

"I was led to believe there would be more people here," Tim Murphy, an Ohio State University student, said. "The more I think of it, the project turned out to be a dud."

Ozer, putting the best face on it, disagreed.

"The numbers weren't as important as the information the students brought," she said. The effort, which included talking to legislators before the rally, "was one of the most effective we've ever had."

It also was one of the latest lobby days. Organizers traditionally stage the event the first Monday of March to avoid conflict with schools' spring breaks.

But this year, vague "scheduling problems" forced moving the lobbying effort back to March 26, when many schools were on break, said Bruce Barton of COPUS.

Ozer said she believes the effort drew many students, considering the timing.

"We had 350 students at our lobbying conference last weekend, and we know that 500 students came in buses and vans to the lobbying."

She speculated that many of the lobbyists simply left before the rally, which was supposed to be the public show of student force.

"Many students had to catch planes, or were still talking with their congressmen" when the rally began, she said.

But lobbying, not the rally, was the major order of the day, Ozer said, and students patrolling the capitol's halls wearing "Education Cuts Never Heal" buttons did get to speak to many legislators and legislators' staff members.

The legislative timing, moreover, was fortuitous. Different committees were in the midst of debating the all-important Higher Education Reauthorization Act of 1985 — which will influence aid programs through the remainder of the decade — and President Reagan's proposed $17 billion Department of Education budget.

Students themselves had mixed feelings about how effective they were in their lobbying.

"I know I had an effect today," said Scott Altman, student body president at Iowa's Buena Vista College. "I spoke with both my senators and my representative, and they were very receptive."

Sue Nowak, a Rutgers University student, reported Rep. James Howard (D-N.J.) promised to help her regain her federal student aid. Just before leaving campus, she learned she would be cut out of the aid program next year.

"Somehow, I think it doesn't have any effect," observed Carroll, who calls his congressman — Willis Gradison, R-Ohio, — "the Prince of Darkness as far as education is concerned."

But Carroll, although looking a bit disgruntled as he later surveyed the sparse crowd, went to the rally anyway.

There, he and the others heard a succession of speakers that included Rep. Paul Simon, D-Ill., chairman on the House Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education, and Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I.

Pell, somehow reminded by the small crowd of the thousands of students who regularly descended on Washington to protest American involvement in Vietnam, urged the assemblage to register to vote.

Police to auction bicycles; proceeds to pay for racks

Thirty-two bicycles will be auctioned off starting at noon today in the Union Courtyard.

The bikes, which were recovered on campus by the K-State Police Department, include 27 10-speeds, one five-speed and one one-speed.

"There are some nice bikes and there are some that are in need of repair," Lt. James Tubach, campus police, said.

At last year's auction 44 bikes were sold, ranging in price from $3 to $120.

"We are not selling any bike we haven't had for over six months. We check the bikes' serial numbers against all stolen bicycles that have been reported to us, and we also check against serial numbers reported to the Riley County Police Department," Tubach said.

The campus police also run the serial numbers through the National Crime Information Center before putting the bicycles on the auction block.

"NCIC is where our department, as well as any other law enforcement department, enters information about stolen merchandise," Tubach said.

The bicycles in today's auction will be in the Union Courtyard at 11 a.m. for viewing prior to the sale. The auction is being conducted by Milton Anderson, auctioneer, who is volunteering his service. Check or cash are required at the time of purchase, and buyers will receive a receipt.

"Money received from this auction will go into the building of bicycle racks which will be placed where needed on campus. There is no provision made by the state or University for providing bicycle racks, so we provide them this way," Tubach said.

Ads promote intensive care nursery

By KATHY BARTELLI
Staff Writer

Manhattan's Memorial Hospital has undertaken an advertising campaign to promote its level-two nursery.

The campaign includes 30-second radio spots six times a week on WIBW and KMAN radio stations. An advertisement in the Manhattan Mercury every Sunday for three to four weeks also is part of the campaign.

"It is not that huge of a campaign compared to other businesses," said Ed Klimek, director of public relations at Memorial. "We hope to get increased knowledge by potential users of the service and a general awareness of the facility."

The level-two nursery is an intensive care unit for critically ill infants, said Sharon Saunders, manager of the nursery.

"Manhattan would be at a loss without a level-two nursery," Saunders said. "Not just Manhattan, but outlying areas like Westmoreland, Clay Center, Geary County and St. Mary's. Without the nursery, parents would be forced to be many miles from their children."

Klimek said the hospital wants people to be aware of the nursery so if they have problems with the birth of their child, they will think of Memorial as a place to bring the infant.

"There are only a few of these (nurseries) in the state," Klimek said. "When people do have babies and there's a problem, the kids usually end up here because of the intensive equipment and the personnel here. We just want to promote the services."

In addition to the advertisements, Memorial has booklets on the intensive care nursery available to patients. The hospital also offers booklets on the pregnancy and sibling classes that are available there.

The St. Mary Hospital has been running ads in the Mercury since September, said Dorothy Koepsel, director of public relations.

"We run one ad a week, and it's usually on Sunday," Koepsel said. "The ad is for services provided."

Dan Broyles, administrator at St. Mary, said the hospital has been advertising for the past six years.

"We advertise in a whole host of areas," Broyles said. "Primarily we advertise as a major employer in the Manhattan area."

St. Mary has been running ads for services it offers for the last 2½ years, Broyles said.

The hospital rarely focuses its advertising on one department or facility, he said.

"There are 24 departments in the hospital," Broyles said. "It would be a little misleading to only advertise one."

"Our main thrust, when we advertise a department, is our emergency capability and why we have that," he said.

Radio, newspaper and direct mail are utilized in the hospital's advertising campaigns.

Broyles said the hospital hopes to gain public awareness of the services it provides by advertising. He said he does not think it is a controversial issue.

"I view advertising as informing your market of your availability and with your capacity of providing services," Broyles said. "It's as good as advertising that 911 is available for those who need help."

GUIDELINES

Eligibility: Open to all artists residing in Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Colorado, Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri working in the areas of painting, fiber art, bas relief sculpture or wall sculpture.

Rules of Entry: Each artist may submit two entries (8 slides total) either of proposed ideas for the site, or examples of finished work completed within the last three years. The first round of competition will be judged from 35 mm slides by the committee sponsoring the competition. Please do not send slides that are mounted in glass or are thicker than the standard cardboard mount. Label slides with your name, title of work, medium, dimensions and type of work. Enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for return of slides.

Ship all slides via UPS, U.S. Mail or hand deliver to Student Governing Association, K State Union, Kansas State University, Manhattan, KS 66506. All slides must be received in this office before April 26, 1984.

Selection: The second stage of the competition will be limited to approximately five finalists. The finalists will be requested to produce a scale model of their artwork. Each finalist will be paid $100 to finance the production off the model. The models should not exceed the dimensions of 30" x 12" x 4". The scale models will be returned to the property of the University. Five weeks will be allotted to complete and ship the model to Kansas State University. A juror will work in concert with the committee in the selection of one artist who will receive the commission.

Responsibilities: The winning artist will be responsible for fabricating the work of art (the shipping arrangements and shipping fees, and the installation of the piece, working in conjunction with University Facilities. The work will become the sole property of Kansas State University.

Budget: The total project is not to exceed $8,000 (includes materials, equipment, shipping and labor).

Contractual Agreement: Prior to the production of the artwork, the winning artist must agree to and sign a contractual agreement outlining all responsibilities of the artist and the University.

Suggested size for finished project:
24" x 10" (one piece)
16" x 10" (two pieces each)
12" x 10" (three pieces each)

Faculty should be on time, too

Every once in a while students in a class find themselves waiting for their instructor to arrive. And waiting. At some point, students must decide whether or not to leave.

The actual time students must wait for a tardy instructor is 10 minutes. According to the Faculty Handbook, unless a class is notified of the instructor's absence or late arrival, students are excused after a 10-minute wait.

Students are constantly required to meet deadlines, and it seems reasonable to expect faculty members, who are paid to fulfill certain obligations, to do the same.

Few, if any, teachers are deliberately late to class. In most cases, there is probably an unexpected delay — a last-minute telephone call, inability to find a parking space or hazardous weather conditions.

But faculty should be able to get to class on time, as students must do. Except in an emergency, telephone calls can be returned later, meetings and conversations can be postponed and a person can leave home earlier to find a parking spot.

Reagan's arms buildup excessive

Media attention is focused on the battle between Walter Mondale and Gary Hart, but voters should also consider the latest news generated by another candidate, President Ronald Reagan.

This week Reagan eliminated any possibility of United States-Soviet talks enacting a comprehensive ban on anti-satellite weapons. The president said such a ban would be difficult to verify weapon-by-weapon and would ultimately put the country at risk.

According to the report, "Cheating on anti-satellite limitations, even on a small scale, could pose a disproportionate risk to the United States."

"Anti-satellite limitations" are electronic shields capable of detecting and destroying Soviet missiles launched at the United States.

Because the Soviets have had such a system since the early 1960s, the report indicated the Reagan administration would prefer to build a complete anti-satellite system for the United States before entering into talks with the Soviet Union.

But instead of trying to keep up with the Soviets, Reagan should realize there won't be any country left to defend if he continues to perpetuate such belligerent military buildup.

Investing in South African racism

NEW YORK — A while back, I bought a 1934 issue of Fortune magazine. It is a wonderful thing to behold, full of ads for Packards, Auburns and 16-cylinder Cadillacs, and vacations to what used to be called exotic places. One of those places was Germany and its ad showed the delights to be expected — the Bavarian Alps, the Rhine Valley and a Nazi Party rally.

The year, I repeat, was 1934, and Germany was already embarked upon a program that would culminate in the near annihilation of Europe's Jews. By that date, the character of the Nazi regime was pronounced and unambiguous. I had to wonder what kind of Americans would respond to a magazine ad to visit a country like that, underwriting both it and its programs with tourist dollars.

I get somewhat the same feeling when the issue of American investment in South Africa comes up. The trouble is, aside from an occasional congressman (Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., is an example) or Jesse Jackson, the subject almost never comes up. And when it does, it tends to be discussed as a black concern, like double primaries in the South — an issue for "those people."

At the recent presidential debate here, for instance, Jackson again denounced American investment in South Africa. It brought applause from the audience, but no response from his fellow Democratic candidates, Walter Mondale and Gary Hart, even though right outside the debate hall Columbia University students were demonstrating on just that issue. Even when the issue is addressed, it gets its moral component wrung out of it. Instead of focusing on South African racism, all kinds of financial and foreign-policy considerations get discussed.

But strictly speaking, this is neither a financial nor a foreign-policy issue. It is a moral one. South Africa is a nation that gives blacks no say in the government. It relegates them to second-class citizenship, occasionally strips them of their land and their homes and sometimes, when they complain, kills them.

Of course, like everything else, there are complications. Even some South African blacks argue that the imposition of what would amount to an economic embargo would hurt them more than it would whites. This would probably be the case, since the rule that the poor suffer more than the rich applies even to South Africa.

The Reagan administration not only makes this argument, but says that its policy of making nice-nice to South Africa will prove more effective than treating that country harshly. But it is a policy the administration has not applied to Poland, where it responded to a crackdown on Solidarity with sanctions, nor is it a policy that shows much sign of success. Apartheid is not some momentary fluke in South Africa's history, but a policy based on cruel arithmetic. South Africa is 70 percent black, and repression is the only way whites can maintain control.

But why a harsh policy toward Poland and a soft one toward South Africa? Anti-communism is one answer. However loathsome the South African government might be, it is anti-communist and therefore perceived as no threat to us.

But there is another reason as well, and Jackson has put his finger on it. The repressed minority in South Africa is black and the United States were mostly white. Anti-communist or not, if the South African regime were repressing whites, the government — and the American people — would be shouting bloody murder.

Is this racism? Well, sort of. It is not racism of the Jim Crow variety, but a more subtle kind: the inability to identify with people of a different race, to see them as just people. In the case of South Africa, the oppressed there are seen by many American whites as not just people, and certainly not people like themselves, but something different — blacks.

So American corporations continue to do business in South Africa and the administration continues to treat it cordially. But someday, someone will look at a magazine of our times the way I did the 1934 Fortune and wonder how we Americans could invest in a racist and repressive government. The answer today is the same as it was in 1934: few people give a damn.

College sports no longer amateur

Now that Georgetown has won the National Collegiate Athletic Association basketball championship, and Michigan the National Invitational Tournament, I think it's a good time to re-examine the entity we call "intercollegiate athletics."

College basketball, as well as other intercollegiate sports competition, has revealed a Dr. Jekyll-and-Mr. Hyde split in our university community. On the one hand we have institutions like the University of Nevada at Las Vegas where no starting player on the basketball team has graduated since the program's inception. Players are treated like a set of tires which are run for four years or 50,000 miles, whichever comes first.

On the other hand, there are programs where the admonition, "A mind is a terrible thing to waste," is followed, and players have at least the opportunity to earn a degree.

The problem with this dichotomy is that institutions like UNLV have the pendulum swinging their way. There is tremendous pressure on administrators, coaches and players to win — so much pressure that education becomes only a "hassle" of eligibility.

If you don't believe me, thumb through some back issues of Time or Sports Illustrated magazines to read about the steady stream of dirty tricks used to keep some illiterate star eligible. Or consider that basketball adds $2 million a year to the coffers of the University of Kentucky. On the home front, consider the expectations of the alumnus who donated over a million dollars to the new basketball barn. Surely he has some expectation of seeing Big Eight Conference championship teams play in the building that bears his name.

Even the player with every intent to graduate faces the choice between becoming the best athlete he can or concentrating on the books, only to be disappointed when he "blows" a clutch play or shot.

There are people who say student athletes can juggle the two effectively. Los Angeles Ram quarterback and Rhodes Scholar Pat Haden is one of the few I can think of. But what do we say to the others? Forget the degree because you're pro material?

TOM FIEGEN
Guest Columnist

Statistics show the odds of a college player going pro are mighty slim. The National Football League only drafts 320 college players from a pool of over 41,000. The National Basketball Association drafts only about 160 from 15,000 college basketball players. On top of that, the rookie has to outplay the veteran to make the team, which is rare.

Even then, their pro career seldom lasts three years. The final result is a washed up 24-year-old star with no education, marketable skills or future and an awful lot of "also-rans," who were promised as much and got even less.

So what's the answer? I used to think it was a return to the brand of amateur athletics we played 50 years ago where interested students show up the opening day of practice. We still like to fantasize about the walk-on who puts the school on the map. Realistically, however, those days are gone.

Winning, unfortunately, has become the only thing in college sports. It brings recognition, cash, donations and fresh talent. I applaud the efforts of university presidents to curtail academic dishonesty, but it only serves to further reward those who devise new ways to "bend" the rules.

I think the real answer lies in recognizing our teams are no longer amateur. Bring the recruiting scam above board for all schools, not just those with a conscience.

Second, separate a student's playing years and learning years. Let a player devote full-time to athletics for four years and put their scholarship money in escrow. Then at the end of the four years provide them with remedial classes and all the other help they need to succeed in academics. If the player is lucky enough to land a pro contract, allow them to return to school after they retire.

You might ask, why do I care about jocks? I have a sister, Julie, who at 6-foot has started at center since her freshman year in college. She graduated at the top of her high school class and is generally doing well in college. But she is not getting the most out of her classes, what with four- and five-day road trips plus extensive practice.

I also have a younger brother, Terry, with a 54-inch chest who bench presses 300-plus pounds with one arm, and who has flunked out of college and NCAA Division II football programs twice. This spring he's trying to play football and go to class for the third time, but at a smaller school.

Also, I think it reflects poorly on faculty and students alike to be associated with schools that compromise academic achievement in the interest of winning. It also reflects poorly on us when we allow our school to play colleges that treat players like tires.

So I speak from a personal concern for little brothers and sisters who aspire to have the best of both worlds and a shot at the big time. I think a split athletic-academic program would give them and other athletes the opportunity to be the best — the best possible student and the best possible athlete.

Our colleges have already demonstrated their ample concern with the latter. I just hope that when, and if, the Georgetown basketball players step across the platform to accept their diplomas, they receive a bigger ovation than they got Monday night when they won the NCAA Championship.

Parking fee proposal treats staff unfairly

Editor,

In the March 29 issue of In-View (faculty/staff newsletter), the first article concerns changes in campus parking and traffic regulations. This article is very misleading.

Reading the first paragraph led us to believe a proposal was being considered to eliminate the $20 parking fee for people earning under $10,000 a year. We thought that was great. However, a more astute fellow employee explained to us this was not the case. Telephone calls to the Faculty Senate offices revealed that in fact the proposal was to increase everyone's (faculty/staff) parking fees to $40 a year. The reason for this increase to $40 is, and we quote, "so few university employees fall into this annual salary bracket."

We find it hard to believe that "so few" people earn under $10,000 — especially staff. The average Union employee starts out at below $4 an hour, which is certainly far less than $10,000 a year. Merit increases have been frozen by Gov. Carlin, so there is no hope for any raises in the near future.

We just want this administration to be fair. Why should a person who makes $6,000 a year have to pay the same fee as someone who makes $50,000? Be fair! At what other business in Manhattan do you have to pay to park where you work?

Employees who are working at this University while putting their spouses through college get a double whammy of paying increased tuition (not to mention books and supplies), plus having to pay to park where they work so their spouse can get an education from this University. Come on! Most students live within walking distance — most faculty/staff do not.

If hearing officer Gene Cross will check the records (pay scales), he will see our concern is justified. They will speak for themselves.

Open house coverage needs improvement

Editor,

As a senior in construction science, I would like to express my disappointment in the staff of the Collegian concerning the coverage of the All-University Open House activities last weekend.

The annual open house is a special project in which many students and faculty members become deeply involved. Open house is a special opportunity for the general public and potential future students to observe the type of education received and projects in which students at this University are involved.

I can only speak for the College of Engineering. Open house is not just an activity that is prepared for within a week. From a combination of many months of hard work and the generation of new ideas, students and faculty present displays of which everyone can be proud and a College of Engineering that is second to none.

The College of Engineering holds a banquet each year at the closing of open house to present outstanding departmental display awards. For the second year in a row, construction science has excelled in receiving these awards. This year construction science won both outstanding display awards, the overall departmental award, and the Yellow Brick Award for the outstanding department in the University parade. Along with these three awards, our department also was presented with the All-University Parade Participant Award for first place.

Open house is probably the largest single annual activity that takes place on campus. I cannot understand why no one took the time to even write one paragraph and recognize the outstanding departments in the University. A similar letter was written last year concerning this same issue. As you can see, it did not change the pattern of the Collegian's staff of covering open house. I only hope that next year something is actually done to inform the public and the students of this University concerning the activities and displays presented each year by students and faculty members who try so hard to make each year's open house successful. This is a University paper. Therefore, University activities should be presented to inform the public and the student body.

Film depicts youth rebellion

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

Maybe the most amazing thing about "Time Stands Still" is that the Hungarian government allowed such an uncomplimentary view of life in their country to be depicted.

Theoretically, there shouldn't be any rebel-without-a-cause revolts going on in a country deep in the shadow of the Soviet Union. But director Peter Gothar takes a bold step forward and directly challenges the image of the youth that the government would like westerners to think is the norm.

Review

The time is 1963. The music is Elvis Presley's "Don't Be Cruel" and Little Richard's "Tutti Frutti". Neon lighting has arrived from America, as well as Coca-Cola. The Hungarian teenagers are immersed in images of America. This occurs because they want to escape the Hungary of their elders.

For some, that escape means actually running across the border. For others, escape is only a temporary show of defiance before gradually becoming part of the establishment they abhor. In the meantime, their lives are saturated with the music and attitudes of a land they envision as the promised land.

What makes their plight so intriguing is that these youths are rebels who should have had a cause. They were raised during the political upheaval of Budapest in 1956. Virtually all of the adults in the film are identified by where they stood during the resistance fighting of 1956.

"Time Stands Still" begins with a brief glimpse into this past, using newsreel footage of the armed troops who were hunting down the resistance fighters. These shots are intercut with scenes showing the film's major characters at that time.

A father begs his family to flee from the country with him, but they won't go. He is forced to leave them behind. His wife and two sons watch from their apartment window as his truck speeds away. The frame then freezes and color gradually overtakes the black-and-white images. Seven years have elapsed. The boys have become teenagers.

One of these boys becomes the film's central character — Dini. He is not interested in political matters; his life instead is centered around his obsession with romance and sex. There is a beautiful girl in the school — Magda — who is interested in him, but he hardly gives her a glance, treating her with a coolness that she ultimately revenges upon him by having sex with his sex-hungry brother. Because of his anger — anger caused by his own hesitancy to show any interest in Magda — he becomes a rebel, wishing to join with the rebel leader in an attempt to crash the border.

The confusion of identity is best typified by this leader, Pierre. He interrupts the head school master's speech concerning the anniversary of the liberation of the workers by shouting the titles of American rock 'n' roll songs. Sandor Soth, as Pierre, brings a great deal of charisma with his self-assured strut, striking poses becoming of a rock 'n' roll performer.

Aniko Ivan (as Magda) is equally impressive as the girl only interested in fulfilling her own sensual desires. Her face with its comely smile has a destructive, almost haunting edge. Istran Znamenak as Dini gives his role a quiet reserve, but when called upon to step forward, he commands the screen.

Director Gothar has utilized many camera movements that help to recreate the anxiety of these youths. At times his devices call attention to themselves, but at the same time they effectively present the characters' feelings of alienation.

Some of his techniques are quite derivative; there is a touch of Hitchcock, Welles, Truffaut and Godard. There is even a hint of the explosive energy present in Richard Lester's "A Hard Day's Night" as the cameras trolley ahead, looking back as the boys run down the street, onto their street and into their school, smashing the framed pictures in the hallway. At times it seems like maybe this has all been done before, but Gothar is able to successfully integrate the anxiety in the atmosphere into the manner he uses his devices.

With all of its virtues, "Time Stands Still" isn't nearly as gripping as it could have been. Some of the plot developments seem almost arbitrary, without a strong sense of the inevitability they are supposed to have. The problem may be that the film does not have a recurring motif to tie the scenes together. Whereas in "American Graffiti" the youths had drag racing to serve as a recurring motif, "Time Stands Still" drifts at times with the same lack of motivation as the characters. Ultimately these flaws are somewhat insignificant in a film that offers a vista of life that had gone unexplored until now. And that vista shows these youths to be essentially the same as youth's from the west, always searching but never quite sure what they're searching for.

Month-long mission to test yoga in space

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — India's first cosmonaut and his two Soviet colleagues docked their spacecraft with an orbiting space station on Wednesday to begin a month that will include weightless yoga exercises.

Soviet television and the official news agency Tass said the Soyuz T-11 linked up with the Salyut 7 25 hours after the Soyuz T-11 blasted off from Soviet central Asia.

The television footage did not show the cosmonauts transferring to the station to greet the three Soviet spacemen who have been aboard the Salyut 7 since Feb. 9.

But pictures from the flight control center in Baikonur showed officials watching a large screen with the Soyuz T-11 approaching the orbiting space station. The spectators burst into applause as the two vehicles appeared to link up four minutes ahead of schedule.

Radio Moscow said the six cosmonauts planned a dinner to celebrate the international crew's arrival. The radio did not say, however, whether Rakesh Sharma, the 35-year-old Indian cosmonaut, and his Soviet colleagues would try out the curry and mangoes the international crew carried into space.

Sharma, flight commander

Yuri V. Malyshev, 42, and flight engineer Gennadi M. Strekalov, 43, are to conduct some 43 experiments aboard the Salyut 7 before returning to Earth on April 10. Soviet officials have said.

Among the experiments will be one in which Sharma will practice yoga to test its effect on space sickness.

The Indian-Soviet mission was top news throughout India on Wednesday. "Our Man Soars Into Space," bannered the Hindustan Times. "First Indian Soars Into Space" was the headline in the Times of India.

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, in a message to the cosmonauts from New Delhi, said the mission was "yet another outstanding example of the constructive cooperation for the good of our two peoples which our friendship has always fostered."

India's External Affairs Ministry also made public a message to the cosmonauts from Soviet leader Konstantin U. Chernenko.

"Your flight is natural result of the fruitful cooperation developing for many years between the U.S.S.R. and India in the peaceful exploration of outer space and graphically demonstrates the traditional friendship of the Soviet and Indian peoples," Chernenko's message said.

The National Bestseller That Takes You Inside America's Most Powerful Law Firms

"I have never read any book that more effectively captures the essence of lawyering in a great firm on a great case."

—Neal Johnson
The New York Times Book Review

"Vividly describes the behind-the-scenes stories of major cases, bringing to life the spectacular gambits and inhuman toll... first rate... with episodes that should make talented third-year law students blanch."

—Newsweek

"Who will read the book? Every lawyer in these named law firms. Who should read the book? Every lawyer who is thinking about joining one of these law firms. Offers disturbing insights on the partnerships of eight nationwide law firms... in plain English—not legalese."

—San Francisco Chronicle

"A book that not only delights those who have never seen the inside of a corporate law firm, but rings true for those who have devoted their lives to these firms as well."

—The New Republic

"Stewart has created a book which is half thriller, half moral primer. Airing dirty laundry as well as legal strategy, Stewart's book reads something like The Brethren, but seems better documented and less voyeuristic. The Partners has a powerful sense of drama. The book is very hard to put down."

Woman charged in alteration case

WICHITA — A former employee of the Sedgwick County Clerk's office has been charged with stealing and altering payroll records in the clerk's office.

Judy F. Smith, 36, who resigned last summer and now works in the Haysville City Clerk's office, was charged Tuesday in Sedgwick County District Court with one count of theft and 11 counts of making a false writing by altering payroll time sheets from October 1981 through May 1982.

District Attorney Clark Owens said Smith was accused of collecting about $1,000 by manipulating county payroll records to indicate she was working when she actually was sick or on vacation.

Smith, who faces a maximum of 10 years in prison on each of the 12 charges if convicted, was released on $1,000 bond.

Owens said Smith worked in the county clerk's office from Jan. 18, 1980, until July 11, 1983. Officials said her resignation was not related to the investigation that produced the charges.

American show builds a dynasty

OSLO, Norway — On a recent Wednesday, not one person showed up for the 9 p.m. showing of the American movie "Having It All" at the Frogner movie theater, and theater owners blame the American soap opera "Dynasty."

The intrigues of the Blake Carrington family are shown on Norway's one-channel television every Wednesday night.

Churches, chapels and missions also have started moving their meetings from Wednesdays to other weekdays. So are sport clubs and other organizations across the country.

"Having It All," a movie by director Edward Zwick with Dyan Cannon and Barry Newman in lead roles, drew good audiences on other weekdays in Oslo and on the first performance March 28.

Figures from Oslo, Bergen, Skien, Drammen, Narvik and other Norwegian cities reveal that movie theater audiences on an average have been cut by 50 percent on Wednesday nights.

Some smaller theaters in rural areas have simply stopped showing films on Wednesdays because people prefer watching Alexis, Fallon and Krystel.

Smurf's success surprises creator

KINGS MILLS, Ohio — Belgian writer-artist Pierre "Peyo" Culliford, who created the Smurfs 26 years ago, says he still isn't sure why children took so readily to the cartoon characters.

Culliford, 55, who speaks French but little English, was interviewed through an interpreter Tuesday as he visited the Kings Island amusement park near Cincinnati. Kings Island and other U.S. parks created by Cincinnati-based Taft Broadcasting Co. are licensed to use the Smurfs to decorate park attractions.

Culliford, who lives in Brussels, said he works 60 to 70 hours a week on Smurfs creations or on approving their use for various purposes.

Jack Rouse, who served as interpreter, said Culliford "wants to keep drawing, for his children and his grandchildren and the child in him."

The Smurfs resulted from Culliford's need to create imaginary, non-human characters in a children's book he was writing about two adventurous characters in the Middle Ages named Johann and Pee Witt.

Strikers rebel against violence in India

By The Associated Press

CHANDIGARH, India — Police arrested about 300 people Wednesday during a general strike to protest growing violence in northern India, and a Sikh terrorist group threatened to kill a politician a day until its demands were met.

The government declared Chandigarh, joint capital of violence-torn Punjab and Haryana states, a "disturbed region." The declaration empowers police to shoot lawbreakers on sight and to make searches and arrests without warrants.

In Parliament, the opposition demanded that Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government step down for failing to curb Sikh terrorism that has claimed more than 125 lives in two months.

Militant Sikhs are waging a campaign for greater religious and political autonomy in Punjab state, about 150 miles northeast of New Delhi. While a minority in Hindu-dominated India, they are the majority in Punjab.

Sikh attacks on Hindus and government officials have prompted some retaliatory attacks, and several Parliament deputies said during debate that they feared widespread rioting if the terrorism is not quelled.

More than 350 people have been assassinated in Sikh-dominated Punjab in the last three years. According to the government, Amritsar's historic Golden Temple — seat of the Sikh faith — is being used as an arsenal and a sanctuary for fugitives.

The Dashmesh Regiment, a little-known Sikh terrorist group, said in a letter to a newspaper in Punjab state that it would murder one political figure a day until the government lifts a ban on a radical Sikh student organization.

The terrorist group has claimed responsibility for assassinating two Hindu politicians and one moderate Sikh leader in the past seven days.

Authorities outlawed the All-India Sikh Students Federation last month, charging that it advocated separatism and fanned tensions between Hindus and Sikhs.

The general strike, called by the right-wing Indian People's Party, shut markets, businesses and factories in New Delhi, the Jammu region and the states of Haryana and Himachal Pradesh.

In the Indian capital, hundreds of strikers hurled rocks and damaged several city buses. Police used metal-tipped bamboo staves to scatter crowds that attempted to set buses on fire. A post office was ransacked.

Police said about 300 people were arrested, including about 200 activists of opposition parties charged with violating a ban on public gatherings of more than four people.

Interferon may be key to halting AIDS

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Researchers have discovered a key, potentially treatable, defect in the immune systems of AIDS victims, strengthening the hope that interferon will be the first effective medicine for the lethal disease.

They said their findings "can be viewed as encouraging," because in the test tube, at least, interferon will restore the ability of AIDS victims to ward off germs.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome destroys the body's power to repulse even the most ordinary viruses and bacteria. Many AIDS patients become overwhelmed by everyday microbes, and it is these "opportunistic infections" that often kill them.

The researchers found that AIDS victims do not produce a substance called gamma interferon, a vital link in the body's intricate defenses against disease. But in the test tube — and presumably in the body as well — doctors can rearm their immune systems by giving them extra doses of this interferon.

"It holds the promise of being able to bypass the defunct immune system entirely and deliver what we think is the key product that you've got to have to be able to kill most of the organisms that infect these patients," Dr. Henry W. Murray, who directed the research, said in an interview.

Studies are already under way in at least two medical centers to see whether gamma interferon made through genetic engineering will do exactly that in AIDS victims. It's still too early, however, to know whether the treatment works.

The latest research, conducted at Cornell University Medical College, found that when challenged by germ toxins, the AIDS victims' blood does not produce gamma interferon.

"The failure to produce this molecule may explain why patients with AIDS are vulnerable to, and unable to control, and die from opportunistic infections," they wrote in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

In February, doctors at New England Deaconess Hospital in Boston began treating AIDS patients with gamma interferon.

Last month, doctors also started using it at San Francisco General Hospital on people with Kaposi's sarcoma, a cancer common among AIDS victims. The director of that study, Dr. Paul Volberding, said gamma interferon may prove to control the symptoms of AIDS without curing the underlying disease, much as insulin is used to treat diabetes.

In healthy people, gamma interferon is produced by white blood cells called helper T cells. AIDS victims have far fewer of these T cells than do healthy folks, and the ones that remain don't work right.

Ordinarily, these helper T cells produce gamma interferon when they are exposed to germs. This substance activates other blood cells called macrophages. And they, in turn, release hydrogen peroxide and kill the microbes. When macrophages from the AIDS victims were given extra doses of gamma interferon, they functioned normally.

So far, more than 3,500 Americans have been stricken with AIDS, and more than 1,300 of them have died.

French citizens plan tribute to honor American war hero

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Liliane Jordan, 16, huddled in a bunker with other civilians the night Army Sgt. Bill Finley liberated the City Hall of Cherbourg, France.

Finley, a strapping 20-year-old from the Corn Belt, leaped into the bunker, grenade in hand.

"Je suis française (I am French)," Jordan cried. Finley didn't pull the pin, and introduced himself to the more than 20 terrified men, women and children who had thrown up their hands.

To Jordan and the citizens of Cherbourg, Bill Finley of Decatur, Ill., symbolized the American liberation of their city. The Germans had occupied Cherbourg, a strategic port on the English Channel, for 1,758 days.

This summer the City of Cherbourg will dedicate a tablet in Finley's memory when it observes the 40th anniversary of its liberation during World War II.

Finley died of combat wounds nine months after the liberation of Cherbourg.

When the people of the city decided to honor the young American, they were unable to trace him at first. A city archivist who had spoken with the soldier had spelled his name as Tinley.

A search by reporters and government and military officials on both sides of the Atlantic ended last week when Ted Shepherd of Decatur read a newspaper story about his boyhood friend and told Finley's sisters, Jacqueline Neff and Betty Simms.

The sisters agreed that the newspaper story bore an amazing similarity to their brother's experiences and got in touch with the Decatur Herald and Review which had published the story. The paper referred the sisters to The Associated Press bureau in Chicago, which relayed their information to France and ultimately verified the sisters' story.

Last Sunday, Cherbourg's mayor said the search was over and that William Finley was the American soldier the city had sought.

Finley's family was elated that Cherbourg will honor their Bill and that the French remembered his kindness as well as his courage.

"My brother was the type of man to go in and help anybody," Neff said.

Three weeks after Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower launched the greatest seaborne invasion in history, landing an Allied force on the beaches of Normandy, Finley was among the first foot soldiers to enter Cherbourg behind American tanks.

Late that evening of June 26, 1944, with German machine guns chattering, an American soldier dashed across an open square to a pillar on the steps of Cherbourg's City Hall.

Under his cover, three men moved up, and together they crashed into the city's administrative offices, liberating them from German control. The Allies had captured an excellent harbor, and Cherbourg had gained its freedom.

Though no witness could be found who saw Finley enter Cherbourg's City Hall, the evidence accumulated during the search left no doubt among city officials that he was their man.

Liliane, who married a sailor and is now Liliane Reed of Parkersburg, W.Va., recalled how frightened she was when Finley burst into the shelter. She was separated from her parents, who lived outside the city, and she had just spent more than two weeks in a German work camp. "He was very polite. That was what was so remarkable. There were so many soldiers coming through and a lot of them were very rough," she recalled in a telephone interview.

"He introduced himself and shook hands with us," she said.

Reed remembered the tall, sturdily built soldier as homesick, gentle and considerate. She said, "He was trying to tell us he wanted to go home" to the friends and relatives he was never to see again.

Finley, who had quit Decatur High School at age 17 to enlist, spoke little French. Reed knew no English, but they communicated well enough to become friends.

Finley spent the night in the shelter, sleeping on a blanket his new French friends spread on the ground for him. Before he fell asleep, Finley winked at Reed.

Finley left the shelter the next day and rejoined his outfit to fight in Germany. He and Reed wrote to each other a couple of times.

Then, Reed said, Finley's letters stopped coming. She received a letter from his parents, saying he had been killed in action and had never celebrated his 21st birthday.

Finley belonged to the 39th Infantry Regiment of the 9th Division. On March 30, 1945, he was wounded by shrapnel but remained on duty. Two days later, April 1, in Winterburg, Germany, he died of what the Army said were "a gunshot wound and multiple severe wounds of the chest and left wrist."

Finley was buried in Margraten, Holland, in Plot VV, Row 10, Grave 243 of the American Military Cemetery.

"He deserves this honor," Neff said. "My brother was that kind of guy. He didn't think of himself first."

Scientists test safety of anti-cancer drug

By The Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — A new anti-cancer drug stimulates the body's natural cancer-fighter, interferon, by safely mimicking a viral infection, a researcher said Wednesday.

Laboratory studies suggest that the artificially induced interferon will be more effective against cancer than existing synthetic interferons, which in early trials have produced mixed results against various forms of cancer, the researcher said.

The first human trials in the United States to determine the safety of the drug have begun, said Dr. Paul Ts'o of the Johns Hopkins University School of Hygiene and Public Health in Baltimore. Trials of the drug's effectiveness at treating cancer in humans will follow.

The drug is one of a new class of so-called biological response modifiers, which attempt to provoke the body's defenses — in this case, interferon — to fight cancer. Existing drugs are merely toxic agents intended to kill cancer cells.

In studies with tumor cells taken from 50 patients, at least half of the tumor samples responded to the new drug, called Ampligen.

The samples that responded were reduced in size by at least 50 percent, Ts'o said. He did not present data suggesting that the drug could completely eliminate tumor cells.

The drug has been shown in human trial in other countries to be possibly effective in kidney and colon cancer. Liver cancer and stomach cancer are other likely targets, said Ts'o, speaking at the annual American Cancer Society science writers' seminar.

He said it will likely take up to two years to test the drug against those cancers.

He said a big obstacle to wide use of the drug is that it is toxic, causing fever and provoking an attack by the body's immune system.

Trials have shown, however, that low doses can be effective without being excessively toxic, Ts'o said.

Board names publications executives

Members of the Board of Student Publications met Wednesday to select students to be summer Collegian editor and advertising manager and 1984-1985 Royal Purple Yearbook editor.

Lauri Diehl, junior in pre-veterinary medicine, was named summer 1984 Collegian editor; Dawn Hagen, senior in journalism/mass communications, was chosen summer 1984 Collegian advertising manager; and Laurie Randall, junior in journalism/mass communications, was selected as 1984-1985 Royal Purple editor.

Diehl is currently Collegian assistant government editor and has worked as a Collegian reporter and intern for the Washington County News. Hagen has been a Collegian advertising representative for the past three semesters. Randall is the current sports editor for the Royal Purple and has been editor for both yearbook and newspaper at Cowley County Community College.

Applications for fall 1984 Collegian editor and fall 1984 Collegian advertising manager are due by 4 p.m. April 6 in Kedzie 103. Any student may apply.

Student fined for smoking in theater

A K-State student who was arrested at an Aggieville theater Monday night pleaded guilty Wednesday in Riley County District Court to a charge of smoking in a public theater.

Douglas Laverne White, freshman in arts and sciences, 106 Marlatt Hall, entered the plea before Judge Harlan Graham, who fined White $15 and ordered him to pay $84 court costs. White was not represented by an attorney at the 1:15 p.m. arraignment.

Riley County Police Department officers arrested White shortly before 11 p.m. Monday at the Varsity Theatre, 1125 Moro St. Police said management at the theater had requested officers to remove two people who were creating a disturbance. When officers arrived, they found White, one of the two, smoking inside the theater.

negotiations" to bring about a regional peace settlement in Central America.

By a vote of 59-36, the lawmakers rejected a proposal by Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., to bar the president from sending U.S. armed forces into El Salvador or Salvadoran airspace for combat unless Congress has declared war or enacted a specific authorization.

Leahy said he made his move, as an amendment to an appropriations bill containing $61.7 million in emergency military aid for the Salvadoran regime, because of his "clear conviction that we are going to reach the point of having American combat forces in El Salvador within a year."

It was a sunny 75 degrees on March 24 at the University of California-Nike Invitational track meet at Berkeley. For K-State's Deb Pihl, it was a day for winning races.

Pihl won the the 3,000-meter run that day, setting a new school record and lowering her personal mark.

"I ran that race by myself," Pihl said. "There was going to be great competition there, but I ran the first mile in 4:53 and the next person ran about a 5:09, so I was pretty much on my own. There were a lot of Californians (at the meet), and some from Oregon, Idaho, Montana — all along the West Coast. I was the lone Kansan."

The 5-foot-5, 98-pound middle distance runner has made it her goal to finish in the top three at the Olympic trials at the end of June, which will qualify her for the 1984 Olympic Games.

"I'd like to be a national champ," Pihl said. "And I want to be an all-American (outdoor). I want to make the finals in the Olympic trials."

"Her chances are getting better and better as long as she continues to grow and grow," Head Track Coach Steve Miller said. "I expect her to win anything she runs in, between a half mile and 10,000 meters."

At the National Collegiate Athletic Association indoor track meet in March, Pihl's third-place finish in the 1000-meter run elevated her to all-American status. Being an all-American is not new to her. In 1982 she was a cross country all-American.

Pihl holds K-State indoor records in the 1000-yard run, mile run and is part of the record running two-mile relay team. She also holds the outdoor record in the 3000-meter run.

Her record time in the mile at the Big Eight Conference indoor meet last winter broke Mary Decker's (University of Colorado) conference record. The coaches and meet directors voted her the outstanding athlete of the meet.

Despite not running the mile until her senior year at Lindsborg High School, the native of Falun won the mile and the 880-yard run at the state meet.

Pihl had scholarship offers from junior colleges, but wanted to attend a larger school. She wasn't recruited by K-State and wasn't given a scholarship until her sophomore year.

Last summer Pihl competed internationally in Scandinavia — mainly in Finland and Sweden. She went with Athletes in Action, a Christian group of about 25 athletes, both male and female. They competed in meets about every other day, Pihl said.

"Some of the meets were pretty low key. Some were big meets. A lot of the competitors were athletes who will compete in the Olympics for their own countries. There was some pretty stiff competition."

"I gained international experience and you need it in running, mostly for tactical purposes — when to go and when to hold back. It was one of the best experiences I've had," she said.

Pihl trains by running 70 to 80 miles per week. She runs twice a day. In the morning she runs 30 to 40 minutes. In the afternoon, she works out on the track doing repetitions, or Miller sends her on hard-road runs. Once a week she does speed work. Three times a week she lifts weights.

Pihl is not on a special diet, but is "very health conscious."

"I make sure I get the four R's, but I eat a lot of carbohydrates. I love spaghetti and ice cream. I don't like to eat hamburgers and french fries. We have to weigh in every day. I don't like to go over 101. That's about my best running weight."

Pihl graduated in December, so she has no conflicts with school work and the four hours a day of practice. She is continuing to take classes this semester.

"(But) after four hours a day, you don't feel much like studying," she said.

A great deal of Pihl's preparation before a race is mental.

"I go through the race in my mind and plan the strategy. Right now I'm becoming a lead runner. I used to sit back and wait, but now I'm taking the lead. I picture myself winning."

"The coach talks to me before the race. Depending on who's in the race, he tells me what my splits should be, if I should take the lead right away or hold back. He's the one person I can hear. When I'm running I usually manage to block everything else out, but I can still hear him."

"Deb's only been running seriously, I'd say, for the last three years,"

Miller said. "Mary Decker has been running since she was 13-years-old. She's (Pihl) had to change emotionally. You have to run with purpose. That's been a bigger struggle for her than physical development."

"Deb has accomplished a great deal, especially with her meager beginning — from a small school with no cross country and no serious background as a runner. It's like a scholar going to college without having gone to school before."

"The fact that Deb has qualified (for the Olympic trials) puts her in an elite class of athletes in the United States, in fact, the world," Miller said.

"I have a long way to go. I feel like I'm just starting. I'll have four more good years to gain experience and get stronger, then I'll be ready for 1988 (Olympics), but you never know what can happen in 1984," Pihl said.

Pihl said she is looking toward the 1988 Games. She wants to remain in Manhattan and continue training under Miller. Support for her effort will come from an outside job and a club which provides money and equipment to Olympic athletes. She had talked to Nike for equipment and can receive sponsorship money after finishing school.

Looking past the 1988 games, Pihl said she'll still be running.

"After I've come to my peak in track, I may hit the marathon scene. I know it won't be within the next four years. I like to be on the track and run fast. Marathon is the last thing I'll do in competition."

"I always thought I'd like to coach (her major is physical education and exercise science). While I'm training though, I don't think it would work," she said.

Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Pihl, Deb's parents, travel to some of the meets to watch their daughter run.

"My mom gets so excited. I'll be way ahead and she'll cover her eyes. 'I can't look, I can't look'."

"My dad is really proud — the Big Eight, you know. They're real concerned about my training. Sometimes I get run down and Mom gets concerned."

"I remember during play days (in elementary school) I won three blue ribbons. That was in the 75- or 100-yard dash. I liked to long jump and high jump then. But I like to run the best."

Jabbar ready to dunk scoring record

By The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Los Angeles Lakers' center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar needs 21 points tonight against the Utah Jazz to break Wilt Chamberlain's all-time National Basketball Association scoring record — a mark that once was considered unsurpassable.

The nation's gambling capital is rolling out the red carpet for the game, which is expected to draw a capacity crowd of more than 18,000 fans, with 14,000 tickets already sold by Wednesday.

Those expected to attend include Chamberlain, NBA Commissioner

David Stern, Nevada Gov. Richard Bryan, and Abdul-Jabbar's parents, Ferdinand and Cora Alcindor.

In his 15th season in the NBA, Abdul-Jabbar has 31,399 regular-season points after scoring 27 against the San Antonio Spurs Tuesday night. Chamberlain, who played 14 seasons, scored 31,419 points. However, Abdul-Jabbar already is the leader in total points — regular-season and playoffs — with 35,031, five more than Chamberlain.

"It's a great personal achievement, the 36-year-old player said in anticipation of breaking Chamberlain's record.

"To be No. 1 in anything in American sport is something to be proud of. I'm very thankful and I hope everyone thinks I deserve it."

Chamberlain is one who agrees that Abdul-Jabbar deserves it.

"If anyone is deserving to break that record, it's definitely, definitely him," Chamberlain said. "I'm proud that he will have it."

The 7-foot-2 Abdul-Jabbar has averaged 20.3 points per game against the Jazz this season, but scored 29 in their last meeting at Los Angeles. He has scored 20 or more points in the Lakers' last 17 games.

He has been named the NBA's Most Valuable Player six times, played in 14 All-Star Games and was named the league's Rookie of the Year when he broke in with the Milwaukee Bucks in the 1969-70 season.

If Abdul-Jabbar breaks the record, officials plan to stop the game and conduct a brief ceremony, with Stern congratulating him and Chamberlain presenting him with the game ball.

The USA cable network is televising the game nationally starting at 9:30 p.m. If Abdul-Jabbar fails to break the mark tonight, USA cable will televise Friday night's game, also starting at 9:30 p.m.

Committee decides against shot clock

By The Associated Press

SEATTLE — The National Collegiate Athletic Association's Rules Committee, in a surprise vote, decided Wednesday to put off for at least another season using a 45-second shot clock in college basketball.

The committee will next consider the shot clock issue at a meeting after next year's Final Four tournament in Lexington, Ky. Ed Steitz, the committee's secretary-rules editor, predicted its adoption then.

Steitz, athletic director at Springfield (Mass.) College, was the only committee member appear at a news conference after the closed-door meeting.

Steitz said the committee decided not to go with the shot clock because of uncertainty over whether to use it for the whole game.

'Health yourself'

Counseling Center intern Rick Efros, graduate in education administration and foundations, talks with Deanne Wright, extension specialist in radio and television, about stress management at the third annual dividuals with earnings below that level filed tax returns last year — 37 percent of the total. But they paid only $20.5 billion in federal income taxes, or 7 percent of total collections.

"Health Yourself" health fair in the Union Ballroom on Wednesday. The fair, sponsored by Lafene Student Health Center, featured 24 health stations at which information and various tests were available.

The CBO study did not consider benefits to taxpayers of the sharp decline in the rate of inflation since Reagan took office. The Reagan administration contends lower prices have been of special benefit to low-income people, who must spend a greater share of their earnings.

Households with annual incomes under $10,000 lost $5.6 billion last year under tax and spending changes, the CBO said. Those with incomes of $80,000 or more gained $9.9 billion. Taxpayers with incomes between $10,000 and $20,000 gained $1.4 billion; those between $20,000 and $40,000 picked up $22.6 billion, and households whose incomes range from $40,000 to $80,000 gained $26.8 billion.

The disparities between the low- and high-income groups will worsen this year and next, the study said. The under-$10,000 couples and individuals will lose another $9.4 billion next year; those above $80,000 will gain another $13.1 billion.

NATO officers survey warships as Soviet navy repels air 'attack'

By The Associated Press

LONDON — NATO commanders said Wednesday warships engaged in the Soviet navy's biggest exercise in the North Atlantic are approaching the final phase of the maneuvers after repelling mock air attacks.

A senior officer at NATO's East Atlantic fleet headquarters on London's outskirts, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said the exercise was monitored by NATO forces. He said more than 200 Soviet vessels, led by the 22,000-ton nuclear-powered battle cruiser Kirov and up to 30 major warships, were split into three main groups.

The largest group, 15 major surface ships led by the Kirov which carries an estimated 160 missiles, was positioned northwest of Norway, the source said.

Another flotilla, preceded by at least five Krivak-class anti-submarine frigates, was operating east of Greenland.

The third group, led by a Kynda-class cruiser and four submarines from the Baltic fleet based near Leningrad, was off the Shetland Islands near northern Scotland.

"This flotilla appears to be playing the role of attacking NATO forces," the source reported.

NATO sources said "more than 50" Tu-22M Backfire and Tu-16 Badger medium-range bombers Tuesday staged mock attacks on the Soviet vessels forming the defensive force.

The Soviet exercise began last Wednesday.

Sources said the maneuvers also were detected by NATO's chain of seabed listening devices in the waters between Iceland and Greenland, through which Soviet warships have to pass to reach the Atlantic.

NATO has said the exercise was designed to test the navy's ability to "protect the homeland" and Moscow's command and control systems.

But analysts here speculated that the Soviets also wanted to determine the navy's ability to punch into the Atlantic before NATO navies could trap them inside the Norwegian Sea.

The Soviet exercise coincided with NATO's 35th anniversary Wednesday. It is a mirror-image of a big NATO naval exercise codenamed "Teamwork 84" that ended last month in the Norwegian Sea.

It dovetailed with a land exercise, Avalanche Express, involving 40,000 allied troops designed to rehearse holding Arctic airfields in Norway in the event of a Soviet offensive.

In Washington, the chief of the U.S. Navy said on Wednesday that the Soviet maneuvers were extensive and impressive, but show a weakness.

Navy Secretary John Lehman said in a CBS-TV interview that the Soviets had to divert Backfire bombers from Central Europe to support the naval forces operating in the Norwegian Sea.

The Navy secretary said the mock naval offensive being staged by the Soviets appears aimed at practicing seizure of the northern flank of NATO and severing U.S. seaborne supply lines to forces in Europe.

Records bill to protect university researchers

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A bill which would protect the "intellectual property" of university professors and prevent the commercial use of state motor vehicle records to develop mailing lists passed the House Wednesday, 124-0.

Also by the House and sent to the Senate were bills to authorize the regents to pay the moving and travel expenses of those hired as chief executives officers at state universities and require the state to notify neighbors of hazardous waste sites if groundwater contamination develops. The regents bill carried, 87-35, and the notification measure passed, 124-0.

The House also passed, 96-28, a bill creating "centers of excellence" for development of high technology at the University of Kansas, Kansas State University and Wichita State University, and appropriating $210,000 to each of them.

The records bill is needed to protect research and studies done by faculty at state universities who get patents or copyrights on their projects, proponents said.

Rep. Robert H. Miller, R-Wellington, said the patents are legally owned by the state and subject to the Open Records Act passed last year.

"The law we passed last year was all-encompassing and it catches some things we probably should leave closed," Miller said. "These secrets, defined as intellectual property, of the professors and university faculty members, are open under the law. This bill closes that information and those records and files so no one can steal their secrets."

Miller amended into the bill a previously passed bill, now stalled in a joint conference committee, which makes it illegal for individuals or businesses to use drivers' license records and motor vehicle registrations to build mailing lists for sale and profit.

The mailing-list measure passed both the House and Senate, but no compromise has emerged between the versions which passed the two houses.

The regents bill puts into state law a common practice of paying the travel and moving expenses of anyone hired as a chancellor or president of one of the state's six universities. The Legislature has appropriated the money in the past, when presidents were replaced at state universities.

The bill also allows employees of regents' institutions to travel out-of-state to interview job applicants and be reimbursed.

The Most Sophisticated Training Ground For Nuclear Engineering Isn't On The Ground.

It's on a Navy ship.

The Navy has more than 1,900 reactor-years of nuclear power experience — more than anyone else in America. The Navy has the most sophisticated nuclear equipment in the world. And the Navy operates over half of the nuclear reactors in America.

With a nuclear program like that, you know the Navy also offers the most comprehensive and sophisticated nuclear training.

Every officer in the Nuclear Navy completes a full year of graduate level technical training. Outside the Navy, this kind of program would cost you thousands. In the Navy, you're paid while you learn.

Then, as a nuclear-trained officer, you supervise highly trained personnel in the operation of the most advanced nuclear propulsion plants ever developed. You get a level of technical and management experience unequalled anywhere else.

You get important responsibilities and you get them fast. Because in the Navy, as your knowledge grows, so do your responsibilities.

Today's Nuclear Navy is one of the most challenging and rewarding career choices a man can make. And that choice can pay off while you're still in school. Qualified juniors and seniors earn approximately $1,000 per month while they finish school.

As a nuclear-trained officer, after 4 years with regular promotions and pay increases, you can be earning as much as $40,500. That's on top of a full benefits package that includes medical and dental care, and 30 days' vacation earned each year.

As a nuclear-trained officer, you also earn a place among this nation's most qualified and respected professionals. So, if you're majoring in math, engineering or the physical sciences, send in the coupon. Find out more about the most sophisticated training ground for nuclear engineering. Today's Nuclear Navy.

Iraq may defend itself with chemical warfare

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — While the Reagan administration is pressing for a worldwide ban on chemical weapons, Iraq may be preparing for the "large-scale" use of lethal nerve gas to fend off Iranian attacks in the Persian Gulf, U.S. officials said Thursday.

The "bold American initiative" that President Reagan promised in his news conference Wednesday night will be a proposed treaty which would permit Soviet inspection of U.S. chemical weapons stocks and sites if the Soviets allow similar U.S. searches.

The proposal will be offered within two weeks by Vice President George Bush at the 40-nation Committee on Disarmament, a United Nations group that has been trying for years to draft a new anti-chemical warfare treaty. The Soviets have proposed banning chemical weapons in Europe.

Chemical and biological weapons are outlawed by two international agreements that lack enforcement and verification procedures.

The Soviet Union on Thursday derided Reagan's proposal, saying his calls for verification procedures would destroy any possibility of reaching an agreement on a ban. The official Soviet news agency Tass said Reagan was trying to justify a program for a U.S. buildup of chemical arms.

In Washington, deputy State Department spokesman Alan Romberg said it is "regrettable that the Soviet Union chose to attack the president's initiative before even seeing it."

Last week, the administration charged that the Iraqis used nerve gas to stem Iranian attacks in the war between the two countries. It would be the first time that deadly nerve gas has ever been used in warfare. Earlier, the United States said Iraq had used the less-lethal mustard gas.

Iraq has at least five facilities to produce nerve gas, said U.S. officials who spoke on condition they not be identified.

"You could see some real large-scale use pretty soon if the Iraqis attack again," one official said. "It shows how desperate Iraq is getting, because obviously you pay a heavy price worldwide because of the revolution over these weapons."

While Reagan said the United States would pursue a new treaty, he urged congressional approval of Pentagon proposals to build a new generation of U.S. nerve gas weapons at a Pine Bluff, Ark., facility. The United States has not made chemical weapons since 1969.

Congress has refused that request for three years and a leader of the anti-chemical weapons fight criticized Reagan again Thursday.

Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark., said, "I think it's ironic that as we plan to start producing a whole new family of chemical weapons, we're proposing a ban."

Reagan's proposal was adopted after a bitter interagency fight between the State Department and Pentagon. Officials at State pushed to allow the inspection of U.S. stores and sites and the proposal was resisted at first by the Pentagon, said officials familiar with the negotiations.

Local officials say murder may be linked to fugitive

By The Associated Press

JUNCTION CITY — A young woman stabbed to death last week near Milford Lake may be the victim of a man listed Thursday among the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives," Geary County authorities said.

"We think ours is one of his victims. It is a very good possibility," investigator Albert Buskey of the Geary County Sheriff's Department said Thursday.

Buskey said the FBI sent an agent to Junction City Thursday to assist in the investigation into the slaying of the unidentified woman, who was believed to be between 17 and 19 years old, because of similarities in the death or disappearance of six other women from Florida to Nevada.

The FBI announced a nationwide manhunt Thursday for Christopher Bernard Wilder, 39, a race car driver charged with kidnapping one woman and suspected in the other deaths or disappearances.

Buskey said the similarities include such things as the manner in which the Geary County victim was bound — with silver duct tape and one-quarter inch nylon cord — and the type of wound. Buskey said the young woman died of a stab wound in the back with an eight- to 10-inch blade that entered her chest cavity.

The Geary County investigator said after her body was found March 26 that she was the victim of "a sadistic, brutal killing...There was evidence she had been bound and abused prior to her death. She had a lot of bruises over her entire body."

Three days after the Geary County victim was found dead an 18-year-old woman was reported missing from Grand Junction, Colo. And on Sunday, a 17-year-old girl who had participated in a beauty contest, disappeared from a Las Vegas shopping mall. The FBI said Wilder is wanted for questioning in both cases.

Democrats seek votes in steel country

By The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Democratic presidential candidates, debating in steel country five days before the Pennsylvania primary, vowed to protect the poor and the elderly, saying the Reagan administration has been remiss. Walter Mondale also launched a new attack on the administration's integrity.

Seeking votes in a region with troubled industry, Mondale, Gary Hart and the Rev. Jesse Jackson also promised to protect troubled basic industries such as steel. Hart said he would seek federal loan guarantees if necessary.

"Not a bailout here or there, but the entire steel industry," Hart said. This is the distinction Hart sought to draw recently as he explained his Senate vote against a Chrysler bailout.

He also said he would get "the management of the steel company and the United Steel Workers in the Oval office and negotiate an agreement" for revitalizing the industry.

"The great challenge of our party and our nation is to alter the misery index," said Jackson. "In this administration, the danger index is on the rise. Our party must have an obligation to fight for a peace policy not a war policy."

Mondale, who has been criticizing Reagan appointees who have got in trouble over allegations of misuse of office, ridiculed Reagan's assertion that he would take no action against officials who were the target of allegations still unproven.

He said that standard apparently is "You can stay in government, you can be attorney general, if you haven't been indicted and convicted of something." The reference was to Edwin Meese III, whose nomination is stalled pending a special prosecutor's investigation. Meanwhile, Meese continues as Reagan's counselor.

Mondale said he would protect Social Security at all costs: "I know what these seniors are going through. They're living on nickles and dimes. There are a lot of things we cannot afford, but I for one will not pick on old folks."

He said the nation needs "sound new economic policies," and he vowed to pursue new policies "that will get those God-awful nuclear weapons under control."

The candidates aimed their appeals at the Pennsylvania Democrats who will allocate the next big block of delegates — 172 — in their primary next Tuesday.

The candidates campaigned across the state prior to the showdown where Hart is hoping to avoid the kind of pounding he took from Mondale in their last nationally televised encounter.

"60 Minutes."

The network made two of the three transcripts available to reporters Thursday.

Nixon, occasionally using coarse language, reveals little new about the Watergate episode — break-in at Democratic headquarters, cover-up, recommended impeachment and finally resignation and presidential pardon — but he gives some insights into his personal life during those months.

He recalled his last night in the White House, the night he made the resignation speech on television. He went upstairs to the family quarters, was embraced silently by his wife, daughters and sons-in-law, "saying nothing and saying everything." He found that his suit was soaked with perspiration but he was suffering a chill.

"Soon the chill went away," he said, "and I went down to the Lincoln room and made a few calls to people. Heard the chanting outside. Reminded me of the Vietnam days, except that this time the chant was, 'Jail to the Chief! Jail to the Chief!'"

'Employee' parking spurs council debate

By WAYNE PRICE
Staff Writer

Opposition was aired Thursday to proposed increases in the price of parking permits for faculty and staff members who make $10,000 or less at the K-State Traffic and Parking Council public hearing.

Several proposals concerning changes in parking permits and fees were discussed at the hearing in the Union Big Eight Room.

Answering questions at the hearing were Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities; Betsy Edwards, member of the Traffic and Parking Council; Art Stone, director of K-State Police; and Helen Cooper, a member of the University Facilities staff.

Seven proposed changes will be presented to the Kansas Board of Regents in May:

Changing the faculty/staff designation to "employee"; elimination of the reduced parking permit fee for employees earning $10,000 or less; increasing the cost of both 10- and 24-hour reserved parking stalls; elimination of half-price permits for additional vehicles; changing employee permit effective dates to read from January 15 to January 14 the following year; using a movable parking permit to hang on the rear-view mirror instead of bumper decals; and increasing the $7.50 and $12.50 parking penalties to $8 and $13.

Currently, employees who make less than $10,000 pay $20 for a reserved parking space. Under the new proposal they would have to pay $40, the same amount paid by those who make more than $10,000.

Walt Smith, director of the Union, said the increase seems unrealistic since there was an increase in the price of permits for those employees two years ago, from $10 to $20.

John Pence, head of residence hall food service, agreed. He said this action will affect about 90 percent of his employees.

"I don't believe it's fair to people in the entry-level positions," Pence said. "I think it's going to be a real burden. A lot of times the money for those permits comes from their first paycheck."

One woman, who said she was a part-time employee, said she believes people in her situation are being discriminated against because they are a minority of campus employees.

"By discriminating against us, you're choosing the path of least resistance," she said. "We part-timers are being discriminated against because we don't work a full day. We're an asset to the University; I think it's only fair we're treated that way."

Cross said the council is concerned about deterioration from use of lots, and the only equitable way to cover those costs is to charge a straight fee regardless of position.

He said the purpose of the plan is not to raise funds, but state law requires that parking and misuse fees apply to administration of the parking program and the maintenance of parking lots and roads.

Nixon says break-in 'stupid,' won't apologize

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Reflecting on Watergate nearly a decade after the scandal drove him from the presidency, Richard Nixon says the break-in was illegal and a "very, very stupid thing to do," the attempted cover-up "was stupidity at its very highest," and his failure to destroy the incriminating White House tapes also was "stupid, (they) should have been burned."

But, in a new, paid retelling of his memories, Nixon still said he would not apologize to the American people.

Asked why during the two-year ordeal he never simply went on television and said he had made a mistake and was sorry, Nixon said he will not utter those words.

"There's no way that you could apologize that is more eloquent, more decisive, more finite, or to say that you are sorry which would exceed resigning the presidency of the United States," he told interviewer Frank Gannon. "That said it all. And I don't intend to say any more."

The former president, 71, was interviewed for 38 hours last year by Gannon, a former White House Fellow who helped Nixon write his books.

What resulted was Nixon's longest public re-explanation since the David Frost interviews on television in 1977, for which he reportedly was paid about $1 million. He was paid an undisclosed sum for the new interviews plus a share of the profits from worldwide sales.

CBS reportedly paid $500,000 for broadcast rights to 1½ hours of the Gannon interviews. A 30-minute segment will be aired Sunday on "60 Minutes," another 30 minutes Tuesday on "The American Parade" and the remaining segment April 15 on

Journalist to lecture today

Hodding Carter III will present the 64th lecture in the Alfred M. Landon Lecture Series today at 10:30 a.m. in McCain Auditorium. The Carter address, "Whose News Is It?" is free and open to the public. Seating in McCain will be limited because the balcony is closed.

The lecture will be carried live by Manhattan Cable Channel 6, and a large screen will be available in Union Forum Hall so people unable to gain admittance to McCain can view the lecture.

KSAC, the University's AM radio station, will originate broadcasts for KMAN Radio (1340) and the Kansas Information Network. KSAC will carry the speech in a delayed broadcast at 3 p.m.

Carter, one of the nation's most prominent journalists, was to have spoken Feb. 13, but was forced to cancel his appearance because of illness.

An international expert in application of organic chemistry to the search for petroleum is conducting a 10-hour Petroleum Exploration Geochemistry short course which ends today.

The lectures for the course are being presented by Colin Barker, professor of geosciences at the University of Tulsa. They will run from 1-6 p.m. both days.

The KSU Geology Advisory Council recommended that the Department of Geology sponsor an Energy Short Course Series, funded by interest from an accumulating endowment fund for a K-State Distinguished Professorship of Geology.

Landscape program accredited

K-State is currently the only university in the nation offering two fully accredited degree programs in landscape architecture.

The Landscape Architectural Accreditation Board of the American Society of Landscape Architects recently notified K-State of accreditation of its master's program. The accreditation resulted from a comprehensive review of work in landscape architecture last November.

There are 45 other schools offering accredited programs in the United States.

K-State's bachelor of landscape architecture program, a five-year professional program, has been continuously accredited since 1964.

Students to enter history contest

K-State will be host Saturday for a 10-county district competition in conjunction with this year's Kansas History Day.

Students in grades six through eight will have history projects judged by professionals in a junior category, while students in grades nine through 12 will compete in a senior category.

Certificates and medals will be awarded to participants. The outstanding entries in each category will be eligible to compete in the Kansas History Day state competition to be held May 5 at the Eisenhower Center at Abilene. The top state entries will be judged at the National History Day competition June 13-16 at the University of Maryland.

This year's theme, "Family and Community in History," encouraged students to develop projects on subjects related to their own experience.

Farrell to observe Library Week

National Library Week will be observed next week at Farrell Library with a display of library memorabilia in the main lobby.

The exhibit will include some of the first books added to the library in the late 1800s and photographs showing the physical development of Farrell from its opening in 1927 through several additions.

Other items on display will be a program of the opening day ceremonies, blueprints of the third floor, a list of contents of the cornerstone and newspaper clippings of significant events in Farrell's history.

Professor named adviser of year

Gale Simons, professor of nuclear engineering, has been named the College of Engineering "Adviser of the Year" at K-State.

K-State President Duane Acker presented Simons with the award as a highlight of the Engineering Open House banquet Saturday night.

Candidates for "Adviser of the Year" were nominated by each engineering department, and Simons was then chosen in an election conducted by the Engineering Student Council.

Simons has been a faculty member since 1977.

Training in basics aids Army prisoners

By DIONA NACE
Collegian Reporter

Located at Fort Riley's Camp Funston, the United States Army Correctional Activity is the second level of Army correction.

At the top level is the United States Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, and individual Installation Detention Facilities or "local jails" on individual posts comprise the third and lowest level.

Established in 1968 as the Correctional Training Facility, USACA was renamed the Retraining Brigade in 1973 and later was given its current name.

Although it has gone through some name changes, the basic goals of USACA have never changed. Confinement, separation and correctional treatment for return to duty or release from active duty are the functions of this level of military punishment, Maj. Howard Carey, executive officer of USACA, said.

A prisoner's time at USACA is divided into four phases, which are based on the person's security risk, he said.

Phase one is actual confinement. The "trainee" spends about one-third of his time in actual confinement.

During the first phase, the prisoner's financial, legal and personal problems are identified. Action is begun at this phase to correct these problems and is continued throughout the prisoner's term. Then he is reassigned to a correctional treatment team for phase two.

Phase two combines classroom instruction with strenuous physical activity. The prisoners receive human growth and development training in classes such as "How To Get Along With Others" and "Family Problem Solving."

Carey said one of the main goals of the second phase is to change the prisoner's attitude about himself from one of a loser to that of a winner and to teach him common living skills such as balancing a checking account.

He said a typical day during the second phase may include standing in ranks for inspection and running through an obstacle course in the morning. In the afternoon, a prisoner attends classes.

Carey said one of the main thrusts of the USACA program is an emphasis on physical activity. Hard labor and strenuous exercise are used as tools for teaching discipline.

"We don't hear them complain about the physical work, in fact, they just love climbing cliffs and the slide for life, but we do hear them complain about having to come to class," said Bill Lockhart, assistant professor of continuing education at K-State.

The second phase is conducted in conjunction with the Department of Continuing Education.

Lockhart is head of the Pride Center, which tests trainees in such areas as basic skills levels, aptitudes, financial aid planning, vocational training and support and GT improvement (GT is the military equivalent to an I.Q. test).

After completion of the second phase, a trainee is assigned to a vocational employment team, where he stays until the last two weeks. During the last two weeks, he goes through out-processing to get out of the Army.

Carey said that many of the short-term prisoners had been convicted of offenses such as insubordination that wouldn't have been legal offenses outside the Army, but might have resulted in them being fired from a job.

He said Camp Funston also confines long-term prisoners, those serving one to two years, and those with punitive discharges, which are basically the opposite of an honorable discharge. Those receiving a punitive discharge are not eligible for re-enlistment.

Briefings about job openings, diagnostic testing, individual counseling and educational opportunities assist the trainees in making the transition to civilian life.

"With so many of these guys leaving the Army and going home to school or work, we want to help them think things through, because they are going to be under a lot of pressure from family and friends to get jobs. When they get out of here, we want them to have a plan to follow," Lockhart said.

Coliseum fund-raising drive nears goal

By PAUL ENGLIS
Collegian Reporter

The KSU Foundation expects to reach its goal of $7 million in its fund-raising drive for the Fred Bramlage Coliseum, reported Art Loub, executive vice president of the KSU Foundation, when he spoke Thursday at the Student Senate meeting.

Loub told senators $6.1 million has been pledged by K-State alumni and friends.

The $7 million from alumni will be added to $7 million from student fees and $2 million from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. The estimated cost of the coliseum is $16 million, Loub said.

Loub said the coliseum will be unique because it will be built with no state funds.

"This will be the first coliseum built at a state institution where no state money is being put into it," he said.

The fund-raising drive for the coliseum has expanded the Foundation's base of support, Loub said.

The Foundation has gone from 9,400 donors in 1979 to more than 24,000 donors currently. In the same time period, annual contributions have gone from $2 million to more than $8 million. In addition, the assets of the Foundation have risen from $17 million in 1979 to more than $40 million currently, Loub attributed the increase to the Foundation's coliseum fund-raising drive.

Because this was the Foundation's first major fund drive, it was vital to K-State, Loub said.

"Your first major fund-raising effort had better be a success," he said. "If we couldn't raise the money, it would be an embarrassment to K-State."

Loub said universities which have successful fund-raising campaigns continue to enjoy success in future fund drives. The ones which are not successful "fall by the wayside," he said.

Supporters willing to donate money are essential for the success of this kind of fund-raising drive, Loub said.

"It is important to have major leadership people in the volunteer ranks, but it doesn't matter how many people jump up and shout 'hurray' if they don't have any money," he said.

Brian O'Neill, graduate senator, expressed concern that students' interests are being overlooked in the coliseum decision-making process.

"Students should receive equal representation on every decision, directly representative of the proportion of student funding," he said. "I am afraid of students getting snowed under. I don't want to lose our voice in what was our idea in the first place."

In other business, senators approved a resolution commending Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for student affairs, and Jane Miles, junior in accounting, for their work on K-State's All-University Open House March 30-31. Bosco was chairman of the All-University Open House Coordinating Council and Miles served as student coordinator.

Senators also approved the appointments of members to the Judicial Council, Student Review Board, Traffic Appeals Board, and Tribunal. Kurt Yowell, junior in agriculture economics, was approved as the new Student Governing Association attorney general.

Fire codes prompt rise in smoke detector use

Use of smoke detectors in Manhattan is becoming more prevalent as fire codes mandate placing the devices in certain types of buildings.

Detectors are required in every Manhattan business, hotel and in rental property with more than three apartments.

"Smoke detectors (in rental property) are a part of the fire code in Manhattan, and they're also a state requirement," Manhattan Fire Marshal Glen Wilkinson said.

The Manhattan Fire Department inspects for the presence of fire detectors. In a one-year period, the department conducted about 3,000 inspections, Wilkinson said.

Manhattan landlords are complying with the code, Wilkinson said. Those whose property is inspected and found to be without smoke detectors are given a specific time limit to comply with the regulation.

If a landlord is in violation and doesn't comply with the codes, then he may be taken to court, where a penalty may be assessed, he said.

The offense is a misdemeanor and can carry a fine or a jail sentence for those who break the law.

"We've never had any (landlords) who haven't complied," Wilkinson said.

In a survey completed by the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA), it was found that 50 percent of homes nationwide have smoke detectors.

"Smoke detectors are very effective," Wilkinson said. "In Manhattan I've never seen a loss of life where they've had detectors. I feel if they (people killed by fire) had had detectors, they could've received warning."

Frequency of false alarms is higher with battery-powered detectors, he said. If batteries are replaced yearly, no problems should occur.

Smoke, dust, steam and even insects can cause a false alarm, Wilkinson said. He said it's best not to place detectors near shower room doors.

"It's better to have a false alarm now and then than not to have the alarm sound when you need it," he said.

Both electrical and battery-powered detectors should be tested to ensure they're functioning properly, Wilkinson said.

The fire code requires that electrical alarms be installed in businesses. Battery-powered alarms are acceptable in residences.

Some insurance companies offer 5 percent discounts on insurance rates to people who have detectors or fire extinguishers in their homes.

Drivers must yield at crosswalks

At least one student, and perhaps more, was almost injured or killed Thursday while walking to school.

The pedestrian was walking across the street in the center of the crosswalk on Denison Avenue near Goodnow Hall, and a driver did not bother to slow or stop.

Instead, the driver maintained his speed and attempted to pass in front of the pedestrian. However, the pedestrian was so close to the curb the driver was forced to hit his brakes to slow down. The vehicle was going so fast it continued across the crosswalk, and had the woman not jumped back, she would have been hit.

There is no way to determine how often similar incidents occur each day on campus, but many students have probably been witness to or victims of such close calls.

The K-State campus is a walking campus, and it is time some drivers on or near University grounds began obeying the rules everyone learns in high school driver's education: pedestrians always have the right of way, and vehicles must always stop for pedestrians who are crossing in marked crossings.

Students who are walking also should exhibit courtesy by walking at corners and crosswalks instead of in the middle of the street.

With the observance of driving laws and a show of common courtesy, campus streets can be safe and enjoyable for both pedestrians and drivers.

Raise awareness instead of age

After the Kansas Senate killed the proposal to raise the drinking age for 3.2 beer to 19, Sen. Wint Winter, R-Lawrence, said solutions to the problem of drunk driving lie in education and enforcement of drunk-driving laws.

Proponents of an increase in the drinking age said such a change would help reduce traffic fatalities among 18- and 19-year-old Kansans. But Winter cited a Minnesota study that found traffic deaths among 18-year-olds quadrupled after the legal age was raised to 19.

Both sides have valid arguments. But since the Senate has dropped the measure, lawmakers should introduce legislation promoting education and awareness of the problems of drunk driving.

Such education could begin in high school. Why not require some class time to be devoted to understanding the consequences of drinking and driving? Only one lecture, by a qualified and concerned teacher in a required course, would be necessary to open the eyes of teenagers to the hazards of driving home drunk from a party or bar.

The proposal to raise the drinking age was a noble effort, but such conscientious energy should be directed toward the root of the problem. Preventive awareness is the key to saving lives on the road.

Imposing facade disguises offices—

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The wheels of power definitely turn here, but their international pirouette is hidden behind a well-kept veneer of marble columns and Greek porticos.

An office building is an office building, and whether it sits in Washington or Wamego, the edifice still houses an overabundance of computer terminals, writing paper and underpaid secretaries.

To the first-time tourist, the immensity and grandeur of the Hill structures are intimidating and leave one breathless. "This is where it all happens," keeps running through the mind while gazing at the complexity of architecture.

But after weeks of working here, the realization that every building is just an overcrowding of office hardware destroys the illusion.

I thought the president was briefed by a contingent of white-winged aides drawing upon the uncomparable combination of knowledge and expertise — not a little Apple computer and an unassuming research assistant.

It's all so much more impressive from the outside.

But just what is a policy supposed to look like? I know a thought is not tangible, and an idea has no mass, but when the concept is reduced to paperwork and computer terminals, the nobility of the inspiration still dims.

Yet the ghosts of Jefferson, Franklin and the rest remain here to see the usually unattainable combination of dreams and reality that really do exist behind the stone and glass.

It's easy to become buried in the office beneath the redundant constituent mail and lobbying propaganda, but original thoughts and grand schemes are still hatched by those with the ambition and drive to do it.

One just needs to know how to wade through the mediocrity of office work and reach beyond.

Carter family makes press history—

Telling the story of today's Landon Lecturer is almost like telling the story of mass communications in America in this century. The face of Hodding Carter III will be familiar to most of the audience in McCain Auditorium when he is introduced by K-State President Acker, because it is familiar to most Americans. Few people would have recognized his father, but his name — Hodding Carter Jr. — was just as well known in his time.

The story really begins in the Deep South in the depths of the Great Depression when Hodding Jr. was fired from a job with the Associated Press. He and his bride, Betty, took their $700 nest egg home to Hammond, La., and started a small town daily. They sold the paper a few years later for $17,000 after battling both the Depression and a Louisiana dictator named Huey Long. Carter's articles on Long in national magazines attracted national attention.

The editor also attracted the attention of leading citizens of Greenville, Miss., who invited the young couple to establish a newspaper there, the Delta Star, to compete with the humdrum Daily Democrat-Times. The Carters got more news and more advertising, eventually buying the competition and naming the merged paper the Delta Democrat-Times. Meanwhile, Hodding III was born, and Hodding Jr. went East to graduate school and later to work on the newspaper PM in New York City as press critic. Then he went off to World War II and Betty went to work in Washington.

The Carters returned to Greenville after the war and Hodding Jr. won a Pulitzer Prize for editorials condemning racial prejudice. They were editorials that drew the vituperative attention of racist politicians like Theodore Bilbo. Law and custom dictated complete segregation in Mississippi. Few black people (although they were in the majority in the Greenville area) could vote.

That was the situation when Hodding III left for Princeton and the Supreme Court declared school segregation inherently unequal and ordered its end. By this time Hodding Jr. had emerged on the national scene as a leading writer for the big magazines (Saturday Evening Post, Look, etc.) and an author. In all, he wrote 16 books and collaborated or co-authored five more. A major part of his writing explained the South to outsiders. In the Delta Democrat-Times (which came to be known as the DD-T) he was a spokesman to the South, a militant moderate unwilling to see a region emerging from economic deprivation ripped apart.

"Let's keep our shirts on," he said to the angry segregationists in his first editorial after the decision, and that was his policy for the next decade, despite boycotts by subscribers and against the paper's advertisers.

Hodding III received his degree from Princeton summa cum laude and Doubleday published his senior thesis, "The South Strikes Back," a history of the White Citizens Councils movement.

After a stint in the Marines, he began 17 years as a DD-T staff member with an editorial campaign opposing a list of local office holders. The candidates he backed won, and "Young Hodding" was hooked by politics as well as journalism.

In the late 1960s, Hodding III was in a position to help bring the new voters of Mississippi — the blacks who made up the Freedom Democratic Party — together with the old Dixiecrats, creating a new political orientation there. Hodding Jr. died in 1972.

By 1976, young Hodding was actively working for the election of Jimmy Carter, and after the Carter win he became Undersecretary of State for Public Affairs. Soon thereafter the family sold the DD-T for $18 million. When the Iranian hostage crisis dominated the news, it was Carter as State Department spokesman who tried to answer reporters' questions — and at his suggestion, it was done daily before the television cameras. Suddenly he couldn't go anywhere without being recognized.

When his boss, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, resigned in protest over the attempted military rescue of the hostages, Carter resigned too.

He proposed to the Public Broadcasting System a weekly television program looking inside the media, and "Inside Story" was born. It is now in its third year — funded by a multimillion dollar grant from General Electric (Channel 11, 5 p.m. Saturdays). It looks into serious stories, like the barring of the media from the Grenada invasion and the difficult problems U.S. newsmen in Moscow face trying to cover the Soviet Union, and it covers lighter topics, such as behind the scenes at the Super Bowl.

There you have it: in 50 years from a $700 investment in a grass roots daily to a multimillion dollar television series, Hodding Carter Jr. worked hard explaining that unique region, the South, to the nation and to itself. Hodding Carter III works hard explaining that unique American institution, the media, to the nation and to itself.

Just the facts, ma'am

"This is the city — Manhattan, Kansas. When Kansas State University isn't in session, the city has about 30,000 residents. When students are in town, this city is full of people attending the many cultural and entertainment events a college town has to offer. Unfortunately, the city is full of criminals. I carry a badge.

"My name is Friday. My partner Gannon and I were working the night watch out of vice division when the call came in.

"This is Friday. May I help you? Yes, ma'am. We do patrol of Aggieville. You say you have a person in your theater who is smoking and won't stop? All right, just the facts ma'am.

"Is he armed, ma'am? Just a lighter, huh. Stay away from him. Those lighters can be dangerous. We'll be over right away.

"I knew this case was going to be a tough one. I called for backups and we surrounded the theater. All we could do was wait for the smoker to give himself up.

"OK, this is the police. Come out with your hands up and drop the lighter.

"The smoker reached through the box office window and flicked his Bic at the officers. I knew we had to, er, smoke him out of there, so I pulled Gannon's knockwurst and limburger sandwich out of his lunch box and opened the Baggie. There are some times when I regret being a cop.

"Gannon didn't like the idea of sacrificing his sandwich, so I promised him we'd stop at Swannie's for donuts after we made the bust. He agreed. I agreed to buy.

"This is your last chance. Come out with your hands up or I'll throw this sandwich in.

"I saw the smoker take a long drag on his Marlboro. I knew he was thinking about giving himself up. If he had been holding that sandwich, I think he would have pleaded guilty on the spot.

"As he crushed out his cigarette on the counter, I moved to the front of the theater, just out of sight of the smoker. I asked him once more to come out. He didn't. I threw in the sandwich.

"The smoker started turning green. There's only one man I've ever met who could handle tobacco smoke and limburger. That's my partner. After a few more seconds, the smoker grabbed his cigarettes and headed out the door. He threw down his Bic. It landed on the sidewalk along with his lunch.

"Gannon and I took him down to the station and booked him on a 216 and a 425 — public endangerment by cigarettes and possession of a concealed Bic. Another part of this city had been saved. Now, to repay Gannon.

"We went to Swannies, ate Yum Yums and drank coffee. Gannon said he hoped his sandwich hadn't been used in vain. I told him any time an officer can give part of himself in the line of duty, it is not in vain. And I know how much Gannon likes knockwurst and limburger."

The smoker was convicted on both charges by Riley County District Judge Jerry L. Mershon. After a diagnostic evaluation, Mershon released the smoker under the stipulation that he seek hypnotic treatment for his three-pack-a-day habit.

The story you have just heard is somewhat true. The names have been changed to protect the ignorant.

LAR report describes negative experience

Editor,

Re: Rhonda Wessel's story, "Little American Royal," in the April 2 Collegian:

I have just finished reading about Wessel's experience of showing a calf in the LAR. Now I am wondering why I enjoyed showing an animal so much last year. After all, it sounds like such a dangerous and frightening experience.

The LAR is a super program designed to introduce "non ag" people to K-State's research animals and facilities, faculty, other students and the experience of showing animals. The article told about the LAR in a light that may only discourage people who might consider showing next year.

I would like to make a few things clear from my own and many friends' experiences in the LAR.

First, ending up on crutches is a very isolated case out of the nearly 200 people who showed this year. But most importantly, everyone connected with the LAR is very helpful and friendly. I, as well as others who have shown, really enjoyed the chance to get away from school and to meet new people (especially ones from outside your college). The "showmen" also learn to be responsible for an animal and to cooperate with other students, even if it means getting muddy.

I hope next year we can hear more positive aspects of the LAR. A start would be who won the showmanship (besides Guy Lafin), herdsmanhip and scholarship awards.

Center's staff earns thanks

Editor,

Re: Allan Brettell's letter, "Week brought world closer," in the March 28 Collegian:

Brettell, director of the International Student Center, had thanked the international students for making International Week a big success. While accepting his sincere feelings toward our community, I would like to mention that actually all thanks are due to him and his staff of the center alone.

It would be no exaggeration if I would say the staff of our International Center at K-State is the best in the whole United States. The friendly attitude of Joan Parker, the charming personality of Donna Davis and the untiring help of Brettell make this place a home away from home for all of us. There never can be words to express our deep gratitude to them and so on behalf of the international students would a simple thank you do?

Researchers conclude tax cuts benefit rich

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan and the Congressional Budget Office, whose conclusions he has attacked as something worse than "blankety-blank lies," agree that his tax-cut program has provided proportionately more dollars to the wealthy than to the poor.

Reagan and the non-partisan researchers on Capitol Hill also agree on the reason. That is, because about everybody got the same percentage of reduction in their income tax rate, it stands to reason that a person who pays more tax would get a greater dollar amount of a cut than one who pays less in tax.

At his news conference Wednesday night, Reagan was asked about a new CBO report which said the poorest people in America have lost more than they have gained from tax and spending reductions recommended by the president since he took office in 1981.

"We have a tax program that was a 25 percent cut across the board. Now that's a 25 percent reduction in the tax burden of everyone. If you have someone whose tax burden is $20, that cut means they save $5 and they still owe $15.

"But someone who...pays 100 times as much tax, $2,000, gets $500 but still owes $1,500," the president continued. "In other words, the progressivity of the tax program stays the same, so there is no way that the tax program could have benefited someone at one end of the scale and not the other. It's based on proportions."

Although Reagan referred to 25 percent cut, the actual average reduction from the time the first stage went into effect Oct. 1, 1981, until the final portion took effect Jan. 1, 1984, was 23 percent.

Also, when he implied that no wealthy person could have received a greater percentage reduction than someone at the low end of the income scale, he overlooked the substantial, one-step reduction in the maximum tax rate, from 70 percent to 50 percent, which Congress passed and Reagan signed.

That cut benefited only upper-income people with sizable investment income.

According to the CBO report, poorer people are worse off under Reagan's programs because the tax reduction — which provided some benefit to just about every taxpayer — was accompanied by cuts in the growth of several spending programs, which generally affected only people with lower or lower-middle incomes.

These spending cuts included reduced food stamps, trims in health programs and removal of nearly 1 million families from the welfare rolls. Two-thirds of those families increased their earnings and became independent of welfare, Reagan said.

Program uses neighbors to fight crime

Some Manhattan residents have been participating in Neighborhood Watch, a crime prevention program sponsored by the Riley County Police Department aimed at cutting residential crime.

Since the program's inception in August 1983, six watch areas have been established. Residents of the designated neighborhoods watch for suspicious activity and report incidents to police.

Discussion began about establishing a Neighborhood Watch program in Manhattan two years ago, said Lt. Harold Sylvius of the RCPD.

Organizing the program merely requires an expression of interest by someone in a neighborhood, he said.

"They then pass out information to neighbors. When enough interest is created, an organizational meeting is held," Sylvius said.

Sylvius attends the organizational meetings and explains how the program works.

When neighbors agree to participate in Neighborhood Watch, they register with the RCPD, Sylvius said. The registration form contains the addresses, telephone numbers and descriptions of vehicles residents own, he said.

Participants also are asked to include a telephone number to call in case an emergency arises when they aren't home, Sylvius said.

Statistics about the effectiveness of this crime prevention method aren't yet available in Manhattan because of the newness of the local program, he said.

"The nationwide percentage of crime reduction is between 25 and 100 percent. I imagine it'll be around 25 percent in Manhattan," Sylvius said.

The Neighborhood Watch program began approximately 10 years ago and was originated by a police chief.

Five years ago, the National Sheriffs Association adopted the program nationally.

There is no cost for maintaining the program, Sylvius said.

Theft nets stereo system during spring 'break'-in

Sometime during spring break, March 10-18, someone burglarized an apartment in the 1200 block of Bluemont Avenue. Entry was gained when the suspect broke out a window with an undetermined object.

Once inside, the suspect searched through the apartment, making several trips out the rear door carrying miscellaneous items.

From the living room the suspect removed a stereo system, including a Kenwood KS-6100 amplifier, a Kenwood KT-6500 receiver and a Pioneer PL-200 turntable. About 120 record albums also were taken. From the victim's bedroom, a 12-inch black and white television was removed, in addition to a wine bottle containing a large amount of coins.

Loss in the incident is estimated to be more than $1,600. There were several burglaries in the area surrounding K-State during spring break.

Anyone having information on this or any other crime may call Crime Stoppers at 539-7777. Callers will remain anonymous and may qualify for cash rewards of up to $1,000.

Challenger to launch today, retrieve defective satellite

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The space shuttle Challenger was set Thursday for its most ambitious voyage yet, a mission to stalk, capture and restore an ailing satellite to health.

The five-man crew was told in an afternoon weather briefing that conditions should be "super" for today's 8:58 a.m. EST launch from Kennedy Space Center: scattered clouds at 25,000 feet, light wind, and visibility of more than seven miles.

But Maj. Donald Green, an Air Force weather officer for the shuttle, cautioned that there was some concern about 70 mph winds at 15,000 feet. The winds were easing, however, and officials expressed confidence at midafternoon that they would not have to postpone the launch.

The countdown for the 11th shuttle flight was marred only by a failed electronics unit used for relaying information between shuttle computers and its various systems. Technicians used a built-in nine-hour hold to remove the unit and replace it.

Challenger is scheduled to land on the Kennedy runway next Thursday after 92 turns around Earth.

Reagan's son to take to airwaves

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. — Ron Reagan, who gave up ballet and is starting a new career in radio, is set to begin reviewing movies for NBC's rock network.

But President Reagan's youngest son may have trouble getting in to cover the Academy Awards: the people who hand out the Oscars say they don't have any more room for reporters.

NBC announced earlier this week that the 25-year-old Reagan will be the host of "Screen Scenes," a one-minute movies-and-entertainment spot for Source, NBC's rock radio network. Reagan, who quit the Joffrey Ballet 15 months ago, was scheduled to make his first live broadcast for NBC at the Academy Awards ceremonies Monday.

But Bob Werden, chief publicist for the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, said Wednesday that the fire marshal has prohibited issuing any more press credentials for the event.

"The fire marshal tells us how many people we can have in the (press) room," Werden said, adding the Source has four credentials.

"The only way it can happen is if NBC gives up one of its other credentials," Werden said. "...Here's a guy trying to make a career in radio and I'd like to help. But I can't."

"I've never heard that he won't be able to get in," said Jamie Wenner, a spokeswoman for Source. "That's simply a mix-up and we really have nothing more to say on that."

Guards storm plane, nab hijackers

ISTANBUL, Turkey — Hijackers seized control of a Saudi jetliner Thursday and forced it to land in Istanbul, the state-run media reported. Security forces stormed the plane, capturing the hijackers in an operation that wounded several people, official sources said.

The identities of the wounded were not immediately known. The sources, who spoke on the condition that they not be identified, said the operation to retake the plane lasted seven minutes.

The semi-official Anatolia news agency said the plane was diverted to Yesilkoy Airport during a flight from Jidda, Saudi Arabia, to the Syrian capital of Damascus. It was not known how many people were aboard the plane.

Fast exit almost costs governor

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — A maid who was cleaning up the hotel room of former Kentucky Gov. John Y. Brown Jr. knew the $4,250 she found in a dresser drawer wasn't her tip.

"I couldn't believe it," said Loretta "Cookie" Rudolph. "People have left jewelry and a few dollars now and then, but never that much cash. I almost fainted."

She found the 42 $100 bills and one $50 bill when she was cleaning Brown's room at the Hyatt Regency last Friday and turned the money over to the management.

Danny Briscoe, a spokesman for Brown, said the former governor hurriedly left the hotel last Friday night and forgot to take the cash.

Brown called the hotel Saturday and got the maid's name. He sent Rudolph a thank you note and a reward, Briscoe said.

Brown, a candidate for U.S. Senate, and his wife, Phyllis George Brown, checked into the hotel early last week and met with aides to plot strategy for the primary election campaign against Sen. Walter "Dee" Huddleston.

Weather

Fair today, high 65 to 70. Winds southeasterly 10 to 20 mph. Increasing cloudiness tonight, low 45 to 50. Mostly cloudy Saturday with a chance of thundershowers, high 65 to 70.

Legislators compromise on school aid

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — After reaching last-minute compromise on state aid to public schools, the Kansas Legislature adjourned its 1984 session Thursday, having passed in 87 days proposals to hold down utility rates, increase prison capacity, raise teachers' salaries and restrict bingo parlors.

After a two-week break, the Legislature will reconvene April 23.

When they return, the lawmakers will decide how to solve a severe prison overcrowding problem, whether to increase the drinking age for 3.2 percent beer to 19 and whether to ban the burial of hazardous waste.

If they decide to order statewide property reappraisal, they also will be confronted with a decision on whether to allow Kansas voters to amend the constitution to classify property and tax the classes at different rates.

Although some key issues still face them, legislators have resolved several equally important issues since the session began Jan. 9.

The massive electric rate increases which are expected to accompany the completion of the $2.7 million Wolf Creek nuclear power plant at Burlington loomed over lawmakers during many committee meetings and floor debates.

Although attempts were made to shut the plant down before it produces one watt of electricity, Republicans and Democrats agreed to a less drastic proposal, which Gov. John Carlin already has signed into law. It is designed to soften the blow of rate increases coming next year to pay for the plant.

Education, which received so much attention nationally over the last year, continued to be a high-priority issue for Kansas legislators. In addition to determining how public elementary and secondary schools will be financed next year, the Legislature agreed on how much the state should contribute to public school budgets.

The Legislature took time away from the issues of education and electric rates to pass bills dealing with motorists and their vehicles — eliminating the state's vehicle inspection program, putting "teeth" in the state law requiring the use of child safety seats and raising the limits on "no fault" automobile insurance.

Here is a summary of some of the major legislation passed so far by the 1984 Legislature and sent to Carlin:

Utility Bills

To help ease the "rate shock" which will be generated by the Wolf Creek plant, the Legislature passed and Carlin signed legislation which gives broad authority to the Kansas Corporation Commission to determine what costs of utility plants can be passed on to ratepayers.

The law authorizes the KCC to exclude from rates any costs attributable to poor management, plant inefficiencies and generating capacity not needed to meet the demand for electricity. It also allows the commission to phase in the costs to be borne by ratepayers over a period of years, instead of all at once.

Bingo Parlors

In an attempt to enforce existing bingo laws, the Legislature passed and Carlin signed into law a proposal to limit the operation of bingo parlors to three days a week and prohibit side-by-side bingo parlors in subdivided buildings.

Bingo parlors are profit-making businesses which rent space and equipment to the charitable, fraternal and other non-profit organizations which are the only groups constitutionally allowed to profit from gambling bingo. Most parlors now operate seven days a week.

The new law also creates a bingo enforcement team in the Department of Revenue to ensure the collection of the 3 percent tax levied on the proceeds of bingo games.

School Finance

Public school teachers could receive a 9.1 percent average increase in their salaries statewide under a new school finance law. The law also allows school districts which spend more than the state median per pupil to increase their budgets up to 6 percent in the 1984-85 school year. School districts with below-median expenditures can raise their budgets up to 10 percent.

The Legislature agreed to set state aid to public schools at $36 million in the next fiscal year. Its proposal would bring total state aid to elementary and secondary schools to $584.4 million and would increase property taxes statewide by $49.8 million if all districts budget the maximum increase.

Prison Expansion

A new law, recommended by Carlin, provides space for more than 300 additional minimum security inmates in the Kansas prison system. The law authorizes and finances two prerelease centers at state hospitals in Topeka and Winfield and the renovation of a building at Kansas State Penitentiary at Lansing.

The prerelease centers will be used to house non-violent inmates with good prison records who are within three months of being released.

'Threat situation' at hotel delays president's departure

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A "threat situation" outside a New York hotel briefly delayed President Reagan's departure from New York to Washington on Thursday night, a White House spokesman said.

Mark Weinberg, the White House spokesman, would not disclose the threat, and said the situation was resolved after about 10 minutes.

Weinberg said that during the 10-minute delay, the president and his wife, Nancy, remained in a "holding room" at the New York

Hilton Hotel, where the president had addressed a dinner of the New York State Federation of Catholic School Parents.

"There was a threat situation," Weinberg said. "The president was aware of it."

"It was determined best that President and Mrs. Reagan remain at the hotel," he said. Weinberg said that during the delay the Reagan's visited with Archbishop John J. O'Connor, one of their hosts at the federation's dinner, the last event during the president's day-long visit to New York.

office in Kansas City, Mo., said Wilder reportedly was seen one day before the Geary County killing at the Valentine Shopping Center on South Broadway in Kansas City, about 130 miles east of Junction City.

Davenport said a car belonging to a woman from Beaumont, Texas, who was abducted March 23 and found dead recently, is missing and may have been abandoned in the Kansas City area. He described the car as a 1981 two-door Mercury Cougar XR7 bearing Texas license plates.

Assistant FBI Director Oliver "Buck" Revell said Wilder identifies himself a photographer, which he has been, comments on the young woman's appearance and potential as a model and tries to persuade her to accompany him for a photo session.

"If rejected, he has beaten and forced victims to accompany him," the FBI said.

Born in Sydney, Australia, but with dual U.S. and Australian citizenship, Wilder is a 6-foot tall, 180-pound white male with brown hair and blue eyes. He is balding and has a five-inch scar on his right ankle. He was worn a well-trimmed beard in the past but could be clean-shaven, the FBI said.

Revell asked that anyone with information about Wilder take no action other than to contact the nearest FBI office.

Hart garners support among students

By The College Press Service

ALBANY, N.Y. — When a lonely candidate named Gary Hart visited Albany in May 1983, Gov. Mario Cuomo was too busy to see him.

Hart's organizers gave up trying to book a room at the State University of New York at Albany (SUNYA) campus because, as one organizer remembers it, they were worried the candidate couldn't draw a crowd big enough to fill one.

Things have changed. In the weeks before the April 3 New York primary, the campus chapter of Americans with Hart had about 100 volunteers, about 40 of whom were "active," said Michael Schmall, the campus campaign's co-coordinator.

And while there is student support for both Walter Mondale and Jesse Jackson on the campus, Patty Salkin, the officially-uncommitted head of the Albany State Young Democrats, conceded that "from what I've seen and personal contact, I'd say there's a lot of student interest in Hart."

Indeed, for the first time since 1972, a Democratic presidential candidate seems to have caught fire among a broad cross section of students around the country.

More than 5,000 students heard Hart speak at the University of Illinois two weeks ago. About 1,200 came to listen to him at the University of California at Berkeley, while another 300 couldn't get in. During the Massachusetts primary, Hart handily won student precincts in Amherst.

Now Eric Schwartz, Hart's youth coordinator, speaks of mobilizing a nationwide volunteer corps of 10,000 students to match Walter Mondale's volunteers from organized labor.

At Marquette, Hart seems to be drawing a lot of support on a campus that is about 80 percent Republican, said Kevin Jerecek, president of Marquette's Young Democrats' chapter.

With the possible exception of schools in New York and Pennsylvania, campuses are pro-Hart as opposed to Mondale, said the nominally-uncommitted Dave Smith of Young Democrats' headquarters in Washington, D.C.

"I sense a great lack of enthusiasm and lack of inspiration for Mondale," said Cathy Campbell, Berkeley's student body president.

Campbell said she believes Hart's "spunk" and faithful evocation of Kennedy style probably helped attract student support.

Mondale's student organizers contend their volunteers are more concerned with issues than Hart's.

"Students who look at the issues and not at appearance are swinging to Mondale," said Valerie White, national student coordinator at Mondale's Washington headquarters.

"Mondale's campus supporters, are more committed than Hart's. Rather than jumping on the bandwagon, they are a determined group," said Sean O'Brien of SUNYA's Students for Mondale chapter.

In a sort of reverse bandwagon effect, the chapter got 10 new members after Hart defeated Mondale in the New Hampshire primary in early March, O'Brien said.

"Since New Hampshire, the campaign has really started to roll," said Schmall of Hart's campus group. Schmall said he has 40 to 45 active volunteers. O'Brien said he has 30.

Both have been courting student support — and the valuable fee labor that comes with it — for a long time.

Hart, for example, made campaign hops through northern California and Colorado campuses as early as spring 1982.

Hart spoke against the nuclear arms buildup to University of Denver students in May 1982.

The month before, Mondale delivered the same message at Yale.

Mondale and his family have worked campuses in all the big caucus and primary states for the last two years. Hart's reach has been a little shorter, due primarily to having less money to spend.

Still, by last November, Patti Grogan, president of the national Young Democrats, told the College Press Service, "there is no student candidate. No one has really touched the hearts and minds of students across the nation."

The early primaries and caucuses appear to have changed that.

"I think there is a revival of student activism," said Chris Phillips, a Hart national student support coordinator.

"Student activism is coming around a little bit," said Brian Grossman, president of the University of Illinois' College Democrats, of the campus support for Hart. "But we still have a little way to go to get students involved."

Involved or not, students historically don't vote. Only 30 percent of the registered college-aged voters actually cast ballots in the 1980 presidential race.

"The problem is getting people out to vote," said Ilse Levine, a Hart worker at SUNYA.

The Jackson campaign, which appears to have wilted after an uproarious campus start last fall, has had the most success in actually bringing new voters into the system, the observers suggest.

At SUNYA, the student Democrats' ambitious voter registration plan has run out of money, and now relies on word of mouth, Salkin said.

At SUNYA, Will Kamishlian, College Republicans chapter president, said that until the general election in the fall, his group will "sit back and watch the Democrats slit each others' throats."

There is interest in supporting President Reagan's election drive.

New human fossil dates back 5 million years

By The Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — The discovery in Africa of a 2-inch-long jawbone fragment has pushed the history of mankind 1 million years closer to the misty era when human ancestors broke away from the apes, researchers say.

The fossil from a creature that lived 5 million years ago is described as the oldest remains yet unearthed of a direct human forebear, or hominid. Until now, the oldest such bones found were 4 million years old.

Scientists generally agree that more than 3.5 million years ago, the ancestors of the modern apes split with humanity's ancient grandparents and went their separate evolutionary way. This period is anthropology's "black hole" as there was no clearly acceptable evidence to fill in the human family tree.

Researchers said Thursday that they had found in Kenya a piece of a lower jaw, complete with two molars, of a hominid from this period.

"Until the discovery of this specimen, the oldest fossils where everybody would agree that they are hominids were 4 million years old," said David Pilbeam, a Harvard anthropology professor. "That's Australopithecus afarensis, the species to which Lucy belongs, but she herself is a million years younger than that."

The partial skeleton of Lucy, uncovered in Ethiopia in 1977, is probably the most famous fossil find of recent times.

Pilbeam said that the newest discovery, though far older than Lucy, may be of the same species — a short, small-brained but upright being who roamed Africa a very long time ago.

"What is important about this jaw piece is that it is both clearly a hominid and it seems to be reasonably dated at 5 million years," Pilbeam said. "That pushes the oldest undoubted hominids back another million years — not very much, but it's 25 percent more."

The fossil, called the Tabarin hominid, was found Feb. 23 on an expedition sponsored by Harvard and the National Museums of Kenya. It was picked up near Lake Baringo about 140 miles from Nairobi in northern Kenya by Kiptalam Chepboi, a fossil prospector on the staff of the Kenya museums.

One of the more interesting questions, Pilbeam said, is just when the humanids split with the apes.

One exotic way of estimating the time of this split is genetic analysis. By comparing the blood and genes of people and the apes, some scientists have concluded that the division occurred as recently as 4 million years ago.

The latest discovery, Pilbeam said, "would show that the last common ancestor of hominids and chimps is at least 5 million years old. It could be 5 million and 1 years old, or it could be 10 million. We don't know."

The fossil — which is still in Kenya — was dated by looking at nearby animal bones and rocks.

Ron Clingenpeel, Episcopal campus minister, leads residents of Manhattan's Meadowlark Hills Retirement Community in a song during a recent performance.

Modern Minstrels

Bringing joy to others while making fun of themselves

As the show opens, the performers dash out from behind a brown curtain on a makeshift stage. Their white-covered faces give them a theatrical appearance. They are dressed in sweats for a casual image.

The nine people in this group are not professional actors, nor do they try to be. They are K-State students, faculty and Manhattan residents. They are the Roustabouts, and they call their entertainment the Minstrel Show, a presentation of students who are members of the St. Francis Episcopal Mission at KSU.

Formed in February, the group travels to local churches, community groups and nursing homes to perform at no charge.

The group's members show their belief in God by viewing their faith from a different angle than most religious people.

"We come and bring joy to people and make fun of ourselves," Episcopal Campus Minister Ron Clingenpeel said.

The group makes fun by depicting themselves as fools, a label which they try to portray in the skits.

"Christians need to be fools for Christ. Christ in history has been thought of as a fool. The fool plays everybody," Clingenpeel said.

He said the fool is thought of as a mysterious and funny person, like Jesus. "Christ represents a side of life that the secular world wants to deny, which makes him foolish, he said.

The mystery deals with reading the Bible, he said, because the scripture doesn't always give the answer.

Clingenpeel said he believes Jesus talked in parables and mystery. This carries over to the performers.

"It's (the show) a way in which we can present the mysteries of what the gospel is all about," he said. "People take it (the gospel) too seriously. We present the lighter side of things."

Their repertoire was written mostly by Clingenpeel.

"I put all the pieces together to begin with," he said. "Most of the things that I didn't write, I adapted or pulled from somewhere. I directed it, but everybody's been a part of making changes. It's not like a play where you've got to start and go all the way through. What you do is rehearse the parts you need and then just plug it in," he said.

The first act of the show depicts two characters, Sue (played by Meg Stewart, senior in interior design) and Ira, (portrayed by Easom Bond, sophomore in electrical engineering) who make fun at repeating each other's questions:

"What are ya' doin', Ira?"
 "What am I doin', Sue?"
 "Yea, what are ya' doin', Ira?"
 "Well, I got a new job, Sue."
 "You got a new job, Ira?"
 "I got a new job, Sue."
 "Well, what's your new job, Ira?"
 "Well, I'm a fertilizer pulverizer on a hill overlooking Hackensack, Sue."
 "You're a fertilizer pulverizer on a hill overlooking Hackensack, Ira?"
 "Yea, I'm a fertilizer pulverizer on a hill overlooking Hackensack, Sue."
 "Well, how do you like being fertilizer pulverizer on a hill overlooking Hackensack, Ira?"
 "How do I like being fertilizer pulverizer on a hill overlooking Hackensack, Sue?"
 "Yea, how do you like being a fertilizer pulverizer on a hill overlooking Hackensack, Ira?"
 "It stinks!"

"Every once in a while we have to take a little bit of seriousness with some of the fun that we have," Clingenpeel said.

"Fable," a short play, shows the group's seriousness.

At the bottom of a tidal pool in the ocean lived an oyster, played by Cliff Stark, instructor of computer science. Next to the oyster was a rock, portrayed by Bond, and a starfish, played by Lucinda Clingenpeel, Ron's wife.

Narrated by Calvin Trostle, senior in agronomy, the play evolves around the oyster's belief that he is superior to the rock and that the rock is only a mineral.

In retaliation to this belief, the rock says, "Hey, there are some advantages to being farther down the revolutionary scale, you know. I have fewer enemies than you. I'm not afraid of starfish. On the other hand, they're a matter of life and death to you...you might learn a lesson in humility if you could hear some of the things starfish say about you. Things you can't hear because you're too busy being mortally afraid of them. I hear them all the time. They make me laugh."

The oyster immediately becomes deeply depressed. Everything he is proud of is the butt of "underwater ethnic wisecracks."

"Existence is nothing but a cruel joke," the oyster states as he vows to stop praying to God.

One day he decides to pray once again, but this time he curses the day and its existence. As he curses, he asks the Almighty God to answer him.

God, played by Rosalind Stark, Cliff's wife, hears the oyster and answers.

"All right, all right. But I have to make it short. It's Friday afternoon, for Pete's sake," God says.

God talks about several things with the oyster.

"Your basic problem is your point of view," God says. "...The way you think about things will never be exactly the same as they are."

This talk causes the oyster to think more methodically.

The Minstrel show also includes juggling and the singing of rounds, in which the audience is invited to participate.

A magician from "the four corners of Kansas" named "Whodummy" (Trostle), presents some magic with the help of his assistant (Stewart) and three members of the audience.

Another act is the "Magic Kazoo Band."

The band consists of a normal kazoo and kazooes attached to various lengths of tubing to provide different tones. A triangle, whistle and "drums" are also used.

After a "tuning note," conductor Beth Royall, graduate in music, directs the group through such songs as the themes from The Twilight Zone and Star Trek, the K-State fight song (complete with marching), the William Tell Overture and Auld Lang Syne.

In closing, the Roustabouts proclaim, "Anything can happen, anything can be."

In one act of the Minstrel Show, Roustabout Beth Royall, graduate in music, sings in front of a banner displaying the group's name.

Tracksters split squad for weekend meets

A portion of the K-State men's and women's track team members began competing Thursday at the Texas Relays at Austin in a meet which will last through Saturday, and others will stay home for the K-State Invitational on Saturday.

Women squad members who will compete at Texas include Betsy Silzer, Anne Stadler, Deb Pihl, Donna King, Rita Graves, Julie Waage, Roxie McKee and Pinkie Suggs.

In running events, Silzer will compete in the 5,000-meter run, Stadler and Pihl in the 1,500-meter run and Donna King in the 100-meter dash. Competing in the field events will be Graves in the high jump, Waage and McKee in the javelin and Suggs in the shot put and discus.

Men competing at Texas will be Alfredo Rosas in the 10,000-meter run, Brian Howie in the 110 hurdles, Darrell Wait in the high jump, Kenny Harrison in the triple jump and Ray Hansen in the javelin.

Three of the men's relay teams also will travel to Austin to participate. The distance medley relay team is made up of Gary Jefferson, Jon Piles, Ray Mosier and Steve Smith. Howie, Jefferson, Mark Toliver and Steve Smith will be running the 4x100-meter relay, and Mike Rogers, Smith, Bryan Carroll and Bob Leitch are the foursome comprising the 4x400-meter relay squad.

"In Texas, the K-State athletes will get the chance to run in warmer temperatures and also compete against top athletes in the country who they normally wouldn't get the chance to compete against," Jan Samuelson, assistant track coach, said.

"This is our first major competition, and we're glad to get out and compete," said Head Track Coach

Steve Miller. "I hate to split the teams up, but I'm glad those at home will get to compete also."

Among those staying at home will be Jacques Struckhoff, Michelle Maxey and Larry Hill. They were not allowed to compete at the Texas Relays because at the time entries were taken, they did not have a time to turn in from outdoor competition. As a result, K-State may still be able to provide good competition for the other participating teams.

K-State's home meet is scheduled for Saturday at R.V. Christian Track. Field events and preliminaries will begin at 11 a.m., with the finals and the pole vault starting at 1 p.m. Full men and women teams from the University of Kansas, the University of Nebraska, Central Missouri State University and Wichita State University will compete. Pittsburg State University will bring only a men's team.

Miller said that even though the rain delayed the start of K-State's outdoor season, he saw many good performances in last week's opening meet.

"It was a slow start, but there were some good times," he said.

Rosas places 7th in Texas

K-State runner Alfredo Rosas finished seventh in a strong field in the 10,000-meter run Thursday in opening day action at the Texas Relays at Austin.

Rosas' time of 29:50.5 set a new school record, and he finished third among Americans in the race.

Michael Musyoki won the race with a time of 28:05, which set a new Texas Relays record.

Kansas City dumps Yanks

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Frank White drove in four runs, Steve Balboni slugged a three-run homer and every Kansas City starter scored at least once in a 15-4 romp over the New York Yankees on Thursday night.

Yankee starter Shane Rawley lasted 1½ innings, giving up four hits and seven runs. Reliever Bob Shirley did worse, yielding seven runs on eight hits before 18-year-old Jose Rijo made his major-league debut in the third and allowed one run the rest of the way.

The Royals scored an unearned run in the first inning thanks to Rawley's two-base throwing error, nine runs in the second and four in the third. Darryl Motley had a double and a single in the second. White greeted Shirley with a two-run triple to put the Royals on top 7-0, then Hal McRae lashed an RBI single, Motley singled and Don Slaught doubled them home for a 10-0 lead.

Buddy Biancalana singled home the Royals' final run in the seventh.

Amateur boxers to lace up gloves for Fite Nite

By TOM FAY
Collegian Reporter

The fifth annual Sig Ep Fite Nite will be held April 8-10 at the Elks Lodge at Fifth and Houston streets. The event is sponsored by the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity, Miller Beer and the Golden Gloves Association of America.

"The reason we have Golden Gloves (as a sponsor) is not only because it provides officials and judges, but for legal reasons. We have to use it to sanction us for amateur boxing in Manhattan," said Doug Bland, tournament director and junior in milling science management.

In 1982 the fraternity was not allowed to hold the event because it did not have the necessary permit.

"We just overlooked the fact that if you aren't sanctioned, then you must have a permit," Bland said, "and to get a permit, there's a lot of red tape."

Sig Ep Fite Nite has been held at K-State since the spring of 1980, and changes have occurred almost every year since.

"There were other Sig Ep chapters around the nation that do this, and when it was brought up here, we turned it down," he said. "But, right after it got turned down, Steve Pendergas (fraternity member at the time and K-State graduate) went out to Miller Beer and spoke with the distributor out there, and they got fired up and decided to do it anyway. It's turned out to be one of the bigger things we do."

"The first two years it was held at the armory out by the airport. It was a smaller area, but where we have it now (Elk's Lodge) the number of people getting involved keeps going up," said Stephen Wyly, assistant director of the event and sophomore in radio and television. "It's a more comfortable area. It allows enough room for the judges and announcers and plenty of space where the boxers can get ready."

Bland said competition is to be strictly amateur and is limited to K-State fraternity members only.

"Boxers can't have any experience at all," Bland said. "A previous Fite Nite fight is the only thing (experience) we allow."

Officials will be present at all times during the fighting, one in each corner on the outside of the ring and one referee inside the ring.

"These guys (officials) are executive officers of the Golden Gloves Association of America, and once they see anything (wrong), they won't hesitate to call a fight. They're not about to let anyone get hurt, and that's one of the things I like about it," Wyly said.

Safety precautions will be taken throughout the tournament. Each night the boxers who are scheduled to fight are given pulse and blood pressure tests.

According to Bland, "Most of the guys pass it (test), but there were a few guys who didn't pass it last year and they weren't allowed to box."

The fight will be a single elimination tournament, Bland said, adding that the entry fee is $5 per person and $25 per team. So far, 34 entrants have signed up, he said.

We've got seven weight classes and eight boxers in each weight class," he said. "It's first come, first serve, and we keep two alternates in case somebody drops out."

"All boxers are required to wear shirts, 14 ounce gloves and headgear, which we supply, and a mouthpiece."

At least one doctor will be on duty at all times, Bland said. He said the services of nurses and doctors are supplied by the American Heart Association, the organization which will receive all of the profits and donations raised by the event.

"We have a lot of expenses that we have to cover — like the concession stand — but a lot of our stuff (prizes) is donated by Manhattan merchants, so we don't have a really big budget," Wyly said.

Bland said many people are willing to donate since the money will be going toward the American Heart Association.

A Miss Knockout Queen contest will be held in conjunction with Fite Nite.

"There are 11 girls, one representative from each sorority, who are chosen by the girls in the house," Bland said. "They're given outfits that they wear, and this year they're (girls) probably going to be escorting all of the boxers into the ring, and, of course, they'll be showing round cards between rounds."

Pictures of all the queen contestants will be posted, and a ballot box will be placed under each picture.

"The bottom half of your (spectator) ticket stub goes into the ballot box of the girl you choose," Wyly said. "The girl with the most ticket stubs is the winner."

The winner (of the Miss Knockout contest) will receive a gift certificate to Woody's Ladies' Shop and a dinner for two at Aggie Station. She also will receive a week-long vacation to Daytona Beach from Hawaiian Tropic to compete in the Hawaiian Tropic pageant.

A sportsmanship award in memory of Kelly Jackson, who fought in the tournament last year and was killed in an automobile accident last summer, will be awarded by the Golden Gloves officials.

Whitesox to defeat Detroit for American League crown

The American League opened its season Monday as a league in transition.

Traditional powers of the past such as the New York Yankees, California Angels, Milwaukee Brewers and the Kansas City Royals are stepping away from the pennant races to allow the possible new dynasties of baseball — the Detroit Tigers, Chicago White Sox and Toronto Blue Jays — the chance to challenge for the top spot.

Gone from the league are such fabled heroes as Carl Yastrzemski of the Boston Red Sox, but in his place, young stars like Cal Ripken Jr. of the world champion Baltimore Orioles will provide new excitement.

The American League West looks like a one-team race once again. With the scandal-ridden Royals crashing towards the bottom of the division, the White Sox are the only team capable of winning the league, and should do so easily.

The big change for the White Sox was the acquisition of Tom Seaver from the New York Mets. "Tom Terrific" was only 9-14 last season, but had a respectable 3.55 earned run average with the worst team in baseball. Seaver will bolster an already loaded pitching staff with two 20-game winners in Kevin Dotson and LaMarr Hoyt, and a solid bullpen.

The White Sox also have powerful hitting with Greg Luzinski, Ron Kittle and Carlton Fisk providing the power. Rudy Law, with a club-record 77 stolen bases last season, will supply the speed.

The Sox should run away with the division by 15 to 20 games.

The best of the rest in the division will be fought out between the Oakland A's and the California Angels.

The A's have one of the faster outfields in baseball with the combination of Dwayne Murphy, Rickey Henderson and Mike Davis, respectively. The A's pitching staff was bolstered by the nabbing of the "Inspector," former Seattle Mariner bullpen ace Bill Caudill.

The A's also will have the services of Joe Morgan, a proven winner with Cincinnati, San Francisco and Philadelphia, who should anchor a young Oakland infield. Although the A's are not overly talented, they are solid, and that should be enough to net them the division's second spot.

Everyday should be an Oldtimer's Game at Anaheim this season as the Angels return the division's oldest team. California is loaded with big name stars such as Reggie Jackson, Fred Lynn, Rod Carew and Bobby Grich, but the Angels have them past their prime.

Combined with an aging pitching staff of Tommy John, Ken Forsch and Geoff Zahn, the Angels don't have the horses to challenge for the division title, but can rely on memory to get them third place in the West.

The Texas Rangers will be the division's fourth place team. The Rangers have one of the better out-fields in the league, with former Minnesota Twin Gary Ward joining Billy Sample and George Wright. But besides Buddy Bell and Larry Parish, the team has no big lumber men and doesn't have what it takes to be a consistent winner.

As a Royals' fan, it kills me to relegate my team to fifth, but that's where they'll be this season. The spring training injury to George Brett is just another in a string of bad luck for the Royals, along with the knee injury to Dennis Leonard and the drug incident which cost the team Willie Wilson.

The Royals still return Frank White, Dan Quisenberry and Hal McRae, but the team has too many ifs involved. With a little luck the Royals may gain a top three finish, but luck has been a scarce commodity in Kansas City lately, so don't expect much.

The Minnesota Twins and Seattle Mariners will round up the division, playing their own version of minor league ball.

The American League East has the champion Orioles, but it will be the Detroit Tigers who will win one of the tougher divisions in baseball.

The Tigers played probably the best ball in the majors at the end of the last season, but ran out of time to catch the Orioles. With a full season, the Tigers should be able to unseat Baltimore.

The Tigers have no deep weaknesses. The infield is strong with Alan Trammell and Lou Whitaker at second and shortstop, while Lance Parrish is solid at catcher. Larry Herndon and Chet Lemon provide the muscle in the outfield along with new acquisition Darrell Evans, coming over from San Francisco.

The pitching staff also is deep, led by the Jack Morris, Dan Petry and Milt Wilcox with Aurelio Lopez providing the relief.

Although the pitching isn't as deep as Baltimore's, the overall strength of the team should power the Tigers to the top.

Still, the Orioles won't give up the title without a fight. Baltimore has been the most consistent franchise in baseball during the past 15 years, and with Ripken, Eddie Murray, Ken Singleton and company, they'll be a winner again.

The strength of the team is in the pitching staff. Jim Palmer, Mike Flannigan, Mike Bodicker, Tippy Martinez and Storm Davis make up the league's deepest staff.

With a veteran ball team, the Orioles may have the advantage down the stretch, but they also might run out of gas towards the season's end. Look for the Orioles to finish no more than two games in back of Detroit in the best race of the year.

The Blue Jays, Brewers and Yankees should also have above-.500 seasons.

Toronto has a good pitching staff and a solid infield but is a future division winner, not one that can win it this season. The Brewers know how to win and still have Robin Yount, Cecil Cooper, Ben Oglivie and Paul Molitor hitting. The team should challenge for the top spot, but also will be a couple of wins short.

The Yankees have Dave Winfield, Roy Smalley and Ken Griffey, and Ron Guidry on the mound, but won't be a real factor this season in the race. New York can't win with George Steinbrenner meddling in team decisions like he does. Also, age is creeping up on some of the Yankees veteran players.

The Cleveland Indians and Boston Red Sox will finish at the bottom of the division. If they were in the Western division, the Indians and Red Sox would be contenders, but in the East they are merely also-rans.

After the division races are over, the White Sox should edge the Tigers for the pennant and move on to the World Series. It should be an exciting season.

New president of Guinea pledges to promote rights

By The Associated Press

DAKAR, Senegal — Army Col. Lansana Konte became Guinea's president Thursday, two days after leading a coup, and his new government charged that "certain foreign embassies" were backing an effort to disrupt its rule.

The announcement of Konte's appointment, broadcast by the Guinea's state-run Radio Conakry and monitored in Dakar, was accompanied by "an urgent appeal for vigilance."

It warned that a small group connected with the deposed regime was trying to disrupt the West African country's new military government "with the complicity of certain foreign embassies." The embassies were not named.

Western diplomats in Conakry,

Guinea's capital, said there was no indication of any armed opposition and Konte, in his first public statement, said there was no chance of a return to the old government. They were contacted by telephone.

"The former regime died with President Sekou Toure," Konte declared in an interview on Radio Conakry.

Ahmed Sekou Toure, a ruthless autocrat, was Guinea's president from its independence in 1958 until his death March 26 after emergency heart surgery in Cleveland, Ohio.

Little is known about Konte, but his regime has made contact with Western embassies, including that of the United States, and expressed a desire for friendly relations. It has pledged to promote free enterprise and human rights.

"We explain to them the difference between a grant and a loan, what has to be paid back and what doesn't. We explain to them that for half the price of a used car and benefits for the rest of their lives, a year's education from a vo-tech is a pretty good deal," Lockhart said.

Both Carey and Lockhart said the USACA is unique because of the amount of time and attention given the trainees by their military superiors.

In the past 2½ years, there have been no escapes from the facility, and if a prisoner has had enough "good-time" accumulated, he may be given leave. Leisure time activities such as bowling are taught because it has been found that with most drug offenders, alternative pastimes need to be found, Carey said.

"At first I thought this was crazy. Teach people to bowl? But these kids, and that's what most of them are, are just out of high school and they just sit around the barracks with nothing to do except smoke a joint, then they get into trouble just because they don't have anything to do," Carey said.

He said only a small percentage of the trainees are usually nowadays to active duty due to a lack of demand for soldiers. However, those who receive an honorable discharge may be kept on in the Army Reserves for the remainder of their term of service.

USACA tries to provide custody and control for Army prisoners and a smoother transition to civilian life so that they may be productive citizens. Only those who are most desirable are returned to duty, Carey said.

'Trail of Tears' split tribe

Divided Cherokees reunite

By The Associated Press

CLEVELAND, Tenn. — Leaders of the two Cherokee nations, divided by 147 years of history and philosophy, meet today for the first time since federal troopers drove the Indian tribe out of southeast Tennessee on the infamous "Trail of Tears" march to Oklahoma.

Officials at the Red Clay State Historical Area, site of the two-day meeting, said they have had inquiries from 23 states about the council and expect between 20,000 and 50,000 visitors.

President Reagan declined an invitation to attend, but Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander will welcome delegates to the council. Rep. Marilyn Lloyd, D-Tenn., plans to be there and thus be the first member of Congress to visit Red Clay since Davy Crockett.

Red Clay, 275 acres of trees and rolling hills about 10 miles northeast of Chattanooga, was the site of the last meeting of the full Cherokee nation on Aug. 7, 1837.

At that session, one faction of the tribe signed a treaty agreeing to give up tribal land in the East for land in Oklahoma. The Cherokees later repudiated the treaty and were upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court, but the state of Georgia ordered their removal.

President Andrew Jackson refused to intervene, and troops led by Gen. Winfield Scott forced about 17,000 Cherokees to move to Oklahoma. About 4,000 Indians died in the winter exodus along the "Trail of Tears."

The survivors settled near Tahlequah, and their descendants are recognized as the Western Cherokee Nation.

But about 1,200 Cherokees refused to leave and hid out in the rugged mountains of western North Carolina, where the Qualla reservation was eventually established at Cherokee.

Today's festivities will begin when 10 Cherokees, bearing an eternal flame lit in 1838 by smoldering coals from Red Clay, arrive after a three-day, 130-mile run from Cherokee.

Robert Youngdeer, chief of the Eastern Cherokee Nation, and Ross Swimmer, chief of the Western Cherokee Nation, hope the two-day meeting will begin a lasting friendship between the two groups that were separated in 1838.

"To meet people who I realize are blood relatives, it almost makes me speechless to think about," Youngdeer said as he prepared for the meeting.

The reunion was planned,

Youngdeer said, partly to arouse cultural pride among Cherokees, especially the young.

"If they know what happened to us back in 1838, maybe they'll try harder to become community leaders. They've got to find out who they are," he said.

The two chiefs epitomize the differences between the two groups that have built up over the years.

Swimmer, 40, an attorney and banker, is head of a tribal council that leases oil properties on its reservation and has a council-owned private plane. Youngdeer, 61, is a former U.S. Marine and law enforcement Civil Service employee on Indian reservations.

Much of the Eastern Cherokees' livelihood depends on tourism, and Youngdeer says they have preserved more of the old Indian customs than their Western relatives. The Oklahoma Cherokees have declined to take part in craft sales and traditional Indian activities planned for the council.

However, whites own two-thirds of the businesses in Cherokee, and many shops sell souvenirs made in Taiwan.

About 6,000 Eastern Cherokees live on the 57,000-acre reservation west of Asheville. About 50,000 Cherokees are registered members of the Western nation.

Carter says press regulation possible

By KATHY BARTELLI
Staff Writer

The press today does not provide adequate and continuous coverage of the news, and unless it begins to correct its own mistakes, it is in danger of being regulated.

This was the opinion expressed by Hodding Carter III when he delivered the 64th Landon Lecture in McCain Auditorium on Friday.

Carter is the host of the PBS series "Inside Story" which examines press performance, and he was the spokesman for the Department of State during former president Jimmy Carter's administration.

"The press does not provide in adequate continuity and context the raw material of information upon which the citizens of a democratic republic must depend for their basic decisions," Carter said.

Carter offered several reasons why this occurs. Among these is the tendency of the press to focus on the current crisis above other issues.

"People in any institution, government included, tend to focus on the current crisis, putting almost all other efforts aside while dealing with it," Carter said. "So that, while there are vast blotches of territory of vital interest to all of us, we are consumed by the one nearest at hand."

Carter said there is a "profound we-they syndrome" in the government which sees the press as something to conquer or be conquered by. He also said there is a tendency for people to put professional demands above those of public accountability.

"There is the normal inclination always to put the demands of the job before the demands of public accountability," Carter said. "In my business, as in others, there is the well-founded fear that distortion can destroy sensitive talks, distort sensitive information, frankly, destroy hard-won efforts before they can run their course."

Carter also cited what he calls "the insane classification system" that desires to cover up mistakes to prevent embarrassment, minimize political loss and guard national security. He said there is a desire to accumulate power by restricting the flow of information.

"In bureaucracy, in any institution, knowledge is power," Carter said. "The control of its flow is one of the true signs of power in the governmental apparatus."

Staff/John Sleezer

Landon Lecturer Hodding Carter III addresses an audience on the topic "Whose News Is It?" Friday in McCain Auditorium. Carter is host for the PBS series "Inside Story," which examines press performance.

Carter said during his time in the State Department, 90 percent of the classified documents he saw could have been unclassified without posing a threat to national security.

"There are seriously important secrets that must be protected," Carter said, "and they are not protected well by a system that classifies everything. There is a way to guard the truly significant. It is not by guarding the trivial."

During his address, Carter also dealt with the errors of the press in news coverage. He said those errors are largely ones of habit and journalistic convention.

"We live in a society which is in continuous flow, in which yesterday affects today and today affects tomorrow and last week had something to do with today and last year had something to do with tomorrow," he said. "But the press deals with information as though you were all geese arriving in a new world every day."

Weinberger denies plan for combat in Central America

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has drawn up plans for the use of U.S. combat troops in Central America if its current support for regional opponents of leftist forces there fails, administration officials said Sunday.

But they stressed the contingency plans are no different from those prepared for other regions where conflict is possible.

"It's something that's done for any potential trouble spot in the world," said one senior administration official, who, like others, spoke on condition he not be identified by name.

This source stressed that the administration was not considering any combat role for U.S. troops this year or next.

"There's no definite time frame attached," he said, indicating that whatever was being prepared was for "some indefinite future," and possibly as far away as the 1990s.

But in a television interview Sunday, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger maintained that no such planning existed at the Pentagon.

"There is no plan of that kind, nor is there any necessity for it...," he insisted under questioning on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley."

Weinberger also denied that contingency plans exist for almost every eventuality.

President Reagan also has said he has no plans to send combat troops to the region.

Meanwhile, reports of the possible use of combat troops could effect congressional action.

One White House official, describing the reports as "not helpful," said they could make it tougher to win approval for additional military aid for El Salvador.

But, he added, it also could signal to Congress the administration's willingness to use the troops if U.S. financial support is insufficient to turn back the leftist rebels seeking to overthrow the Salvadoran government.

Officials acknowledged that if troops were sent in, it would most likely involve invoking the Rio Pact of 1947, which involves mutual defense of the United States and the nations of Central America.

It would also most likely require action under the War Powers Act, under which Congress must give assent to the extended use of U.S. troops in a combat situation.

After reports of the plans surfaced Sunday, Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., the Senate minority whip, said he intends to ask the Senate Foreign Relations Committee "to immediately obtain from the Reagan administration the full details and purposes" of the plans.

"It sounds like another instance of President Reagan preparing to use military force, not as a worst-case possibility, but as a first-case option," said Cranston. Or, he suggested, "the administration may be trying to intimidate Congress."

Officials seek fugitive in local murder case

By The Associated Press

MIAMI — On Friday, fugitive Christopher Bernard Wilder, sought in the disappearances of eight young women this year, was charged in a Geary County District Court warrant with first-degree murder, felony murder, aggravated kidnapping and rape in the death of Suzanne W. Logan.

Logan, 20, of Oklahoma City, was abducted from an Oklahoma City shopping center March 25. Her body was discovered near Milford Lake March 26.

Authorities said the case bears similarities to the death or disappearance of six other women.

Wilder once said on a dating service videotape that he wanted "to meet and enjoy the company of a number of women."

"I have a need to meet and socialize on a more wider basis than I have been doing," he said on the videotape, made in 1981.

The 39-year-old race car driver has been charged with the abduction and murder of one woman and the kidnapping of a second, and is suspected in six other disappearances.

Landowner stands his ground

Farmers defend land patents

By LEE WHITE
Manhattan Editor

They're called land patents. And if Pottawatomie County farmer Alvin Matzke and his associates are right, the patents could give family farming the shot in the arm it has been waiting for.

Matzke, whose farm may be sold at an April 17 auction to satisfy a judgment against him, called a press conference at Kearby's Restaurant east of Manhattan on Friday where he and two others explained the purpose of declaring patents on farm land.

A landowner may not use land as collateral on a loan and a lending agency can't take it, Matzke said. Having a patent on the land is a kind of insurance against a lending agency's foreclosing on a loan and taking a farmer's land because a patent is a superior title to property, he said.

Two speakers at the conference supported Matzke's view. Dave Prater, an Illinois farmer, said he learned land law by reading materials at the Illinois Supreme Court Law Library. The other speaker, Charles Walters Jr., is the publisher of Acres, U.S.A., a monthly agricultural publication.

Matzke and his family filed patents on their land in March. Through some error, the patents were erroneously recorded on 31,000 acres of the Matzkes' and others' land.

"As to how it got recorded on 31,000 acres, I do not know," Matzke said. "There were 275 recordings of the patent on other people's land."

Matzke, like other farmers hit hard recently by money problems, is trying to save his land. He said many farmers had been "suckered in" by loan agencies when money was less tight.

He cited examples of farmers who have lost their land to creditors and tied land patents to the possibility of saving land from foreclosures.

"We do have a problem in our country today, and it's a big one," Matzke said. "It ain't going to be solved easily. We Americans are going to have to stand up, each and every one of us. The court system is tough, it's rough and it's hard."

Prater said the land patent laws were established by founding fathers of the United States who came to this country so they could own land. In the feudalistic systems from which they came, land was ultimately controlled by the king, he said.

"It was never meant for these corporations to have control of this property and use it as collateral for mortgages or loans," Prater said. "Thomas Jefferson said that the American people should never allow the banks to issue their own currency. First by inflation then by deflation — that's where we're headed now — the banks and corporations that grow up around them will deprive the people of all property until their children will wake up homeless in the land their fathers occupied. That's right where we're headed today unless we do something about it."

Matzke, Prater and Walters called for farmers to file patents on their land to protect it from creditors. Prater said he filed a patent on his land, which creditors are trying to sell. He said a real estate agent won't sell the land because Prater has title to it.

"I'm not saying that a loan is no good," Prater said. "The debt is still owed, but they can't put you off the land."

Equal rights foe to speak today

Phyllis Schlafly, a leading figure in the anti-feminist movement, will speak at 7 p.m. today in the Union Forum Hall.

Her visit is sponsored by the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee.

She will address such topics as the Equal Rights Amendment, women's role in the family, sexual discrimination, abortion and national defense.

Schlafly has written nine books and is a syndicated columnist for Copley News Service. She founded Stop ERA in 1972, which helped defeat the passage of the Equal Rights Amendment.

Schlafly is a mother of six. She received her bachelor's degree from Washington University in St. Louis and a master's degree in political science from Radcliffe. At age 54, Schlafly earned a degree in law.

A panel discussion will be held in Forum Hall following the lecture. Members of the panel include Dorothy Thompson, director of K-State Affirmative Action; Frank Saal, associate professor of psychology; John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy; and Judy Davis, director of the Regional Crisis Center.

The lecture is free and open to the public.

Spaceman fails on three attempts to retrieve costly, crippled satellite

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Spacemaker George Nelson failed Sunday in three daring attempts to retrieve a costly, crippled satellite for repairs in space, and flight directors said their only hope was to save it by using the shuttle's robot crane.

The chance of accomplishing that was enhanced during the day by engineers at the Goddard Space Flight Center in Maryland who managed in frantic efforts to steady the satellite a great deal with commands to its computers.

"We have been able to bring the momentum rates down to levels which are, we believe, within capture capability of remote arm capture," said Dr. Frank Cepollina, director of the rescue mission.

"The bottom line," he said, "is that we're going to go for it."

But Cepollina said he did not know whether the rescue attempt would be made today. NASA officials might take advantage of time available to them and not make the attempt until Tuesday.

Cepollina said if the capture was accomplished with the shuttle arm within 24 to 36 hours there would be little damage to the expensive solar observatory called Solar Max.

"I feel much more optimistic tonight than I did this morning," he said.

There appeared to be no chance of sending Nelson out to try again.

"At the moment we do not have and are not projected to have enough propellant" to rescue the astronaut if his backpack should fail, said Flight Director John Cox.

Another flight director had said that "tomorrow is our day to succeed or not to succeed," in pulling the Solar Max satellite into the shuttle's cargo bay for repairs. But Cox said later if the satellite is stabilized and receiving power from its solar panels, the attempt might be put off until Tuesday.

If the tumbling is not stopped, Cox said, the crew would make a last chance try anyway today to latch on to the satellite and proceed with the repair. Failure on today could result in the shuttle coming home one day early, on Wednesday. Success on Tuesday could extend the mission a day.

Cox said shuttle commander Robert L. Crippen made four attempts Sunday at achieving a "rolling grapple" with the arm — trying to snatch a pin on the satellite while it was turning.

That, said Cox, used up propellant that would be needed for any rescue of an astronaut and "that's a very dangerous situation and we would not jump into that one lightly."

The Solar Max repair was the main purpose of the 11th space shuttle flight. Another part of the mission, deploying an 11-ton cylinder loaded with experiments for a 10-month stay in space, was conducted without a hitch Saturday.

Nelson, using a jetpack to scout 200 yards from the Challenger to the satellite, tried to attach himself with a spring-loaded device to a pin on the slowly spinning sun observatory to steady it for grabbing by the arm. But the device did not latch.

"I hit the thing square on," Nelson said. "I bounced out and I went back in and I hit it again and it didn't snap either time."

BIPARTISAN COMMITTEE ON DEFICIT TRIMMING

Allocations benefit SGA leaders

The University and its activities are assumed to be learning experiences. Classes certainly are, in most instances. Student government should be also.

After witnessing the erosion of civil rights under the current national administration, might not concerned students take heed of obvious necessary reform to protect basic civil liberties and preserve conscientious integrity on their own campus?

No. Judging from tentative allocations from the Student Senate Finance Committee, senators are neither learning from example nor initiating reform where it could best begin — a mock government that sets an example for "real world" political involvement.

Tentative allocations eliminate funding for the Coalition for Human Rights, Early Childhood Development Laboratory, Women's Resource Center and BACCHUS. Increased funds are recommended for Associated Students of Kansas, Legal Services, Student Governing Association, Honorariums (such as International Coordinating Council and Puerto Rican Student Organization), Sports Club Council and Students for Handicapped Concerns.

Case in point: salaries for Student Governing Association employees.

As requested, Student Body President Ken Heinz would be paid $3,600, and Senate Chairman Tracy Turner $2,700, for one year in monthly salaries of $300 and $225, respectively.

Why not cut those salaries to $3,575 and $2,675 and provide BACCHUS the only funding they requested — $50 for postage?

The proposed budget also provides for $482 for a work-study secretary in the SGA office, where a full-time classified secretary is already employed. Why not transfer that money to the Women's Resource Center? It only requested $375.20 for a work-study salary and $100 for advertising.

And considering the cut of a requested $2,470 graduate assistant salary for the Early Childhood Development Laboratory, the Finance Committee has exhibited evident disregard for the diversified needs of K-State students.

Finance Committee recommendations have been steered to benefit student leaders. Growing social concerns such as child care for full-time student parents, equitable treatment for women and alcoholic awareness and prevention are not addressed.

Furthermore, senate's claim that the Coalition for Human Rights will not be funded because it is a political group smacks of hypocrisy in an educational environment. The group is an effective, liberal learning tool. A university education should include a liberal arts background.

The committee should be commended for maintaining funding for Students for Handicapped Concerns, Honorariums and the Fone Crisis Center. But it underestimated the immediate importance of many other integral campus organizations.

Retake policy subject to change

The Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee is currently considering a proposal which would change the policy about retaking classes. Under the proposal, the original grade in a class that was repeated would be included in a student's cumulative grade point average.

As it is now, only the grade received when the class was repeated is computed into the student's GPA.

Concern over the current retake policy grew out of a realization that certain students were able to graduate only through numerous retakes of courses they had previously failed. The current retake policy provided the only opportunity for some students to maintain the mandatory 2.0 GPA necessary to graduate.

This proposal is in the beginning stages. Just because the committee is examining this proposal does not necessarily mean it will become policy.

Faculty Senate believes the current policy has disadvantages. Otherwise, it would not have decided to seek a possible change. But the new proposal also may adversely affect some students.

Student Senate will soon receive the Faculty Senate's proposal for consideration.

Senate is the students' outlet for concern. Now is the time for students to express their views to their senators about the current retake policy or the proposed changes.

With concern on the part of students and faculty, it is hoped a proposal will be developed which addresses the drawbacks of the current retake policy without creating additional problems.

Politics in the boondocks

When is a win not a win? When it occurs in Wisconsin. Just ask Gary Hart.

Hart won the Wisconsin Democratic primary Tuesday with 46 percent of the vote. Walter Mondale grabbed 43 percent and Jesse Jackson took 10 percent.

It appeared Hart would win a majority of Wisconsin's 78 delegates. But wait — the story has just begun.

Wisconsin's primary was a "beauty contest." The primary allowed registered Republicans to vote on the Democratic candidates. The real contest was Saturday, when Wisconsin's Democrats held caucuses to determine who would earn the state's delegates.

After the dust cleared, Mondale won 57 percent of the caucus vote, Hart finished with 30 percent and Jackson earned 11 percent.

Instead of grabbing a majority of the delegates, Hart had to watch Mondale take 47 delegates, while Hart got 23. The remaining eight delegates will be divided later.

If I were Hart, I'd be a little upset. Why bother to hold the popular vote if it doesn't count for anything? It seems Wisconsin wasted money in holding the primary.

On the other hand, if I were Mondale, I'd be delighted. Mondale was He claimed the Republicans voted for Hart, but the true Democratic clan voted for the leader they want — Mondale.

I think the true winner in the Wisconsin battle was President Reagan. He didn't have to campaign against another candidate. He ran away with a victory without entering the race.

The Wisconsin affair highlights some of the absurdity of this campaign. The candidates want to eliminate waste in government, yet none spoke out against Wisconsin's popular vote.

Another thing I find hard to believe is none of the candidates bothered to come to Kansas when the state had its caucuses last month.

I know Kansas doesn't have a large population and the state is "out in the boondocks," but are Kansans so unimportant the candidates can ignore the state?

Granted, the candidates had campaign organizations in Kansas and spokesmen canvassing the state. Forums and debates were held by the candidates' representatives. All of this is nice, but was it too much to ask of Hart to return to his home state? Was it too much to ask Jackson and Mondale to visit the state?

If John Glenn was still a candidate, the others probably would have stopped in Kansas just to try to nullify the endorsement Glenn received from Gov. John Carlin. Alas, it wasn't to be. Glenn dropped out of the presidential hunt early, Carlin became uncommitted to any other candidate and the candidates made Kansas into a twilight zone for presidential politics.

The nation is composed of more than New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Texas, Florida, California and Massachusetts. While these states may contain a majority of the nation's residents, they don't constitute the whole country. A president must be able to represent the whole country, not just a handful of interests.

Until each candidate actually visits each state and takes the time to meet its residents (at least a sample of its residents), the country can look forward to more beauty-contest votes followed by caucuses and no-candidate primaries.

What a way to choose a president.

Senators question coliseum name

"For $7 million, don't we have a say?" asked a confused Student Senate on Thursday night.

"No" was essentially the answer of guest speaker Art Loub, executive vice president of the KSU Foundation.

At issue was the decision to name the new coliseum after its largest contributor and one of its most energetic fund-raisers, Fred Bramlage of Junction City. "No other name surfaced," Loub said.

When asked if students had any input in the decision, Loub answered no. When asked if the naming committee had conducted historical research or had considered an outstanding student-athlete or coach, Loub again answered no.

Vigorous debate ensued. Most senators felt that since student dollars match alumni dollars, students should have an equal say in the naming and architectural choice of the coliseum. One senator said the decision rested more on Bramlage's gift of $1.7 million than on a non-monetary judgment of his dedication and contribution to the University.

Another senator countered by commenting on Bramlage's sincerity, his coliseum philanthropy and other donations and on his tireless efforts to raise the total $7 million Foundation pledge.

On first glance, senators' frustration with the Foundation over the absence of a student voice seems valid. But after reflection, a few senators believe senate has only itself to blame. The Foundation has never refused student input. Students never asked to be included.

Senate managed to calculate the coliseum fee structure correctly and implement its collection, but it forgot the most important principle — representation after taxation. We hope this sort of bureaucratic oversight can be avoided in the future.

Tomorrow would be the best time to start. Thursday the senate Finance Committee released its recommendations, which are published in this issue of the Collegian. Senate will begin deliberating at 6 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Big Eight Room.

Any student with an opinion on the committee's recommendations should make his or her voice known, either by contacting senators or by speaking during the open period at the beginning of the meeting. In addition, all should remember Student Body President Ken Heinz can veto any senate action, as can University President Duane Acker.

Finance Committee recommended not to fund the Coalition for Human Rights, Women's Resource Center, Early Childhood Development Laboratory and BACCHUS (an alcohol awareness group). Of groups that did receive recommendations for funding, MECHA (a Mexican-American organization) and Black Student Union suffered the largest cutbacks from last year's allocations.

The seven groups recommended for increases from last year are the Associated Students of Kansas, Legal Services, Student Governing Association, Sports Club Council, Honorariums, Fone Crisis Center and Students for Handicapped Concerns.

'Pud' classes cheat all concerned

Only five weeks until school is out! Papers and projects are coming due, finals will soon be here, and students are trying to find summer jobs. On top of everything else, pre-enrollment begins Tuesday.

It is hard to plan classes for next semester when the most demanding part of this semester lies ahead, but good planning now can save problems next fall.

Many students have probably taken classes in which they felt they learned little and left with frustration. They want to avoid them in the future. Recognizing a bad class before the semester starts is the problem.

One way to avoid such a class is to avoid taking something just because it is supposed to be "pud." There is one problem with "pud" classes — few people are truly interested in the subject matter.

There is no listing for "pud" classes in the line schedule. The department of "pud" at K-State grants no degrees. But at this time of the semester, "pud" classes are the subject of many conversations.

"Hey, I heard introduction to underwater basketweaving is a pretty pud class."

"Is it interesting?"

"I doubt it, but it counts as a P.E. or an art class. Besides, it's an easy A."

"Well, I can't swim and I hated basketweaving when I was a kid. But if it's easy, I'll take it."

Usually a "pud" class is just something to endure. If students take a course with the idea that it will be easy, they will resent the work the instructor assigns. Doing class work is necessary to learn about the subject, but attitudes of students in these classes discourage instructors from making those students work.

Student attitudes in "pud" classes cheat everyone concerned. They cheat the students who enrolled in a class just because it was "pud." Instead of learning, these students only care about the grade.

But it is difficult, if not impossible, for many people to take classes after graduation. "Pud" classes cheat students of the only opportunity they may ever have to learn about a subject.

The instructor also is cheated. No teacher wants to have a class that doesn't care about the subject. Instead of teaching that class, the instructor could be teaching one in which students cared about learning.

Students who take a class because they thought it would be interesting are hurt the most. These students are making an attempt to learn, but these classes often do not offer an environment which enhances learning.

A "pud" class is easy to recognize. On the first day, the students walk into a huge room (attendance is usually required for "pud" classes). The instructor walks in and begins to lecture in a monotone voice. One student is playing his walkman radio loud enough for anyone in a three-block area to hear. Everyone else seems to be sleeping or studying for another class. Students soon stop caring and start counting the seats.

During pre-enrollment students have the chance to avoid these classes. Even students who don't take "pud" classes have had classes occasionally. But students who intentionally enroll in "pud" classes have no one to blame for the outcome except themselves.

Briefly

By The Associated Press

Once accused man greeted kindly

GREENVILLE, Texas — Lenell Geter, cleared of a restaurant holdup for which he was sentenced to life in prison, has been given a lifetime free-meal pass at another chicken eatery connected with the case.

Geter and George Hairston, a lawyer with the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, visited the restaurant Saturday on their way to a black-tie banquet in Dallas to honor two lawyers who represented Geter.

Geter said restaurant manager Joe Cuna recognized him and gave him a business card with a handwritten lifetime free-meal pass scribbled on the back.

"We were really touched (that) he'd come in," Cuna said. "I guess he just wanted to show us everything was cool."

None of the employees was working at the restaurant when police claimed that Geter, a black engineer at E-Systems in Greenville, robbed it in August 1982.

Although he was never charged with that heist, information gathered against him resulted in a conviction for the robbery of another fried chicken restaurant in the Dallas suburb of Balch Springs.

Prosecutors agreed to let Geter have a new trial last December. Charges were dropped last month after authorities blamed the robbery on an ex-convict from Houston.

Geter said the free meal ticket "was surprising, but it was a nice gesture."

Area resident killed in accident

Three people died in weekend traffic accidents in Kansas, including a Mulvane woman who was killed in a crash between a car and a pickup truck at an intersection of two county roads north of her hometown.

The victim was identified as Julie Covert, 22. The accident occurred Friday night.

James R. Weinert, 32, of Frankfort, was killed in a one-vehicle accident two miles northeast of Manhattan early Saturday, the Kansas Highway Patrol reported. He was a passenger in a car that failed to negotiate a curve on a county road, went into a ditch and overturned.

Robert E. Cassity Jr., 30, of Lawrence, was struck and killed by a car Friday night as he walked along a city street, police said.

Police said Cassity and a companion were walking with their backs to traffic when the accident occurred.

Statement makes life a 'nightmare'

KEARNEY, Neb. — Colorado Gov. Richard D. Lamm says his life has been "an absolute nightmare" since he said late last month that the terminally ill elderly have a "duty to die."

At a news conference Saturday, Lamm said he had received 1,400 letters and has been asked to appear on numerous talk shows since his March 27 remarks to a group of health industry lawyers in Denver.

"I've never gotten as much mail," said the 48-year-old governor. He said he has gotten more letters supporting his statement than opposing it, but there were a couple letters addressed to "Gov. Hitler."

"A lot of people told me to drop dead, and a number of them told me to run for president," he said. Some of the letters were from people who related their own experiences with dying relatives.

Senate to begin allocations

The following are allocations made to campus organizations in 1983-1984, with the amount each group requested for 1984-1985 and the allocations Student Senate Finance Committee recommended for 1984-1985. Line-item (LI) organizations receive a given amount per student enrolled at K-State. Full-time equivalency (FTE) refers to the amount an organization receives per full-time student enrolled at K-State.

The tentative allocation process begins 6 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Big Eight Room.

A local family watches as a model train moves by on a track set up by members of the Railjoinders.

Ed Hoover, Manhattan-area Railjoinders vice president, talks about trains.

Model railroaders swap love of hobby

A model train cruises down the track as 13-year-old Mike Nelson, the youngest of the Railjoinders, watches. Scenes were built by members of the club along the large oval track depicting different depots.

When Richard Napper, 811 Osage St., told his father he wanted to be a "hoghead," his father didn't like the idea. He had been one and felt his son should do something different; he should find an occupation that was economically more reliable.

The name "hoghead," Napper said, was a name given to the conductors of freight trains. The engines themselves were called hogs, while the conductor was unaffectionately called the hoghead.

Many train enthusiasts such as Napper gathered April 1 at the American Legion Hall in Manhattan for the fifth annual Manhattan Area Rail Joiners Model Train Swap Meet.

While the event was basically a swap meet for people whose hobby is miniature trains, Napper said there was also a model contest with nine categories ranging from model steam engines to cabooses.

"We have people from all over," he said. "Most of these people have layouts of their own."

Napper said the collecting of railroad memorabilia is more than just a childhood hobby that hasn't yet lost its nostalgic fascination.

"Some people might think we play with toys," Napper said. "But you look at some of these engines and you'll see things a kid couldn't do."

"Most people try to duplicate in miniature some real-life prototype," he said.

Napper smiled with pride as he explained that he's a fourth-generation Frisco man. The Frisco was a rail line which recently merged with the Burlington Northern Railroad, producing the financially strongest rail line and the biggest, with about 29,000 miles of track.

Napper now works as an electrical engineer and said he regrets following his father's advice.

"He didn't want me following in his footsteps," he said. "I wish I hadn't listened to him now."

About 400 people attended the swap meet, and one couldn't look far without running into names like "Mo-Pac," "Great Northern Railway" and "Main Line Rio Grande-Through the Rockies," all placed conspicuously on an array of hats, buttons, shirts and patches.

Frank Hemphill, Wichita, said he's enjoyed model trains as a hobby for 38 years. Much of Hemphill's collection of miniatures are made of brass, which he said allows for more detail, "providing you know how to solder."

Hemphill couldn't give an estimate of his collection's worth, but he said his insurance company has it insured for $38,000.

Don Claggett, owner of Don's Manhattan Central Railroad Hobby Shop and sponsor of the meet, said one of the main reasons for his love of the hobby originates from being born in a railroad family. He said he's been participating in the hobby since he was about 23 years old.

"Some guy pestered me to help him with his layout and I've been hooked ever since," Claggett said. "I've been collecting trains for 35 years."

Claggett helped operate a 16 feet by 32 feet model train track with various life-like settings surrounding it. He said the estimated cost of that layout is about $6,000.

His father was a section foreman, and an aunt and uncle worked at a depot. Claggett, like Napper, said his father dissuaded him from following in his footsteps.

"My dad told me not to get into railroads because they wouldn't be around when I'll need employment," Claggett said. "I wish I hadn't listened. Railroads will come back stronger than they ever were, passenger cars included."

He said fuel shortages will be one of the main reasons for the railroad's comeback, but says he may not live to see it.

Napper agreed, saying railroads are prospering even now.

"Railroads are making money hand over foot," Napper said. "So's Amtrak. In my opinion, it's the best way to travel. You can keep your planes."

Movie avoids staleness of action films

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

The most obvious film to compare "Romancing the Stone" with is "Raiders of the Lost Ark." But since "Romancing the Stone" is such a well-crafted piece of entertainment, it ultimately escapes any accusations of being purely derivative.

Review

The film could have easily degenerated into a rather routine action yarn, but the direction of Robert Zemeckis and the editing is so crisp that the film is almost always propelled forward at a brisk pace. There are temporary lapses where "RTS" begins to drag, but those lulls are rather insignificant compared to all the genuine excitement generated during the action scenes.

Kathleen Turner plays Joan Wilder, a weepy-eyed gothic romance novelist. As the film begins, Wilder is completing her latest novel, and the ending she has just written leaves her in tears, roaming her apartment in search of tissue on which to blow her nose.

Wilder is so entrenched in the images she has created that no man in her life can ever live up to her Utopian concept of a lover. To her, no man can compare to the Jesse of her novels. He embodies everything she feels a man must have, so she lives alone, with only her cat to keep her company.

But how can Wilder be pulled away from Bloomingdale's and Gucci's? There is a treasure map, of course. Wilder's sister mailed Wilder a package containing the map just before being captured by two illegal dealers of ancient artifacts. They threaten to kill her unless Wilder personally delivers the map.

When Wilder arrives in Columbia, she boards the wrong bus, and after it wrecks in the rain forest, she is stranded. Coming to her rescue, though, is man-of-the-world, soldier of fortune John Colten (Michael Douglas). For a fee, he agrees to take her to the nearest phone booth. They soon find out that more than just the two illegal dealers are after the map; the whole Columbian police force is looking for it as well.

To avoid being captured our heroes are forced to flee through the jungle. It just so happens that the land described on the treasure map is the exact area that they find themselves in, so they decide to look for the treasure.

The film's largest flaw may be the casting of Douglas as John Colten. Since he produced the film, he could have any role he desired. While Douglas is pleasant enough as the hardened soldier of fortune, he has very little of the charisma necessary to make his character engaging or the romance between him and Turner believable.

The lack of electricity in their romance is not totally his fault. The screenplay breaks one of the oldest rules of Hollywood: never let the romance be more or less resolved until the last reel. It's only halfway through the film when Wilder and Colten have fallen hopelessly in love. While Colten's motives are still in question, the love-hate relationship is gone, and with it goes much of the tension.

The scene which shows them quickly fall for each other is not imaginatively filmed. It drags when there should have been sparks flying. Much of the dialogue between Wilder and Colten lacks the punch necessary to make interesting their growing awareness of each other.

But where "Romancing the Stone" succeeds are the action scenes. There is a plunge over a waterfall. There is a swing by way of tree vine over a giant chasm. There is a water slide-like fall down the side of a hill. This is all rendered with excellent photography and breath-taking pacing. Zemeckis reveals himself as a major talent who should be watched closely in the future.

Turner comes as quite a surprise. She is nothing like the femme fatale who utterly destroyed William Hurt in "Body Heat." As the film progresses, she is transformed from the dreary-eyed dreamer into the sensual woman we would expect.

Danny DeVito, as one of the illegal dealers, is given little to do except look funny. He responds quite well, though, to the few bits of comedy he is given.

Tennis teams drop three dual matches

By TIM FILBY
Staff Writer

The K-State men's and women's tennis teams dropped three dual matches during the weekend opening of Big Eight Conference play.

The women's team went on the road to face the University of Oklahoma and Oklahoma State University. Facing two of the conference's stronger teams, the Wildcats fell to the Sooners, 8-1, and the Cowboys, 9-0.

"The girls think they can compete with most teams," K-State Tennis Coach Steve Webb said. "They really competed against Oklahoma. They gained a bit of confidence even though they lost 8-1."

Against the Sooners on Saturday, Kim Black picked up the Wildcats' only victory when she defeated Tracey Walter, 4-6, 7-6, 6-1, in No. 3 singles competition.

"Kim beat the girl from Oklahoma who finished second at her position in the Big Eight last year," Webb said. "For Kim to beat her, that was a really great win."

Lisa Creighton, playing No. 6, suffered the narrowest singles loss, falling to Dian Fernandez, 7-5, 7-5. In other matches, No. 1 Tamie Peugh lost to Allyson Ingram 6-4, 6-2; Susan Peugh, playing No. 2, lost to Micheal Wells, 6-0, 6-1; No. 3 Judy Miller fell to Wendy Mikkelsen, 6-4, 6-0; and Caryle Madelen, playing No. 4, was defeated by Jasna Stefanovic, 6-1, 6-3.

In doubles play, the No. 1 team of Miller and Black fell to Ingram and Mikkelsen, 6-1, 6-0; Tamie Peugh and Madelen, playing No. 2, lost to Wells and Stefanovic, 6-2, 6-3; and No. 3 Susan Peugh and Erica Anderson fell to Fernandez and Walters, 6-3, 6-2.

Against Oklahoma State on Sunday, Tamie Peugh came closest to picking up a win for K-State, losing to Reneta Margindowski, 7-5, 6-2, in a match between the teams' top two players.

Susan Peugh and Miller suffered 6-0, 6-0 losses to Mary Boudreaux and Robyn Lamb, respectively. The other single matches also were straight losses for the team. Madelen fell, 6-0, 6-3, to Rhona Howett, Creighton lost, 6-1, 6-0, to Stacy Swanson, and Black was defeated, 6-2, 6-0, by Nancy Talley.

Miller and Black lost to Boudreaux and Lamb, 6-0, 6-1, in No. 1 doubles competition. Tamie Peugh and Madelen fell to Magindowski and Swanson, 6-2, 6-4, while Susan Peugh and Anderson were shut out by Sue Mowery and Anastasia Petrovic, 6-0, 6-0.

In Manhattan, the men's squad had its hands full with Oklahoma on Saturday, losing 9-0.

The team failed to win a set against the Sooners. Playing No. 1, Kris James lost to Sam Fotopoulos, 6-1, 6-1; Mark Hassenflu was defeated by Joe Braver, 6-2, 6-1, in No. 2 play; Zane Burke, No. 3, was topped, 6-0, 6-1, by Steve Dawson; No. 4 Scot Sandlin lost to Mark Collins, 6-1, 6-0; Richard Blevins fell, 6-2, 6-1, in No. 5 competition against Warren Diamond; and No. 6 Clark Renfro was defeated, 6-0, 6-1, by Bill Mee.

In doubles play, the squad fared no better. James and Blevins lost to Braver and Dawson, 6-1, 6-2; Renfro and Burke lost to Fotopoulos and Collins, 6-4, 6-4; and Hassenflu and Sandlin fell, 6-0, 6-1, to Mee and Barry King.

Tuesday the men will face the University of Kansas in Manhattan. "KU is a real strong team this year," Webb said. "If we can get two wins, we'd be happy."

The women travel west next weekend to play Cal-Poly Pomona in Denver and will resume conference play Saturday against the University of Colorado.

Golf team nabs fourth

Sophomore Anne Hegarty's 54-hole total of 276 led the women's golf team to a fourth-place finish in the Southwest Missouri State Invitational on Thursday and Friday.

The University of Missouri placed first in the five-team field, followed by the University of Iowa and Stephens College. K-State finished fourth with a team total of 1,138, while Southwest Missouri rounded out the field in the fifth position.

Sophomore Sharry Dercher captured K-State's second-best finish, shooting a two-day total of 283. Sophomore Terri Alexander finished with a 285, and sophomore Paige Harrison ended the Wildcats' four-player scoring with a 294.

The weather took its toll during the invitational, said Head Coach Lila Levine, who accounted the high scores to the rainy conditions on the course.

OSU shells Wildcat baseball team

By The Associated Press

STILLWATER, Okla. — Oklahoma State University left-hander Dennis Livingston scattered five hits and the Cowboys erupted for seven runs in the second inning — including a pair of two-run homers — to pound K-State, 11-3, for a sweep of their Big Eight Conference baseball double-header Sunday.

Oklahoma State, 24-9 overall and 6-2 in Big Eight play, won the first game, 15-7. K-State dropped to 6-12 and 0-6. The Wildcats have now lost 12 consecutive games.

The seven-run second inning in the nightcap included two-run homers by Bryan Kostishion and Pete Incaviglia and a two-run double by Scott Wade. Kostishion, who had six hits in the doubleheader, hit another homer in the second game.

Brian Bascue hit his first home run of the season for the Wildcats. Livingston, 5-1, struck out 12. K-State's Scott Lichlyter, 1-4, took the loss.

The Cowboys pounded out 12 hits in the second game to only five for the Wildcats.

In the opener, a three-run homer by Wade and another homer by Incaviglia highlighted a 15-hit Oklahoma State attack. Wade and Incaviglia each had three hits in the 15-7 win.

ference it made, but just by watching the scores from the other schools, they were all scoring higher than they should," Levine said. "The course played long, and it was so wet that it played even longer. The second day was a perfect day for golf, but it was still rain-soaked on the course."

Problems with rain have caused difficulties not only during tournament action but during practice time as well, said Levine, whose young squad comprised of five sophomores and one freshman continually find practice conditions difficult.

"We've had so little practice time because of the weather that I'm afraid that our play on the course may be the only practice time we get," she said.

Weather permitting, the squad will get a few days of practice before traveling to Wichita for the Lady Shocker Invitational on April 12-13.

Struckhoff sets record at K-State Invitational

By JUDI WRIGHT
Staff Writer

Part of the K-State men's and women's track squads performed in mild temperatures in Austin, Texas, during the weekend at the Texas Relays, and the rest stayed at home to host the K-State Invitational in the wind and rain Saturday at R.V. Christian Track.

In Manhattan, Jacquie Struckhoff set a track record in the 5,000-meter run with a time of 16:48.8. This time was almost a minute faster than the second-place finisher, Darla Crup of Central Missouri State University.

Also finishing first for K-State was Nancy Hoffman in the 3,000-meter run with a time of 10:39.8. Kelly Wenlock was first in the long jump with a leap of 19-feet-1½, and the 4x100-meter relay team of Crystal Hicks, Michelle Maxey, Dana Brown and Donna King was first with a time of 47.9.

Maxey was second in the 400-meter run with a time of 62.0. King (12.3) and Brown (12.5) finished the 100-meter dash third and fourth, respectively.

In Texas, Deb Pihl set a school record in the 1,500-meter run with a time of 4:19.0 — a personal best which qualified her for the National Collegiate Athletic Association outdoor championships — but she came up with a second-place finish after battling the University of Minnesota's Jody Eder during the entire race. Eder's time was only 0.9 faster than Pihl's.

Anne Stadler finished fifth in the same event with a time of 4:27.11.

Rita Graves finished fourth in the high jump competition after clearing a height of 5-feet-11½. Betsy Silzer finished seventh in the 5,000-meter run with a time of 16:56.1.

The top performer for the men in Texas was triple jumper Kenny Harrison, who finished third with a personal best distance of 52-feet-6.

The men's 6,400-meter relay team — composed of Steve Smith, Bryan Carroll, Mike Rogers and Bob Leetch — finished fourth with a time of 16:43.0. Smith had the best split time of 4.05.6.

The men's distance medley relay team of Ray Mosier, Gary Jefferson, Jon Piles and Smith finished fifth with a time of 9:51.06. Mosier was the strong performer in the relay with a time of 1:50.0 for his 800-meter leg.

Carroll was another K-State athlete who had a personal best at the relays. He time of 14:05.2 in the 5,000-meter run earned him fifth place.

On the relay's opening day Thursday, K-State's Alfredo Rosas finished seventh in a strong field in the 10,000-meter run. Rosas' time of 29:50.5 set a new school record, and he finished third among Americans in the race.

Both the men's and women's squads are scheduled to divide their teams once again, sending partial squads on April 14 to the Shocker Sports Festival in Wichita, the John Jacobs Invitational in Norman, Okla., and the Drake Women's Invitational in Des Moines, Iowa.

Wheatland race to feature Fun Run, 10-kilometer event

The second annual Wheatland Run is scheduled for April 14 at Manhattan's CiCo Park.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity is coordinating the run, and proceeds will go to the American Diabetes Association. Sponsors for the event are Charlie's Neighborhood Bar and Old Milwaukee Light beer.

"The number of runners entered so far is down compared to last year," Rich MacIsaac, sophomore in agricultural economics, said.

MacIsaac said he was disappointed in the response for the race, but he attributed the low interest to the number of other organizations sponsoring runs close to the same date.

The Wheatland Run consists of a two-mile Fun Run at 1:30 p.m. and a 10-kilometer race at 2 p.m., MacIsaac said. Both runs will start and finish at CiCo Park.

Each race has seven age divisions for both men and women. The age divisions are 17 and below, 18 to 21, 22 to 25, 26 to 35, 36 to 45, 46 to 55, and 56 and above.

The run features a new event this year, a team division in the 10-kilometer race, MacIsaac said. Teams will be comprised of three runners in either the men's or women's divisions. Plaques will be given to the three lowest-placing teams in the men's and the women's division.

In the 10-kilometer race, medals will be given to the top five finishers in each age division and to the first three finishers in the Fun Run. Trophies will be given to the top three overall finishers in the 10-kilometer race.

MacIsaac said an awards ceremony will follow the 10-kilometer race at 3:15 p.m.

Participants will receive a T-shirt upon registration for the race.

Entry fees are $7 for the 10-kilometer race and $5 for the two-mile Fun Run, if payment is made before race day. A $1 late fee is added on the day of the race.

Last year, 150 runners raised $150 dollars for the American Diabetes Association in the races.

Chernenko says U.S. policy to blame for world tension

By The Associated Press
MOSCOW — Soviet leader Konstantin U. Chernenko said in an interview published Sunday that, despite "contacts with the American side," the superpowers remain deadlocked on arms control with no sign of a breakthrough.

Chernenko painted a bleak picture of Soviet-American relations and the threat posed by recent escalations in nuclear arms. "The situation in the world is not improving. It remains very dangerous."

His statements were carried by the official Soviet news agency Tass and read over Soviet television. Soviet news media said the statements were answers to questions put to him by the Communist Party newspaper Pravda, and that Pravda would carry the remarks today.

Chernenko did not specify what kind of contacts he had with the United States. He and President Reagan reportedly have exchanged at least four letters since Chernenko succeeded the late Yuri V. Andropov two months ago, and Soviet and U.S. ambassadors in Washington and Moscow have had meetings with senior officials in their host countries.

The Soviet leader said a foreign policy speech Reagan delivered Friday at Georgetown University showed that the United States was not about to change its hardline stance toward the Soviets.

He blamed the United States for increasing world tension and criticized all aspects of U.S. defense policy, particularly the deployment by NATO of U.S. medium-range missiles in Western Europe.

The deployment and the development of more advanced strategic nuclear weapons are part of an American plan "to break one way or another the existing parity of forces."

"Our contacts with the American side also show that no positive changes have taken place in the position of the United States on these cardinal questions," Chernenko said.

Chernenko dismissed as ignorance — or deliberate distortion — speculation in the West that his government is waiting for the outcome of U.S. presidential elections before making any changes in its foreign policy.

"It is a principled policy and not subject to transient vacillations" as are Washington administrations, he said.

He said the Soviet Union sought "normal, stable relations with the United States, relations based on equality, equal security and non-interference in each other's internal affairs."

"It appears that hints about some sort of 'calculations' on our part in connection with the elections in the United States are an attempt by someone to conceal his own reluctance to reach agreements with the Soviet Union on questions that demand their solution," Chernenko charged.

Dole calls Reagan's policy unclear

By The Associated Press
LAWRENCE — Some of the criticism aimed at President Reagan's foreign policy program is deserved because the administration has not made its positions clear, Sen. Bob Dole said Sunday.

"Before you ask people to support your policy, they first have to understand the policy. Central America is a case in point," the Republican senator from Kansas said in an interview with radio station KLWN.

"If they fully understood the problem there and the consequences of doing nothing, I think the great majority of Americans would support the administration."

"But let's face it, the polls show just the opposite, which means that somebody hasn't told the story very well," Dole said.

In a Saturday night speech in Kansas City, Mo., Dole said after months of inaction Congress can now do something about controlling the federal deficit.

The Senate is about to consider President Reagan's "down payment" budget reduction plan, which would lower the deficit by nearly $150 billion over the next four years, he said.

Anti-feminist says ERA unnecessary

By WAYNE PRICE
Staff Writer

Amid a standing-room-only crowd of both vocal opponents and supporters, Phyllis Schlafly, anti-feminist leader and founder of Stop ERA, told K-State students Monday in the Union Forum Hall that the Equal Rights Amendment will never be added to the U.S. Constitution because federal laws already protect women and it's not what the American people want.

"The employment laws are already sex-neutral," Schlafly said. "We have the Equal Pay Act. We have Title VII, which prohibits discrimination in employment. It applies to hiring, to pay and promotion. It's got a whole agency enforcing that."

The agency Schlafly referred to was the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. She said the EEOC has brought millions of dollars of settlements to guarantee women protection against employment discrimination.

"Likewise in education," she said. "Women can have any kind of education they want. We have equal laws in the credit area."

"To sum up, we believe that we do have equality of laws in areas where we want equality of laws. But in other areas where we don't want equality or where it involves a hidden agenda of the ERA advocates, we do not want the Constitution to come along and tell us we are compelled to do something."

Schlafly said when the ERA was first introduced in Congress, it quickly passed 30 of 38 states needed for ratification. After this, women began contacting their legislators and told them both sides should be examined and debated if the Constitution was to be changed.

"Once they started to do that, the states began to defeat it," Schlafly said. "The ERA has not had a good day since January of 1977. That was the month when Indiana passed it and that was the last good thing that happened in the struggle for ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment."

It was during a House Judiciary Committee meeting Nov. 9, 1983, that the ERA's demise was complete, Schlafly said. Several amendments to the ERA were proposed which would have exempted abortion funding, insurance, veterans preference and tax-exempt schools from ERA's effect, but these were thought to be discriminatory by feminists, Schlafly said. They would not accept a watered-down version of the ERA, and it failed.

The drafting of women, she said, was the main reason ERA wasn't passed in state legislatures.

"This is the point at which the whole ERA comes into direct confrontation with the cultures and traditions of the present," Schlafly said.

The amendment didn't pass the Judicial Committee, she said, because an amendment brought up by a committee member which would have allowed women to be exempt from the draft was considered discriminatory by ERA supporters.

"It is my belief that no useful purpose would be served by amending the Constitution in regard to women," Schlafly said, "since women are in the Constitution to exactly, precisely the same extent men are."

"The Constitution is a beautiful sex-neutral document that does not talk about men or women. Every noun used in the Constitution is equally applicable to men and women," she said.

Asked earlier at a news conference if she would support ERA if amendments regarding abortion and women's draft had been included, Schlafly said she would not.

"It would take about 15 amendments to make it satisfactory to me," Schlafly said. "I would not be for it because I don't see it serves any reasonable purpose."

Following her presentation, Schlafly also was rebutted and questioned by a four-member panel. Panel members included Judy Davis, director of the Regional Crisis Center; Dorothy Thompson, director of the K-State Affirmative Action Program; Frank Saal, associate professor of psychology and John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy.

Davis said Schlafly's arguments have brought false illusions to the public. The image Schlafly has given the public is something from

Nicaragua appeals to World Court; U.S. shuns ruling

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The mining of Nicaraguan waters and the Reagan administration's decision to remove its Central America policies from World Court jurisdiction provoked a furor in Congress on Monday, as Nicaragua appealed to the international community to halt U.S. support for anti-government guerrillas.

Congressional Democratic leaders said the latest turn of events in Nicaragua had perhaps doomed the administration's request for funds to finance undercover operations against the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

Even before Nicaragua petitioned the International Court of Justice in The Hague for assistance, the United States announced it would not recognize the court's right to rule in any cases involving Central America for the next two years.

State Department spokesman John Hughes said the administration did not want to answer questions from the World Court about alleged U.S. intelligence activities in Nicaragua. He said Washington also did not want the court to be turned into a "propaganda forum" by Nicaragua.

House and Senate hearings into the Nicaraguan situation were scheduled. Seven House members introduced a resolution demanding an immediate end to the mining of Nicaraguan harbors, which congressional sources say was carried out by CIA agents. The State Department refused to comment on the CIA's reported involvement.

The Senate began Monday night on a non-binding resolution by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., that federal tax revenue should not be used to finance the mining and that the United States should withdraw its challenge to the World Court's jurisdiction.

Both developments were denounced by the three Democratic presidential candidates, and one of them — the Rev. Jesse Jackson — announced in Pittsburgh he would lead a "peace delegation" to Nicaragua later this month or in early May.

"Mining the harbor is close to an act of war," Jackson said. "It's provocative or dangerous. The situation in Central America is deteriorating."

The House resolution, which would not have the force of law but would only express congressional sentiment, was introduced by Rep. Thomas J. Downey, D-N.Y., who said the mining was "completely self-defeating."

"There is no better way to put resolve in the Nicaraguan government than for the United States to actively lay siege to the country," Downey said.

Rep. Michael D. Barnes, D-Md., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Western Hemisphere affairs, said he was "shocked that the president shows so little respect for international law."

Barnes said his subcommittee would hold immediate hearings on what he called "this shameful episode" regarding the World Court.

Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., called a closed meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee today for a briefing on the mining, the World Court action and reports of a contingency plan for sending U.S. troops into Central America. He said public hearings may follow.

Percy, the committee chairman, said he was "surprised and shocked" to learn of the developments in the newspaper instead of the administration.

Shuttle crew hopeful of repairing satellite

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Short on maneuvering fuel but given a "high probability of success," Challenger's orbiting repairmen will try again today to tow the slowly turning Solar Max satellite into the shuttle cargo bay to be fixed.

The shuttle would be in position to latch on to Solar Max beginning at 8:11 a.m. EST and "it may be another half orbit before we actually achieve capture," said flight director John Cox. Challenger circles the Earth every 93 minutes at its height of nearly 300 miles.

Thanks to brains and computer technology, the satellite — twisting and tumbling after rescue attempts failed Sunday — was making only one turn every 12 minutes in one direction, with a slight wobble.

At that rate, Cox said, astronaut Terry Hart will have four to five minutes on each turn to guide the shuttle arm to a pin on the side of the satellite and lock it on.

"I suspect we'll get it on the first rotation," he said.

"I can't give you Las Vegas odds," Cox added. "We've got a high probability of success, a high probability of picking it up."

Challenger's fuel for the rescue was low, so flight controllers worked out a plan to get the most out of what was left. They opted for one engine firing Monday instead of a series and told commander Robert L. Cripp

Council reverses ruling in engineering election

The Engineering Student Council reversed its decision Monday night to require new elections for all its officers for next year.

The council voted 25-2 during its April 2 meeting to veto the results of the Feb. 28-29 elections due to improprieties which occurred during the original elections. In an overwhelming reversal of that decision, the council voted Monday to accept a compromise worked out between the council's current officers and those who won the February elections.

Diane Johnson, current president of the council and senior in electrical engineering, said an appeal had been filed with the Student Tribunal. "Then we were approached by a member of Judicial Council to discuss the advantages of a compromise," she said.

"We feel we came up with a very workable solution. Terms of the compromise will be left to council to decide," Johnson said.

Terms tentatively agreed to by Johnson and the winners of the original election were that only the president and secretary positions would be subject to re-election. Also, a joint statement would be issued that the new election is being held only because of irregularities in the election procedures and not because of any unethical action on the part of the candidates.

John Dollar, assistant dean of the College of Engineering, and Hermann Donnert, professor of nuclear engineering, spoke in support of the compromise.

"Both groups got together and did a very commendable job," Dollar said. "Given everything that happened, it was the best thing we could possibly do."

Donnert said, "To bring the case in front of Tribunal and wash our dirty laundry in front of the public would not be very conducive to the reputation of the college."

The compromise did not meet with unanimous acceptance. Mark Galyardt, junior in industrial engineering, questioned a new election for only two of the positions.

"It really is a no-win situation. It seems it should be all or nothing, we should uphold all of the elections or none of them," he said.

David Utech, former president-elect of the council and junior in engineering technology, said he thinks the decision is in the best interest of the college and the council.

"As speaker for the appealing group, we all thought it was the fairest solution we could come up with," he said.

New elections for president and secretary will be held in conjunction with elections for sophomore representatives April 18-19.

Mitchel Lewis crosses the remains of a balcony as David Smith brushes away debris following the Monday morning collapse at building I of Jardine Terrace apartments. Both men are employed by University Facilities and were working on building renovation when the balcony gave way.

Balcony falls; two workers slightly hurt

The collapse of a balcony Monday morning injured two workers involved in the renovation of building I at Jardine Terrace apartments.

Steven Turner was admitted to The St. Mary Hospital where he is listed in satisfactory condition. Jerome McPherson was treated and released. Both are temporary employees of University Facilities.

The men were using jackhammers to remove concrete from the balcony when it collapsed, Gene Cross, vice president of University Facilities, said.

"Almost 80 feet of the balcony was completed when jackhammering the cement caused one of the three-foot metal pans to give way," he said. "The pan gave way because it was severely rusted out."

The metal pans served as a support for the concrete balconies.

The collapse occurred on the part of the balcony which hadn't been worked on, said Jack Watson, general superintendent of shops for University Facilities.

"They (Turner and McPherson) were on top, and fell when the slab went down," Watson said.

Safety precautions had been used at the site, Watson said.

"They were using framing, and

Food executive to present lecture

The tenth anniversary of the Grace Shugart Lectureship, a lecture series to honor Grace Shugart, will be marked Wednesday with a lecture by Mary Beth Crimmins, regional vice president of Hospital Food Management with ARA Services, Inc.

Shugart, who retired from the K-State faculty in 1975 after 24 years as a teacher, researcher and an administrator, was head of the Department of Dietetics, Restaurant and Institutional Management in the College of Home Economics from 1957 to 1975.

Crimmins will discuss the skills and competencies needed for moving into top management positions at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday in the Union Forum Hall.

Her lecture, "Route to the Executive Suite," will be followed by a luncheon in the Union Ballroom. A panel featuring representatives from food service contracting and pharmaceutical companies and the food industry will address the topic, "New Directions: Challenges in Business and Industry," from 2 to 4 p.m.

A reception at the University Ramada Inn from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. will conclude the day's events. The public is invited to attend the lecture and accompanying activities.

Award recognizes faculty member

Eugene Russell, professor of civil engineering, is the first recipient of the Burns and McDonnell Faculty Recognition Award in the Department of Civil Engineering.

The award includes a $3,000 professorial supplement which will be rotated or renewed every three years within the civil engineering department.

The supplement recognizes outstanding teaching, research and service to the University.

Russell has been a K-State faculty member since 1974 and is currently on sabbatical leave at Purdue University. His field of specialization is urban and public transportation.

Russell earned a bachelor's degree from the University of Missouri at Rolla, a master's degree from Iowa State University and a doctorate from Purdue.

Burns and McDonnell is an engineering and architectural consulting service located in Kansas City, Mo. The company was founded in 1898 by Clinton Burns and Robert McDonnell.

Rowing team to auction souvenirs

An official pen from the office of Kansas Sen. Bob Dole, a poster autographed by Gov. John Carlin and a hat from K-State President Duane Acker are among items to be auctioned by the K-State crew team from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Wednesday in front of the Union.

Auctioneers will be Bob and Bill Wilson of Wilson Realty. Proceeds from the auction will be used to support the crew during the 1984 season.

Among other items to be auctioned are an autographed football from Coach Jim Dickey and the football team; an autographed basketball from Coach Lynn Hickey and the women's basketball team; dinner for two with David Mugler, College of Agriculture Director of Resident Instruction; a racing oar; a stereo system and a door or window awning.

In case of rain, the auction will be held in the Union Courtyard.

'Jail Bail for Heart' planned

The Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity and the American Heart Association are planning to hold a "Jail Bail for Heart" to benefit the Heart Association's research and programs in Kansas.

Saturday, several law-abiding residents will be handcuffed and hauled off to a make-shift jail which will be constructed at Mr. K's Bar from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Those arrested must raise their predetermined bail before they are released.

Those to be arrested include: Gov. John Carlin and Karen Carlin, Manhattan Mayor Wanda Fately, County Clerk Wanda Coder, Head Football Coach Jim Dickey, K-State Provost Owen Koeppel, Student Body President Ken Heinz, area businessman Terry Ray and K-State Police Director, Art Stone.

Individuals may make donations toward the bail of those arrested.

Board reviews accusations of cheating

By KATHY BARTELLI
Staff Writer

Any student caught cheating at K-State can almost count on being dismissed from the University, said Hermann Donnert, professor of nuclear engineering and chairman of the Undergraduate Grievance Committee.

"Personally, I think cheating is a despicable act," he said. "I see to it whoever is accused gets a fair hearing, though."

Donnert said the form of punishment a student receives depends to some extent on the circumstances involved and what the student was cheating on.

"The instructor has the option of settling the matter between himself and the student," Donnert said. "If the cheating occurs during the semester, the instructor can give the student an F for the assignment or for the course."

If the student is caught cheating on a final exam, the instructor will give the student an F for the course, he said.

The instructor may not think that is a sufficient punishment, and he can go to the head of the department or the dean of the college.

"If the head of the department feels giving the student an F is adequate, he can try to talk the instructor into doing it," Donnert said. "The head of the department or the dean cannot tell an instructor to give the student an F in the course if the instructor isn't satisfied with that."

For any action beyond an F in the course, the case has to be brought before the Undergraduate Grievance Committee. The committee has five options available to it.

If the committee thinks an F in the course is sufficient, it can issue that punishment. It can also issue an oral or written reprimand.

Another alternative the committee has is to issue a letter of censure. The letter remains in the student's file permanently. It points out the circumstances of the case, documents what happened and states the act for which the student was found guilty.

Donnert said a letter of censure has been issued only once in his nine years on the committee.

"That letter was pretty damn nasty," he said. "I didn't feel it was commensurate with the offense, but the committee voted to issue the letter."

The committee also may vote to have the student suspended for a predetermined period of time, or it can invoke the most serious punishment of disciplinary dismissal.

If the student is suspended or dismissed, it goes on his transcript permanently.

When dismissed from the University, a student can reapply, but the application goes before the Undergraduate Grievance Committee.

Bush condemns presidential hopefuls

By The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — The Rev. Jesse Jackson said Monday he would lead a peace delegation to Nicaragua, as Vice President George Bush accused him and the other Democratic presidential hopefuls of failing to take a strong stand against the "disgusting disease" of anti-Semitism.

Jackson, Walter F. Mondale and Gary Hart crisscrossed Pennsylvania making last-minute pleas for votes in Tuesday's primary, in which 172 delegates will be at stake.

Polls indicated a close race between Hart and Mondale, although the latter was expected to come out ahead in the delegate count.

Bush gave the Democratic hopefuls a preview of the upcoming general election campaign Monday by condemning them for not speaking out more forcefully against comments made by one of Jackson's key supporters — Louis Farrakhan, a Black Muslim leader.

Mondale responded that the Republican vice president "ought to pick up the morning paper" because he had strongly condemned Farrakhan's statements. Hart said he spoke out on the issue last week.

Amid that furor, Jackson announced he is going to lead a "peace delegation" to Nicaragua late this month or early in May, because he said Americans must support the government there against the CIA-financed efforts to overthrow it.

In February, Jackson turned down an invitation to visit the country, saying the time was not right, but promising to go later.

Jackson said Sunday that he could not "muzzle a surrogate who wants to make a contribution."

In Pennsylvania, the Democratic candidates emphasized jobs.

On a five-city tour of the state, Mondale emphasized his record of fighting for jobs — from his support for federal aid to Chrysler corp. to his backing of a plan to keep the Wheeling-Pittsburgh steel plant open.

Hart told longshoremen at the docks in Philadelphia that protectionist legislation would hurt ports like theirs.

And he disputed Mondale's claim that the Chrysler bailout saved thousands of autoworkers' jobs.

In Pittsburgh, Jackson hoisted a sign saying "Reopen the plant. Rebuild the cities. Labor for Jackson" and walked a picket line with several hundred striking shipbuilders. Earlier, he said his "rainbow coalition" is the key to saving jobs.

Democrats designate district Hart coordinators

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Kansas Democrats are gearing up for Saturday's congressional district conventions and the Gary Hart for President campaign has named coordinators in each district to ensure those loyal to the Colorado senator attend and cast votes.

Kathleen Sebelius, leader of the Hart forces in Kansas, on Monday announced the selection of six coordinators: John Allen of Hays in the 1st District; Ray Menendez of Topeka in the 2nd District; Ed Peterson of Fairway in the 3rd District; Tino Monaldo of Hutchinson and Randy Rathbun of Wichita in the 4th District; and Jere White of Garnett in the 5th District.

"The coordinators will organize the Hart delegates and urge the other delegates to support Hart," Sebelius explained. "They will also help monitor the convention Saturday in their district."

"The flexibility of the system will allow almost anything to happen at the district conventions. That is why the district coordinator's role is essential."

The 764 delegates elected last month at 116 county caucuses will meet at the five congressional district conventions Saturday to elect 26 of Kansas' 44 delegates to the Democratic National Convention in July at San Francisco.

Officials project former Vice President Walter Mondale has claimed 18 of Kansas' 44 national delegates to Hart's 15. There are eight unpledged. That leaves just three still up in the air.

Seven of the state's national delegates must go to the Democratic National Convention in unpledged status and experts believe one more unpledged will be elected in the state's 1st District convention on Saturday.

Of the remaining 18 national delegates, 15 will be elected at the state convention May 12. The other three delegates are predetermined by the party of public position. They are Lehman, state chairwoman, state Vice Chairman Chuck Thompson and U.S. Rep. Dan Glickman.

the truck was underneath (the balcony). That was to prevent it (the balcony) from falling more than a couple feet," he said.

Other balconies at Jardine have been renovated without collapsing, Watson said.

"This (renovation) has been done before, and nothing like this has happened," he said.

Additional safety precautions are now being taken, Cross said.

"Shoring has been put underneath existing structures (balconies), so if there is another collapse no one will be hurt," he said.

"We don't anticipate this happening," he said. "We didn't anticipate this incident happening. They're putting shoring under the balconies so, if another would give way, no one would fall through."

There is no danger of balconies of occupied buildings collapsing, Cross said.

Building I was unoccupied at the time of the accident because of renovation work in process. Jardine residents do not have access to the buildings being renovated, Cross said.

"A balcony is either open or it is completely closed off," he said. "Even workmen are only on a part of it."

Better Homes and Gardens and shows very narrow thinking because, "no one really lives there."

Davis also said that while she is against the draft, she could not morally advocate not having her daughters participate if needed, a point with which Schlafly repeatedly disagreed.

Schlafly said history has shown men make better combat soldiers than women, and that's what the American people want.

If women want to be soldiers, she said, they have the same opportunity to go sign up, but they also have the right to be homemakers and raise families.

Schlafly ended by saying that advocates of the ERA will fail because they have and will be unable to show an advantage and tangible good of the ERA.

Schlafly's visit was sponsored by the Union Program Council's Issues and Ideas Committee.

pen: "The strategy behind the burn is hopefully this will give us a free ride."

When it left the launch pad on Friday, Challenger carried 1,488 pounds of nitrogen tetroxide and 930 pounds of hydrazine to power its small forward steering jets. An 880,000-mile chase to rendezvous with Solar Max and Sunday's failed attempt by George Nelson to lock on to the crippled sun-watching satellite left the shuttle with only 22 percent of the fuel. NASA rules set 3 percent as the minimum.

Nelson's effort to steady the Solar Max on Sunday set it turning like a top and raised fears it would be impossible to control.

But NASA engineers, racing the clock in an all-out effort, beamed a barrage of computer commands to stop Solar Max's gyrations. They succeeded, and mission control told the astronauts the satellite was rolling in only one direction at one-half degree a second, marking one revolution every 12 minutes.

The fuel shortage rules out Nelson flying out to the satellite. The shuttle would not have enough gas to rescue him if things went awry.

Crippen and pilot Dick Scobee will draw Challenger alongside the satellite and wait for a pin on Solar Max's side to come within reach of the shuttle arm. Astronaut Terry Hart must guide the arm to snatch it and lift it into a repair cradle in the cargo bay.

ERA debate fails to find solution

Yells. Boos. Accusations of communism. Applause and cheering. And afterward, both heated debate and rational discussion.

The forum Monday night featuring Phyllis Schlafly, a panel discussion and audience response was pierced by all of these reactions. The audience was vocal in expressing its approval or disapproval of comments by Schlafly and the four panelists.

Such reaction can be expected when the Equal Rights Amendment and nuclear war are discussed, but the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee was misguided in bringing Schlafly to speak in Forum Hall to incite such debate.

What was gained by Monday night's debate? Renewed interest and discussion of the ERA and nuclear war, along with reinforcement of bias and personal conviction.

What was not gained? A cooperative attempt to understand the positive points of each side and effect a workable solution to a cultural problem.

Sponsoring the Stop ERA leader and assembling a panel of anti-Schlafly activists only served to aggravate the antagonism between supporters and opponents of the ERA.

From her narrow conservatism, Schlafly failed to see the value of any of the panelists' arguments. Likewise, out of angry reaction, they neglected to perceive her points as valid concerns. As a result, only conflict ensued.

Continual lambasting will not sway one side to surrender. Constant attacks will only make opponents defensive and close-minded.

One member of the audience asked a member of the panel why, in effect, some compromise, some mutual agreement, could not be reached between opposing forces.

No workable solution could be offered. But the solution to the problem lies in changing ingrained cultural tradition and socializing our children equitably. Schlafly said drafting women contradicts our culture, but as several women at the debate testified, they felt an equal obligation to fight for their country. Our cultural expectations, therefore, must be changed to satisfy the need for equality of the sexes.

Trash provides poor livelihood

Last week the city of St. Louis amended an ordinance to permit scavengers to rummage through trash cans in residential areas "from dawn to dusk," according to the Kansas City Times. The ordinance, previously written to prohibit scavenging, was changed after several civic groups and concerned residents protested.

The Rev. Larry Rice, who operates three St. Louis centers for the homeless, said poor people rely on others' garbage primarily for food, but also eke out an existence from the salvage of aluminum cans. Rice said a persistent worker can earn $7 or $8 a day by collecting cola and beer cans for recycling.

St. Louis officials have made an effort to help the unfortunate in the city, but current public support can extend past the border of previously established "poor support" (trash cans).

The city has protected one means of livelihood for its poor, but additional action can be taken to help the homeless in St. Louis. The scavenging ordinance shows the need for more community reform to increase care and concern for the poor and should set an example not only in St. Louis, but in other cities as well.

Amateur athletics shouldn't exist

In rebuttal to Tom Fiegen's column, "College sports no longer amateur," in the April 5 Collegian, I would like to point out some shortcomings in his logic and some successes of college athletics.

Everyone knows there are some schools in this nation that have less than honorable morals, but let's not condemn college athletics because of a few misguided institutions.

Fiegen begins by chastising the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, saying "no starting player of the basketball team has graduated since the program's inception." I was unable to determine whether this is true or not. The university has graduated only 15 players in the past 10 years. I do not know if they started or not.

He said anyone can leaf through old issues of Sports Illustrated and find countless cases of violations. Well, I did, and in the Feb. 20 issue, I came across an article about UNLV. The article confirmed the graduation number of just 15, but also told another side to the story.

It seems Coach Jerry Tarkanian and his wife have financed a fifth year of education for some of his players, a very noble gesture. But recently the National Collegiate Athletic Association passed legislation permitting universities to pay for a fifth year if a student requires it, so now Tarkanian can keep his money.

Tarkanian's son, Danny, is one of the top point guards in the nation, averaging nearly 14 assists a game. Oh, by the way, he also earned a doctorate in human behavior from U.S. International, is an honor student in finance at UNLV and is a Rhodes Scholarship candidate.

His mother summed it up best when she said, "Can the program take credit for Danny being an honor student? Of course not. It's the value system in his home."

Just as the basketball program has no right to the credit, so should it have no right to the blame.

When John Thompson took over the basketball team at the University of Georgetown, he promised them a National Championship, which he delivered with a clap of thunder last week. In his quest, he has recruited 45 basketball players. Of those, 43

KEVIN DALE

have graduated.

One reason for this may be the presence of Mary Fenlon on the Hoya's bench. Fenlon is an academic counselor who keeps the student-athletes on the right track. More and more, schools are hiring academic counselors. UNLV has one, at the request of Tarkanian, and it will graduate three of the five seniors on the team this year.

Education and athletics do not have to be separated. It is ridiculous to change a four-year college program, which has been mastered by many athletes, to an eight-year program which Fiegen proposed.

If Fiegen is so education oriented, why does he put the four "athletic" years ahead of the education? How many athletes, at the age of 22 when their athletic years are over, are going to go to school for four more years to get an education? Very few, I would guess.

To Fiegen's revelation that amateur sports of 50 years ago are gone, I say good riddance.

College athletics were never meant to be amateur. They are most definitely big business. The athletes are the ones who are supposed to be amateur.

Amateur athletics is a concept that should be burned from the pages of our dictionaries. Returning to the amateur athletics of 50 years ago would be absurd. Fifty years ago or today, amateur athletics are riddled with corruption.

"Amateur" is defined as: "Any athlete who has not engaged in contest open to professional athletes, or used any athletic art as livelihood." That disqualifies almost every athlete in the world.

Surely the Eastern-bloc athletes, who are subsidized by their governments, do not qualify. American athletes, on the other hand, are not sponsored by the government. Do they qualify?

Hardly. Endorsements and consulting jobs all come because of the athletes' talent. Instead of being government sponsored, athletes are paid by big business. What's worse, athletes get paid "appearance" money just for showing up at the events. This is the same as in the 1860s when Albert Spalding became the first player to be given a job with the stipulation that he pitch for the "amateur" company baseball team.

Carl Lewis, probably the greatest track and field star since Jesse Owens, has somehow found the time to "earn" nearly $150,000 a year. For someone who is the best in the world in four different events, it seems strange that he could have a job that would pay so much and still be able to train for his events.

Lewis wears crushed velvet warm-up suits, drives a new BMW and lives in a $200,000 Victorian house in Houston. His appearance money is said to be $4,500 per meet. What is the difference between his lifestyle and that of a pro?

Amateur athletics are not the answer. Eight-year colleges are definitely not the answer.

The answer is ethics. The NCAA chases down the bad guys and spansks their bottoms, but the system is working. Fiegen's own brother is perfect evidence of this. He said his brother has flunked out of two schools. If the system did not work, his brother would have been allowed to play football even though his grades were poor.

The decision to learn rests with the athlete and must begin in the home. A coach can make sure, as Thompson, Tarkanian and many others have, that if the student is going to be on the team, he is going to learn.

Education and athletics can be juggled successfully. Many student-athletes feel their sport is just like a part-time job, and thousands of students juggle a job and schoolwork.

We don't need to fix something that ain't broke.

(Editor's note: Kevin Dale is a senior in journalism and mass communications.)

TV softens reality of violence

WASHINGTON — When I was a kid, I lived in a fantasy world or, to be more precise, a world in which my fantasies were different than they are now. Once, for instance, I wore my bathrobe as a cape, yelled, "Up, up and away!" and dove off the end of a bed. That was the day I learned it takes more than a cape to fly.

Another time, I was shooting baskets in the schoolyard when three tough-looking hombres demanded I turn over both the ball and the court. Having been schooled on television westerns, I gave them the schoolyard equivalent of smile-when-you-say-that-pardner, whereupon one of them punched me in the mouth. I went down thinking, "They lied. It hurts."

I recall those two episodes by way of rebutting Martha Bayles, who in a Wall Street Journal article defended the television program "The A Team" from what she thinks are hysterical attacks on its violence quotient. Siding with the networks in their running war with a group called the National Coalition Against Television Violence, Bayles writes, "...most people, including most children, can distinguish between reality and make-believe."

Since when? I cannot, of course, speak for Bayles who, even in childhood, evidently had both feet planted firmly on the ground. But my own childhood testifies to the fact that I believed what I saw in the movies or on television. It was not until I was older I realized you could really get hurt in a fight.

I am not suggesting children are always incapable of telling the difference between reality and fantasy.

RICHARD COHEN
Columnist

I am only suggesting that until reality teaches otherwise (as with an instructive punch to the mouth), there is no reason for a child to be skeptical. After all, television depicts both reality and unreality. The only way adults know the difference is by experience, precisely what children lack. That's why children are much more likely to attempt to jump a car a la the Dukes of Hazzard than is your average race car driver. He knows the stunt can wreck the car.

NBC-TV, the network responsible for "The A Team," distinguishes between violence and what it calls "action." To NBC, "action" is violence without blood — real fantasy violence. It is, though, what pornography is to sex — all too casual and without any moral, social or physical repercussions. The networks think airing "action" as opposed to violence makes them some sort of corporate Mother Theresa. They would better serve their young viewers, though, if they showed what someone's face really looked like after being punched in.

Television is the keyhole through which children see the adult world. And what they see is incredibly distorted. Violence, for instance, is commonplace; coercion and intimidation are routine. The only difference between the good guys and the bad guys is the good guys come back week after week — not because they are less violent, but because they employ violence for good rather than bad reasons. There is, for instance, no Fifth Amendment injunction against self-incrimination on television — no one telling Mr. T it's not nice to compel confessions by threatening force.

Even when it comes to television criticism, moderation is a virtue, and it's silly to argue that TV violence represents the end of civilization. But television's ability to persuade is well-known. Advertisers do not pay fortunes for television time thinking viewers do not believe what they see. If that is true for adults, it's certainly the case for children. A kid schooled on television "action" has to be forgiven for thinking a punch in the mouth is not tantamount to instant orthodontia.

Violence sells, and if it did not it would surely, like quality programming, be banished from the nation's airwaves. That, and not the alleged ability of children to tell reality from make-believe, is why it persists on television. The only TV executives who think otherwise are those who never were children. As for the rest, somewhere in their past is a failed Superman.

Up, up and away — with the ratings.

Recommendations require fair investigation

Editor,

Re: Kecia Stolfus' editorial, "Allocations benefit SGA leaders," in the April 9 Collegian:

Before judgments are made by anyone concerning the quality of the tentative allocations recommendations made by the Student Senate Finance Committee, or the motives of the student leaders involved, a fair investigation should be conducted.

Finance Committee looks into each group in detail, listens to the justifications and makes decisions based on the facts presented by the groups. Each budget is broken down into specific needs; one cannot look at the total figure recommended for each group and know anything about the reasons for increases or decreases.

For example, the increase in the recommendation for Student Government Association is due to an increase in the salary for the classified secretary — a seven percent increase requested by the governor for state employees. The increase for ASK will come from a reserve account and has no bearing on the money available for other groups. The overall figures are deceiving.

Student government is a learning experience. Senators do not allocate funds for their own benefit. The only people who believe this are those who are not involved, do not know the facts and are not willing to spend the time in search of those facts.

Student government has procedures that have been set up to aid in the allocation of the student activity fee, which include not funding political groups. If one exception is made, we will see requests from College Republicans, Young Democrats, Students for a Better America, etc. If you think this would be a good idea, please prepare yourself for a large increase in the student activity fee.

I will never advocate blind acceptance of any Finance Committee recommendation or senate decision. After two years of involvement in the allocation process, I realize there are extenuating circumstances and differences of opinion. Everyone has a right to stand by their principles. All I ask is that the senators be given that same courtesy. Until you have put in the amount of time that these students have, and have your facts in hand, please refrain from making unnecessary generalizations. If you are dissatisfied, why not look for viable ways to improve the system, instead of throwing baseless criticisms?

Allocations only tentative

Editor,

Re: Kecia Stolfus' editorial, "Allocations benefit SGA leaders," in the April 9 Collegian:

It should be noted that Student Senate has not begun the tentative allocation process. That process begins at 6 p.m. Tuesday. The figures Stolfus reported on are recommendations from the Finance Committee. No final allocation bill of recent memory has reflected exactly the recommendations of the Finance Committee.

Judging from the reaction of many student senators who are supporters of the Women's Resource Center, the Coalition for Human Rights and the Early Childhood Laboratory, senate will reach a compromise between the Finance Committee's recommendation and the original request. Students who are interested in speaking on these issues may do so during the open period at the beginning of the next five senate meetings.

Article underestimates LAR experience

Editor:

Re: Rhonda Wessel's story, "Little American Royal," in the April 2 Collegian:

As a freshman agriculture student, I too signed up and showed a bull in the LAR show. It was a wonderful, fun and exciting time! I made friends and now recognize at least 15 new faces as I roam the agricultural building halls. I met these people by helping and being helped by them in preparing my bull for the LAR.

Wessel did not point out that cattle, all living in the same environment, are very similar in disposition. The breed or sex of the bovine makes no noticeable difference in their ability to learn and be trained.

My main point in writing is to remind Wessel she was the champion beef showman and showed the champion 4-H steer at the Lyon County Fair just a few years ago. She had a lot more knowledge about training and grooming cattle than one of my new friends who showed a heifer for the first time in the LAR. My friend did quite well and learned a lot due to the fact that she worked with her heifer at least once every day. This taught her the responsibility involved in training an animal — a responsibility, I think, the author may have shirked, causing her problems.

I feel Wessel put the LAR down and failed to point out the purpose of it — building new friendships, teaching responsibility and having fun after a hard day of classes. The LAR is an experience everyone should have at least once! It is not a bone-breaking event with no available and willing helpers, as the author made it seem.

Poor take own trails in 'the other America'

By The Associated Press

EAST ORANGE, N.J. — Constance Clay was the baby in an Alabama family of 10 children when her sharecropper father left home almost 30 years ago. Her mother went on welfare.

When Clay had a baby 3½ years ago, she went on welfare, too. Clay is part of what some call "the underclass." If the rest of society is the mainstream, the underclass is the backwater.

Its members are hopeless and powerless. They believe nothing they do will make a difference in their lives, and nothing that happens in the larger world will change their small world.

Many in the underclass are black, but that doesn't make them different. People in the underclass do not or cannot work. They depend on the government for food, clothing and medical care.

Many are single mothers. A disproportionate number of their children become young street hoodlums and unwed teenage mothers eligible for welfare checks of their own. "The other America," some call them.

There are different definitions for the underclass. Lack of education and long-term welfare dependence are common characteristics. Poverty is the most common denominator.

There is no way of determining how many people are in the underclass. It is a fluid population. Some of the more than 3 million welfare mothers who are the heart of the underclass are able to find day care centers that allow them to get jobs.

The size of the underclass rises and falls with the economy. An estimated 34 million Americans now live below the official poverty level — an annual income of $9,862 for a family of four. (Many of those 34 million are not in the underclass. They include the elderly poor, the working poor, the temporarily unemployed, the physically handicapped and the chronically mentally ill.)

In his 1982 book, "The Underclass," Ken Auletta noted that different definitions put the size of the underclass at anywhere from 2 million to 18 million.

Some sociologists describe one of the most striking differences between the underclass and the rest of society as the shorter "time horizon." The rest of society marches to a daily routine framed by hours and minutes, making and keeping plans days, weeks and months in advance.

Constance Clay and her daughter, Shayla, live with Clay's sister's family in a neat two-story wood frame house near a park in East Orange.

When a visitor arrived a few minutes late for a 9 a.m. appointment, Clay murmured, "My, you're prompt." She asked for a few minutes to finish fixing her hair and suggested the visitor wait in the living room where the television was tuned to Phil Donahue.

Later, Clay said her mother, who died several years ago, had never been especially diligent about putting her children to bed at a certain time or getting them up and off to school in the morning.

"Time wasn't important," she recalled. "Some mornings we were lucky if we got up at all."

***

Wallace Cheatham and Jeffrey Malitz know something about people who do not fit into society. Cheatham is black, Malitz is white. They are New York City probation officers.

"The underclass is a group of people who live by a different code," Cheatham said. "They don't relate to the same things you do. They don't think the same way you do. They don't act the same way you do."

"There's no structure at all," Malitz said. "Say a kid is sent to a job. He doesn't realize the consequences of his behavior. He's late. So what? He's done it all his life, and it never mattered before."

With nowhere to go, nowhere to be, the television set and the streetcorner become the focal point of life. Many dream of something magic, of sudden recognition and respect, of having the things they see on television, maybe of getting on the Phil Donahue show themselves.

Even if they get into some training program, many underclass youths can't be instructed, Malitz said. They take it as a criticism, something they've never had to deal with. They become frustrated and quit.

"The only jobs that are available to most of them are running drugs and running numbers. It's easy. These are the role models they're exposed to at ages 11, 12, 13," Malitz said.

***

Yet some people do graduate from the underclass. They go to school, get jobs, raise families. All nine of Constance Clay's brothers and sisters did, and she thought she would, too.

She went through a series of training programs and jobs in the 1970s, including the Job Corps and CETA (Comprehensive Education and Training Act) projects. She lived and worked in Georgia, Oregon, New Jersey and Texas. She worked as a psychiatric aide in a hospital and had a variety of office jobs.

But she never stayed at any job for more than a year and a half.

Why do some people make it and others don't?

Clay took a long time to answer when asked why she was the only one in her family to end up on welfare.

"Well, we're all individuals," she said finally. "Things affect individuals differently."

***

Essentially, that's also why the experts say there is an underclass.

"It's part of the price we pay for an individualistic society," said Marcia Freedman, a professor at Columbia University's Conservation of Human Resources Project. She said black people are more likely to be part of the underclass for several reasons. For instance, while the number of single-parent families has increased dramatically for both whites and blacks, blacks suffer more economically.

'The underclass is a group of people who live by a different code. They don't relate to the same things you do. They don't think the same way you do. They don't act the same way you do.'

— Wallace Cheatham

"The weakness of the black family is relative to the market position of black men," she said. "Any problem that is suffered by the entire society is worse for blacks."

Further, she said, blacks most often live in segregated neighborhoods, and black teen-age girls — while perhaps no more likely to experiment with sex than white girls — are less likely to have abortions than white teens.

"If you have a group of people who are poor, isolated, reject abortion and have children, you have an underclass," said Freedman. "But they stand out largely because they are black."

Of course, no one openly aspires to be part of the underclass or admits to preference for life on welfare.

Quay Houchen, 28, grew up in a poor family in Harlem. She now works as an office supervisor in Manhattan. But many of her old girlfriends are welfare mothers. One of them has had three children by three men.

"As long as she's got her Heineken and her reefer, she's happy," Houchen said with obvious scorn. "Welfare breeds contentment."

John Moore, 60, who works in a Harlem health food store, said, "Many of us have lost our guidance in the last 20 years with all this free money. We're worse off now than we were in slavery."

Linda Williams, 23, an unmarried mother who followed her mother onto the welfare rolls in Boston, said she is taking typing classes in hopes of breaking the cycle. "I don't want my daughter to grow up on welfare, too. She'll have a much better life if I work, and so will I. I'm doing this for both of us."

Sue Dilts, 35, of Raubsville, Pa., a white mother of two teen-agers who has been on welfare since her divorce nine years ago, said it makes her furious when people sneer at her for being a freeloader. "Any time you want to trade places with me..."

Constance Clay said she would like to get off welfare, but she can't find a job that will cover the housing allowance, food stamps and free medical care she and her daughter now receive in benefits.

Clay attended classes at a local junior college, where she studied psychology. "I feel like I'm a very good judge of character; people gravitate toward me," she said. On one paper, she got an A for her ideas but a D on the structure of the essay.

"Discipline, that's what I lack," she said. "My family had no discipline."

Clay dropped out of school last year to form an organization of welfare mothers. She spends much of her days now going to libraries, reading and sometimes borrowing a typewriter.

She insists she is forming not another welfare rights group, but rather a self-help organization.

It is not really organized yet, though she has made several public appearances and had "rap sessions" with other welfare mothers. She hopes that merely by talking to her and discussing things among themselves, the other welfare mothers' lives will improve. She hopes to eventually charge membership fees that would pay her enough to get off welfare.

"I'm trying to intervene in generation after generation of welfare," she said. "I'm trying to help these mothers feel good about themselves, that there's nothing they can't do."

"A lot of them don't want to get involved in society. A lot of us don't care. Why should we care if we're not going to be allowed to contribute?"

Fonda takes stand by using unions

NEW YORK — Actress Jane Fonda, saying she is committed to fair wages and good working conditions, is using only unionized labor to make her line of exercise clothes. "Jane Fonda has been terrific, insisting from the start that she wanted her collection made in the United States and by unionized workers," International Ladies Garment Workers' Union President President Sol Chaiken said Monday. The 46-year-old actress said she chose New York-based Capri Beachwear to make the clothes because "their commitment to the ILGWU assures me that the workers involved will be protected in terms of fair salaries and a good working environment."

Violinist plays Spain's jails, bases

MADRID, Spain — Violinist Yehudi Menuhin played a concert for inmates at a women's prison Monday to start a week-long visit to Spain as a guest of King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia. Menuhin, president of the Live Music Now Association of London, plans to play military headquarters and prisons throughout Spain. The 68-year-old violinist will be honored in the southern Spanish city of Seville on Wednesday for his work in making music the language of peace around the world.

Real-life astronauts split on movie

NEW YORK — Four people with "The Right Stuff" — former astronauts John Glenn, Scott Carpenter, Gordon Cooper and Deke Slayton — were reunited Monday on the 25th anniversary of their selection as the nation's first spacemen. The four, guests on the CBS "Morning News" program, said that their training for Project Mercury was sometimes excruciating but often fun. But Slayton and Glenn said a 1983 movie made of "The Right Stuff," Tom Wolfe's book of their experiences, went a little too far. "I think the things that we were doing back in those days were dramatic enough without hoking them up with a lot of comedy routines," Glenn said. "I think it's going to leave the impression it's a documentary in many people's minds, and it's far from it," Slayton said. Carpenter, however, called the film "great entertainment."

Feds charge 31 in heroin bust

NEW YORK — Thirty-one people were charged Monday in a $1.65 billion heroin operation that U.S. Attorney General William French Smith termed the most significant such case involving organized crime ever uncovered by the federal government. Justice Department officials estimated the ring imported at least 330 pounds of heroin a year for the past five years — a total of at least 1,650 pounds with a street value of $1.65 billion. The charges were in a criminal complaint filed in U.S. District Court in Manhattan. They were announced at a news conference with Smith and FBI Director William Webster. Smith said "prosecutors cannot recall another case that documented so clearly...the international operations of a heroin ring and then uncovered...so firmly the national distribution of heroin within the United States."

Pope shuffles, redefines Vatican posts

By The Associated Press

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II named American Monsignor John P. Foley and an African cardinal to key Vatican posts on Monday as part of the biggest shuffle of the Roman Catholic Church's central administration in modern times. The pontiff also redefined several Vatican jobs, giving increased responsibility to the secretary of state, Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, and apparently downgrading one of the two jobs held by U.S. Archbishop Paul C. Marcinkus. "Nobody expected such a major reshuffle, although it was long overdue," said a Vatican official. "It appears that the pope is moving toward the concept of appointing heads of Vatican departments once every five years," said the official. As is customary at the Vatican, he spoke on condition he not be identified.

At present, Vatican officials serve without fixed terms, but a Vatican task force has recommended considering a fixed-term system. The pontiff promoted Foley of Philadelphia to the rank of archbishop and put him in charge of the Vatican's news operation as president of the Pontifical Commission for Social Communications. Foley, editor of the "Catholic Standard and Times" published by the archdiocese of Philadelphia, takes over from ailing Polish Archbishop Andrzej M. Deskur, who resigned and was named a consultant to the secretary of state. Vatican sources said Foley's appointment reflects the pontiff's desire to overhaul and modernize the Vatican's news operation, which has often been criticized by reporters. The pope also named Benin-born Cardinal Bernardin Gantin as prefect of the powerful Congregation for the Bishops, which screens and recommends to the pope candidates for archbishops and bishops. Vatican officials said it was the first time an African was given a top job in the curia or the church's central administration. The 51-year-old Gantin replaces Italian Cardinal Sebastiano Baggio. Marcinkus' name did not appear in the announcement. The native of Cicero, Ill., holds two jobs in the Vatican — president of the Vatican bank, which is embroiled in a major financial scandal in Italy, and acting president of the Vatican city-state administration. Marcinkus' post as acting president has traditionally been held by a cardinal and at the time of his appointment in September 1981, Vatican sources said he was in line to become a cardinal. However, a papal decree dated April 5 and released Monday indicated his job no longer was considered a cardinal's post, but that of an archbishop or bishop. He will assist a commission of cardinals headed by Cardinal Baggio, who until Sunday held the job given to Gantin. In addition, the decree said the pope was giving "a high and special mandate" to Casaroli in overseeing the affairs of the Vatican city-state. That means Marcinkus will now have two immediate superiors, instead of one, in the city-state job. Vatican sources stressed this would not necessarily prevent the pope from giving Marcinkus another assignment and naming him a cardinal. Marcinkus, reached by telephone, declined to make any statement. His bank position was not affected by the shuffle.

'Terms of Endearment' captures Oscar awards

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — "Terms of Endearment," the bittersweet story of a mother-daughter relationship over 30 years, was named best picture of 1983 Monday night at the 56th Academy Awards. Shirley MacLaine won as best actress for her role as the eccentric mother in "Terms," and Robert Duvall was voted best actor as the burned-out country singer who conquers alcoholism in "Tender Mercies." Jack Nicholson, the pot-bellied, womanizing ex-astronaut in "Terms," and Linda Hunt, the idealistic male dwarf photographer in "The Year of Living Dangerously," won Oscars for supporting performances Monday night. "Fanny & Alexander" and "The Right Stuff" each made strong showings with four early awards. "Terms," won best director and screenplay adaptation awards for James L. Brooks, who also produced the movie. It was his debut as a director. Shirley MacLaine, nominated four times previously but never a winner, was favored as best actress for her role in "Terms." Hunt, known mainly as a New York stage actress, was the first performer to win an acting award playing a character of the opposite sex. Her win was cheered by the audience, which had found little excitement in the first 90 minutes of the show. "Fanny & Alexander," which the great Swedish director Ingmar Bergman says will be his last movie, was honored as best foreign film. Sven Nykvist won the best cinematography award for his work on the film, a nostalgic look at the lives and loves of a large theatrical family through the eyes of a young child. The movie also won for costume design and art direction. "The Right Stuff," the critically praised box-office flop about America's first astronauts, picked up awards for sound effects editing, film editing, sound and original score. In the last three categories it was up against "Terms." Nicholson, who won the best actor award in 1975 for "One Flew Over

Third show highlights seniors' artwork

By DENISE WILLSON
Collegian Reporter

The third exhibit in a series of five this semester by senior candidates for bachelor of fine arts degrees is currently on display in McCain Auditorium, the Art Building and Deibler Gallery in East Stadium.

Lindsay Smith, whose emphasis is painting, will present his art works in Room 6 of the Art Building through April 13.

Smith will show 10 pieces, all acrylic paintings. Some of his pieces incorporate items such as fabric to create interest, he said.

He will show two triptychs, three separate pieces that make one arrangement, in his exhibit. Each piece of the triptych has its own character, Smith said, but it still helps form a whole.

His style of painting is classified as an abstract hard-edged style, a technique which employs use of lines. Smith works with geometric forms and shapes and began using this style 14 months ago.

Smith has shown his pieces in regional Kansas shows, an Illinois show, a scholarship show and three K-State Undergraduate Art Student Comprehensive shows, a judged show sponsored by Union National Bank.

He has constructed a portfolio of slides of his work to use in applying for graduate school.

"The work itself is what's (important), not the commercialism as in graphics," Smith said.

Kevin Bailey, whose emphasis is in ceramics, also is presenting sculpture in Room 6 of the Art Building, but the pieces are not being exhibited as a BFA requirement. His BFA exhibit is scheduled in Ambry Gallery April 16 through 30. Bailey is taking this opportunity to show with Smith because he felt he had more work that was worth showing, he said.

James Tharp, whose emphasis is in painting, will present his art works in Deibler Gallery through April 13.

Tharp will present nine pieces in his show: two drawings and assorted paintings in oil, acrylic and airbrush.

Some of his pieces exhibit photorealism and others show freehand landscape. One airbrush of a freehand landscape will be included in the BFA exhibit. Tharp will also include in his exhibit a photorealistic piece of a solo skier, which was a contract assignment for him.

Five seniors will present their work in McCain Auditorium through April 16.

Tom Laisure will present seven hanging pieces and five sculptures in his exhibit. The hanging pieces include three airbrush works; one drawing and pencil oil wash; a mixed media using pencil, airbrush and oil washes; and a painting. He also will show two ceramic pieces and one work in copper.

An airbrush design of a soup ladle Laisure will present has been shown in the recent student comprehensive show.

Laisure is putting a lot of color in his show, he said, and is including more fine art than graphics.

He said the exhibit is a good chance to show off the pieces, such as sculptures and illustrations, that won't be included in his job portfolio.

Andrea Smallwood will show eight to 10 pieces in her exhibit. She too will take this opportunity to show pieces that she will not include in her portfolio.

Smallwood will exhibit drawings, a silkscreen, airbrush designs and graphics. She also will show a logo and a brochure cover.

Janetta Wells will present eight or nine pieces in her exhibit, including one lithograph, two airbrush pieces, one marble print and several graphics. She has been working on these pieces since her junior year.

Her airbrush pieces were displayed last week at the Union. The lithograph was in the 1983 student comprehensive.

Kevin Knight will present nine pieces in his exhibit.

His showing will consist of two lithographs, two airbrushes, two drawings, two photographs and a felt marker piece of a fashionable woman.

James King will present three drawings, four or five airbrush graphic illustrations and pieces of production camera work. This technique involves making a black-and-white design with pen and ink, and photographing it with a production camera. This process cleans and improves the design, King said.

Students defeat bills to raise drinking age

By The College Press Service

Repeating their performance of a year ago, student groups were instrumental in recent weeks in defeating bills that would have raised the legal drinking age in Georgia and Washington, D.C.

Iowa also has just rejected two attempts to introduce drinking age legislation, though student groups there were not as significantly involved in the lobbying against the bill, said Bob Bingaman, director of the State Student Association in Washington, who has helped organize student opposition to drinking age bills in several of states.

But many state legislatures that have not finished their spring sessions are still weighing laws that would either raise the legal drinking age or limit 18-year-olds to buying wine or beer.

"Drinking age is still a hot issue, and probably will be for a while," said Michele Glastetter, who tracks drinking laws for the National Conference on State Legislatures.

There are still bills in quite a few states proposing to raise their drinking age," she said.

Twenty-six states have raised their legal drinking limits since 1976. At least a dozen states — including South Carolina, Alabama, Vermont, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Tennessee, South Dakota, Hawaii, Kansas, Mississippi and Virginia — have bills pending to hike the minimum age, Glastetter said.

"We thought this year it would be a relatively dead issue," Bingaman said.

Bingaman said his campaigns against raising the minimum drinking age argue that better education and tougher drunk driving laws are more effective solutions to alcohol abuse than prohibition.

"I think many students are duped into thinking that raising the drinking age is a sort of panacea for all the traffic accidents and other problems associated with alcohol abuse," Bingaman said.

While Bingaman organizes students opposed to drinking age increases, Students Against Drunk Driving has established chapters on several campuses to lobby in favor of raising the minimum age.

Jury indicts ex-Army officer on spy charges

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A federal grand jury indicted a former Army counterintelligence officer Monday on charges of selling the Soviet Union information about six U.S. double agent operations aimed at penetrating the Soviet KGB spy agency.

The grand jury said he was paid $11,000 for the information and was offered an additional $100,000 to $150,000 for further information, but left unstated whether he provided any more. Government sources, who declined to be named, said, however, that they did not believe he had done so.

The five-count indictment was returned in U.S. District Court in suburban Alexandria, Va., against Richard Craig Smith, 40, of Bellevue, Wash., who was arrested by the FBI at Dulles International Airport near here Wednesday.

The indictment added considerable detail to the information available from the FBI's application for an arrest warrant, and alleged that Smith compromised more secret U.S. spy operations than the government had acknowledged last week.

He was charged with one count of conspiring with KGB agent Victor I. Okunev, stationed in Japan, to transmit national defense information and four counts of actually transmitting national defense or secret information to a Soviet intelligence agent. Three of the charges carry a top penalty of life in prison and two are punishable by up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine each.

K-State Basketball Coach Jack Hartman, who was recently named president of the National Association of Basketball Coaches, said he would like the NABC to examine U.S. basketball participation in the Pan American Games. Hartman was coach of the U.S. team last year.

Hartman appointment asset to cage program

By TIM FILBY
Staff Writer

Jack Hartman, K-State head basketball coach, added another honor to his successful career last week when he was named president of the National Association of Basketball Coaches.

Hartman will serve a one-year term as president of the NABC.

The organization's board of directors screened a list of nominees of coaches from Division I, II and III schools. According to Hartman, the board selects a coach who it believes will best represent the association and has gained a measure of respect from his peers.

"It's a tremendous honor, no question about it," Hartman said. "Anybody who gains a role like that in their profession would have to be pleased."

As president, Hartman said he will preside over NABC meetings, which convene three times a year.

"Our meetings will pertain to basketball and what needs to be done to improve the game," Hartman said. "The meetings will go over all facets of the game in general."

Hartman said the NABC is not a policy-making body, but suggests ideas to the National Collegiate Athletic Association that, if initiated, may help the game.

Hartman said his appointment will be an asset to the University as well as the Wildcat basketball program.

"I'm of the thinking that anything that puts our name in front of the public in a positive way is good for all of us at K-State," he said.

"Whenever a person gains a position such as this, whether in the athletic department or in departments throughout the University, it helps K-State positively in all aspects."

Hartman said several issues will be addressed during his term as president. One area the association might examine is U.S. basketball participation in the Pan American Games.

Last year Hartman was named the head coach of the U.S. basketball squad in the Pan American Games, leading the team to a gold medal.

"It's just an opinion of mine, but I feel that there is not enough to gain and too much to lose by competing in the Pan Am Games," Hartman said.

"There are other ways we can promote Pan American relations without the expense and aggravation of participating in the games."

"From the standpoint of gaining international experience, the games are not that important," Hartman said. "And what if we lose? It would be like an earthquake in this country. There was a group of media sent down to Caracas which was there to write a story only if we lost. I'm glad we disappointed them."

Hartman's selection as NABC president was the latest in a line of accolades. He has twice been named national coach of the year. In 1967 Hartman was named Coach-of-the-Year by Sporting News after leading his Southern Illinois University team to the championship of the National Invitational Tournament, and in 1981 Hartman was tabbed Coach-of-the-Year by the National Association of Basketball Coaches after leading K-State to the final eight in the NCAA tournament.

Soccer team opens year with fast start

By TIM FILBY
Staff Writer

Opening the defense of its Big Eight Conference championship, the K-State soccer team has found Lawrence a good home away from home, winning three games.

The team opened its spring season March 31 by defeating the University of Kansas. Saturday and Sunday the Wildcats increased their record to 3-0 by gaining a berth in the semifinals of a tournament hosted by KU, with wins over Wichita State University and Ottawa University.

"I'm very optimistic of our chances this season," said John Caston, K-State player and coach. "We've played really well as a team, and I think we're a really solid club right now."

In the Jayhawk tournament, K-State played well in ousting Wichita State, 5-4, and Ottawa, 4-1.

"We were really hustling and playing well as a team," Caston said. "A couple of times we relaxed a bit and they would score on us, but most of our mistakes were just little mental errors — nothing we can't work on."

Against the Shockers the team was helped by a five-goal performance by Kevin Umidon.

"Kevin was always in the right place at the right time, it was incredible," Caston said. "A couple of times he played off the defensive mistakes, and he created his own opportunities on the others. It was definitely his day."

K-State raced out to a 3-1 halftime advantage, using three Umidon tallies. In the second half, the team jumped out to a 5-2 lead, but was forced to fight off a Shocker comeback in the final minutes of play.

"We let them score on dead ball plays late," Caston said. "If they came on the attack, we held them off pretty well, but they got a couple of chances toward the end."

Against Ottawa, K-State used two goals by Andy Clayton and one each from Krusen and Umidon to pick up the 4-1 victory. Meanwhile, Wildcat goalkeeper Akram Al-Ani allowed only a single score on the defensive end.

"Ottawa has a fairly strong team," Caston said. "We just hustled a lot and created opportunities."

This weekend the team will finish the KU tournament since competition was stopped due to rain last weekend. K-State will meet the host Jayhawks in the semifinals, while Wichita State faces University of Missouri-Kansas City in the other match-up.

Caston said he was happy with his teams earlier 3-1 victory over the Jayhawks.

"We played really well considering our lack of playing time outdoors," he said. "That was our first game, and we looked pretty good."

The team was paced by the two-goal performance of forward Kurt Krusen, while Caston also added a goal for K-State.

Caston's goal came on a breakaway opportunity and gave his team a 1-0 lead. Krusen then scored his first goal to put K-State in front, 2-0.

A KU goal off a Wildcat defensive lapse made the score 2-1, but Krusen's second goal gave his team a 3-1 halftime advantage.

The second half was a defensive struggle.

"The game could have been a little more lopsided if we had hit a few more of our second half chances," Caston said. "We were missing a few of our veteran players, so we were lacking a little experience."

Racquetball tournament deadline today

The deadline for entering the Cottonwood Racquetball Tournament has been extended to today. The brackets are for singles competition in men's B and C and women's B and C.

Entry blanks are available at the Cottonwood Racquetball Club, the L.P. Washburn Recreational Complex and Ballard's Sporting Goods.

Rugby club earns trip to playoffs

The K-State Rugby Club earned a trip to the national collegiate playoffs by taking first in a round-robin tournament at Lawrence on Saturday.

Three different players scored tries in K-State's 24-7 opening win against Northeast Missouri State University.

Bill Knopick opened K-State's scoring with a penalty kick. Kelly Cohan scored a try, followed by another Knopick penalty kick. Dan Blea and Mark Mikinski also scored tries for K-State. Knopick added the extra point after each try.

K-State topped the University of Kansas, 11-4, in its second game. Jeff Brunner scored with a penalty kick, and Cohan tallied two tries for K-State.

The second game was played in a driving rain that left an inch of water on the KU Rugby Field.

Men's golf team takes first

The K-State men's golf team finished first Friday at the Bethany Invitational at Salina's Municipal Golf Course.

The Wildcats' team score of 302 was good enough to top the other eight teams in the 28-hole tourney.

The pair of victories made the K-State team the Heart of America Union Champions of the Collegiate Side.

K-State will next travel to Boulder, Colo., April 21 for the national playoffs.

Robert Sedorek finished first with a 71 and Allen French took second with a 73.

The men are next scheduled to compete Thursday and Friday at the Crossroads of America Tournament at Joplin, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.— Shortstop U.L. Washington, who lost his starting job with the Kansas City Royals during spring training, plans to sit on the bench quietly when he comes off the disabled list Wednesday.

But he may not be quiet for long. "If it gets to the point where I don't get to play for a while, I may ask for a trade," said Washington, who was put on the disabled list at the start of the season with an inflamed tendon in his ankle.

"No sense making any waves now," he said. "If I can't start, I'll just do what I can to help the team win."

Washington continued his slump of last season during spring training while Manager Dick Howser couldn't ignore Onix Concepcion's hot bat. Washington's spring made it hard to ignore his 1983 season when he led American League shortstops with 36 errors and batted just .236.

He knows the Royals unsuccessfully tried to trade him to Seattle and Oakland in the off-season.

"They got to see if the guy can handle the job before they get rid of me," Washington said. "They've been deep at shortstop for a couple years. They knew they had Onix. After the year I had last year, I guess they've decided to give Onix a chance."

"They are looking for a little more offense. That might be the reason he has the edge now."

Washington may have the edge on Concepcion defensively.

"I believe I'm quicker — longer arms, a little faster," he said. "I can probably get to more balls. I watch the games real close. I more or less compare myself."

Concepcion unseated Washington in 1982, but Washington regained his job. Concepcion has struggled to a .182 average so far this year with four hits in 22 at bats.

"When I come off the DL will be the only time I'll know if I'm a starter or not," Washington said. "Dick (Howser) just said they were putting me on the DL. I just have to wait and see."

"I wouldn't want to get into a utility role," the 30-year-old shortstop said.

Senate moves to end CIA aid to Nicaragua

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate approved a non-binding resolution Tuesday, 84-12, calling for an end to the use of CIA funds to assist in the mining of Nicaraguan ports.

The Republican leadership agreed to support the measure in return for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's agreement to defer a companion proposal demanding that the administration reverse its decision to remove its Central American policies from World Court jurisdiction for two years. Nicaragua has appealed the mining issue to the World Court.

Republican sources said Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., outlined the compromise at a closed-door meeting before the vote.

"The White House sent word it would have no problem if this passed," one source close to the GOP leadership said.

"I think they want to liquidate the political damage," Sen. Larry Pressler, R-S.D., said. "The thing is not working, so they want to get it over with."

Pressler voted for the compromise, although he said, "The administration has left us who supported the administration package (of aid to El Salvador and Nicaraguan guerrillas) in a difficult position."

As part of the agreement, Baker agreed to vote for the Kennedy resolution on mining and Kennedy agreed to put off the matter of the World Court action until after a 10-day congressional Easter recess that starts Friday.

Although his resolution merely expresses the "sense of Congress," Kennedy told reporters after the vote, "I am confident the mining is going to stop."

Baker said that if Central American developments during the recess warranted further congressional action, he would confer with Kennedy and others to work out procedures for taking the appropriate steps.

A week ago the Senate rejected by a 61-30 vote a move by Kennedy to kill an administration request for $21 million in aid to anti-government guerrillas in Nicaragua.

The resolution adopted by the Senate reads: "It is the sense of Congress that no funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated in any act of Congress shall be obligated or expended for the purpose of planning, executing or supporting the mining of the ports or territorial waters of Nicaragua."

Its adoption made it part of a pending tax bill, which if passed would be sent to the Democrat-controlled House for action.

Last week's vote in the Senate was taken before most members of Congress had heard that the CIA was assisting in the mining of Nicaraguan waters, a move reportedly intended to disrupt arms shipments by the leftist Nicaraguan government to insurgents in El Salvador.

Mondale gains momentum in Pennsylvania primary win

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Walter F. Mondale easily won the Pennsylvania primary Tuesday, defeating a fading Gary Hart and rolling past the halfway mark in his quest for the delegates needed to capture the Democratic presidential nomination.

Mondale called it a "major step forward" and said he had established new momentum. Hart, putting forth an optimistic face as he arrived in his hometown of Denver, told supporters, "We are headed into our territory, folks."

With 77 percent of the vote in, Mondale had 46 percent of the vote to 34 percent for Hart.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson was winning Philadelphia — "with a poor campaign and a rich message," he said — and had 19 percent statewide. He sought a strong third-place finish statewide to impress the party's establishment with his ability to register thousands of black voters and then win their votes.

Hart's remarkable winter surge thus ended with a springtime thud; after sweeping New England and claiming several victories elsewhere, he has lost Illinois, New York and now Pennsylvania — key states in the Democratic industrial belt. Tuesday, Mondale even cut into Hart's previously solid support among Yuppies — Young, Urban Professionals.

A total 172 Pennsylvania delegates was being apportioned. Mondale led for 125, Hart 18. Jackson had none, but the Philadelphia count was put off to Wednesday. Four were uncommitted and John Glenn supporters claimed one spot.

Mondale thus passed the half-way point in his quest for the 1,967 delegates needed for nomination in July. He claimed or led for 1,036.8 delegates, compared with 576 for Hart and 151.2 for Jackson.

Mondale claimed victory and said, "I'm encouraged to believe that what I have been saying about where I want to take the country, the differences as the public perceives them, is helping me gain momentum toward the nomination" and victory over President Reagan in November.

"Something powerful is happening," Mondale said. "The feeling that is beginning to spread across the country is that we need a change in Washington. We came from behind and today we won big and I feel good about it."

Hart said he would do better as the election calendar turns west, and before the sun set Tuesday he was testing a new voter appeal in Ohio.

Hart said where Mondale had strong labor support in the industrial states, the union connection would prove a disadvantage in the Western states to come. "Those states are much more favorable to us," said Hart, citing Texas, Oregon and California among others.

"Tonight, we may not have won in Pennsylvania, but we are going to win the nomination of this party — and we are going to win the presidency," he said.

The returns, from 77 percent of the state's precincts, were:

Mondale, 555,234 or 46 percent.

Hart, 406,320, 34 percent.

Jackson, 227,471, 19 percent.

Minor candidates shared the remainder of the vote with several Democratic dropouts.

And while Hart had been emphasizing in campaign speeches that he was the more likely candidate to defeat President Reagan in November, respondents in the NBC News poll picked Mondale as the stronger candidate against Reagan by a 2-1 ratio.

With no primary elections and just four caucuses coming up in the next three weeks, the former vice president looked back at the first half of the primary season and said, before the polls closed here, "I win some; he wins some. We have a long fight ahead of us."

At stake were 172 Pennsylvania delegates, including 117 elected in contests separate from the presidential preference balloting. The other 55 were being allocated in proportion to the delegate election results.

Faculty Senate backs tenure policy

By KARLA PORTER
Staff Writer

Faculty Senate unanimously endorsed on Tuesday a document which provides for discontinuation of programs as a way to fire tenured faculty members.

Endorsement of the final Program Discontinuance Document came after two years of review and revision of the policy. The policy resulted from a 1982 Kansas Board of Regents decision to make program discontinuance a method for removing tenured faculty members.

Some question was raised about a provision in the policy which states that a tenured faculty member terminated by one college or department should be reassigned to another, more compatible department.

Charles Bissey, professor of architectural engineering, said faculty in that college were concerned about a possible loss of credibility if the College of Engineering "absorbed" less-qualified faculty.

"As it (the document) is written, it's more toward the party who is departing, and not toward the department or college who is going to be receiving the people," he said.

Charles Reagan, head of the Department of Philosophy, said the document's stipulation that a reassignment must be mutually agreed upon would prevent a college from having an unqualified faculty member "foisted off" on it.

Sandy Coyner, director of Women's Studies, asked about apparent discrimination against "tenure-track" faculty — faculty members who have not yet been granted tenure.

Coyner said the policy's provision for sabbaticals as a method of retraining tenured faculty should be extended to non-tenured faculty. She also said the policy should consider people who came to K-State expecting to be granted "administrative tenure," which was prohibited in 1982.

"The commitment was made, and that is in the faculty handbook, for this group of people who were hired and then sorely disappointed: 'The University will make every effort to place them...in another suitable position,'" she said. "Every effort" should include the use of sabbaticals, she said.

The distinction between personnel classes was defended by Eugene Friedmann, head of the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work, who said the intent of the policy is to show a commitment to tenured faculty.

In other action, the senate also approved changes in the faculty handbook, including the addition of the University's new sexual harassment policy.

Shuttle crew plans repair of satellite

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Shouting "we got it," Challenger's astronauts plucked the costly Solar Max satellite from space Tuesday and set it in the shuttle's cargo bay for an overhaul in orbit that ushers in an era of spacecraft salvage.

Dramatic as it was, the job won't be complete until two astronauts venture into the open cargo bay Wednesday to repair the satellite, which was sent into orbit in 1980 to study the sun.

Challenger was 300 miles above the Indian Ocean when mission specialist Terry Hart extended the shuttle's cargo crane and caught a pin on the side of the slowly spinning satellite.

He snagged it on the first try, saving a mission that looked like a failure only two days earlier when astronaut George Nelson flew himself over to it but was unable to dock with it.

UDAG error totals $700,000

City reviews faulty contract

By WAYNE PRICE
Staff Writer

Attorneys for the Department of Housing and Urban Development say it would be in the best interest of the city of Manhattan to sign an erroneous contract in order to secure funds from an Urban Development Action Grant.

Community Development Director Gary Stith, who recently returned from a meeting with HUD attorneys last week in Washington, told Manhattan City Commissioners at a work session Tuesday that the current UDAG contract has an error of about $700,000 regarding the acquisition of land and temporary interest notes.

That amount, Stith said, was the estimated interest on a temporary note.

UDAG funding, according to the Office of Management and Budget, does not cover land acquisition including temporary funding.

"I was a little shocked myself to find that that was a limitation to the use of the UDAG funds," Stith said. He said he was advised by HUD to sign the current agreement, then send amendments to the agency later. Stith said he plans to use other funding sources to cover the $700,000 cost and to use that portion of the UDAG in some other area.

"I'm sure it will work," Stith said. "I don't anticipate that being a problem."

While it is rare, if a contract is not signed when funding is to be allocated, the city risks losing its UDAG contract, Stith said.

"It has only happened once, but they have taken money back," Stith said. "So they recommend we go ahead and sign this contract, and then we submit later on the amendments. They don't force any problem with the amendments being approved."

City Manager Don Harmon agreed with HUD's proposal.

"We want to get to the point where this document is signed and in the hands of the secretary (of HUD)," Harmon said. "And I would like to see a contract date no later than May 1."

Commissioner Suzanne Lindamood said she is worried about the implications of signing a contract that has an error and can't be completely fulfilled.

Harmon said careful reading of the contract indicates no funding will be received until the contract is correct.

Commissioners also discussed the supplemental agreement they have with Forest City Enterprises, the firm in charge of downtown redevelopment.

One of the main changes was the extension of an agreement date between the city and Forest City.

According to the contract, Stith said, the city will not begin the acquisition of property for the downtown mall until Forest City gives the city notice that it has entered into a firm and binding contract with two department stores and has commitments of financing for the mall.

If these conditions are not met by Dec. 10, the contract with Forest City will be terminated unless granted an extension by the city. At the March 21 commission meeting, Forest City was given 45 days to work out an agreement.

ASK merits funding raise in first senate allocations

By MIKE TURNER
Government Editor

Student Senate raised the full-time equivalency funding for the Associated Students of Kansas from 40 cents to 50 cents in its first tentative allocations meeting Tuesday.

The new level of funding means ASK will receive 50 cents for every full-time student at K-State. However, the additional 10 cent funding will not come from current funds available for other groups, said Kirk Porteous, Finance Committee chairman and senior in radio and television.

Finance Committee recommended the approximate $3,000 additional funding to come from Reserves for Maintenance of Standing Programs, which contains slightly more than $8,300. But future funding of the student lobbying organization may mean senate will have to take money currently available for other groups, Porteous said.

He said representatives from all schools represented by ASK met to discuss an appropriate level of funding for the organization. Other schools favored a larger increase for the group.

"If not for K-State, the recommendation would be at a dollar," Porteous said. The representatives eventually compromised at 50 cents, he said.

Mark Tallman, executive director of ASK, said the lobby group tries to represent student organizations before legislative bodies, researches a range of student issues and offers several services to students. For example, ASK sponsors voter registration drives and informs students about how to be more aware and involved politically, he said.

When asked what effect ASK has had on the effort to increase the legal drinking age in Kansas, Tallman said, "My feelings are that if not for ASK, the drinking age would already be at 21."

Four professors receive grant

A grant of $16,000 from the Halliburton Education Foundation has been awarded to four engineering faculty members.

Robert Gorton, professor of mechanical engineering; James Koelliker, associate professor of civil engineering; Harry Manges, professor of agricultural engineering; and Muthuraj Vaithianathan, assistant professor of industrial engineering will share the grant. The funds will be used to expand their teaching and research capabilities.

The Halliburton faculty grant has been awarded annually to the College of Engineering since 1976.

Mathematician to present lecture

The president of the Mathematics Association of America, one of two professional organizations in this country for mathematicians, will make two presentations at K-State Thursday.

Ivan Niven, professor of mathematics at the University of Oregon, will conduct a colloquium on "Surprising Results in Elementary Mathematics" at 2:30 p.m. Thursday in Cardwell Hall.

He also will be the speaker for the second Friends of Mathematics Lecture and Awards Banquet, to be held Thursday in the Union. His evening topic is "Some Observations and Notations and Matrices."

German literature expert to speak

An expert on German literature of the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries, as well as French and German literary theory and aesthetics and feminist criticism, will speak Thursday.

Rainer Nagele, professor at John Hopkins University, will speak on "Kafka's Parables and the Interpretive Desire" at 3:30 p.m. in the Union. The public is invited.

Nagele's appearance is sponsored by the Departments of English, Modern Languages and Philosophy, with the support of the K-State Guest Scholar Committee.

Nagele is author of four books and is a contributing editor of "New German Critique," a leading journal in German studies devoted to experimental, feminist and politically-oriented literature. At John Hopkins he also edits the German issue of "Modern Language Notes."

Upward Bound leaders to meet

The first Upward Bound Legislative Leadership Day will be held on campus Saturday.

Approximately 100 Upward Bound students and sponsors are expected from Upward Bound projects at Emporia State University, Creighton University, Wichita State University, St. Louis University and K-State.

The event is being sponsored by the local chapter of the Mid-America Association of Education Opportunity Program Personnel, an association founded to ensure excellence and equity in education for all people.

The purpose of the day is to provide a simulated legislative experience for students in which they can learn more about the legislative process. Students will be divided into three committees — education, judiciary and defense/armies services — and each committee will be expected to draft a bill that it will introduce to the General Assembly at the end of the day.

Special invited guests include Manhattan Mayor Wanda Fately, state representative Joe Knopp and a former Upward Bound student, Patrick Miller, who will serve as Speaker of the General Assembly.

A Congressional Ball will conclude the day.

The Black Student Union will sponsor the Congressional Ball. Additional local assistance has been received from the Office of Minority Affairs, the Center for Student Development, Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan (MEChA), and the Puerto Rican Student Organization.

Weinberger urges support for military buildup

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said Tuesday the latest Pentagon report shows the Soviet Union continues to build a war machine aimed at "world domination."

A chief goal of the third annual report on the Soviet military is to bolster flagging support for the Reagan administration's record five-year defense buildup.

The U.S. buildup, which will be in its fourth year in fiscal 1985, has run into increasing fire on Capitol Hill.

Members of Congress worried about growing federal deficits want to trim the administration's proposal for $305 billion — a 13 percent boost — in authorized defense spending after inflation for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

Last week, the House passed a budget resolution calling for a 3.5 percent hike in defense authorization. Senate Republicans have agreed to limit the increase to 8 percent.

Weinberger said at a news conference the Soviet Union's military effort means "we have to make very large and clearly unwelcome efforts" to build up U.S. and NATO defenses.

The Pentagon distributed 325,000 copies of its 1983 report and hopes to pass out even more of the latest edition in the United States and Europe, Weinberger said.

The report shows that "quantitatively we're behind in a large number of very important categories," Weinberger said.

The Soviets are testing two new strategic intercontinental ballistic missiles, the SSX-24 and the SSX-25, the publication said. It added that "there are no security requirements for the development of so large a quantity of strategic offensive weapons."

The United States is currently planning to deploy long-range MX nuclear ICBMs starting in 1986 and is currently trying to develop a second new ICBM, dubbed "Midgetman," for deployment later.

Other developments cited in the Pentagon report include:

— The Soviets are nearing deployment of three types of cruise missiles — low-flying, winged craft which the United States has already put on some long-range B-52 bombers.

— The Soviets last year laid the keel for their first large aircraft carrier, a nuclear-powered vessel which will be about 60,000 tons and will be able to handle carrier-based jets and bombers. The U.S. Navy now has 13 aircraft carriers and is building two more, each of which will be more than 90,000 tons.

— The Soviets also deployed their second Typhoon-class missile-firing submarine last year. The Typhoon is larger than the American Trident subs, five of which are now in the U.S. fleet.

— Last year, the Soviets also built the first ships in two new classes of attack subs, known as "Mike" and "Sierra." That gives the Soviets eight different types of attack subs compared to only one class of attack boat for the United States.

— Soviet military space efforts have included a laser site at Sary Shagan, which would give the Soviets a prototype anti-satellite weapon by late in this decade, according to the report.

What happens to the money paid into the K-State Police Department for traffic violations?

The fines paid for traffic (moving) violations go to the Riley County District Court. The money paid for parking violations is used for the development, maintenance, repair and upkeep of parking lots on campus. These fees, along with the sale of parking permits, are the only source of funds for this purpose.

Is there anywhere on campus I can go to get help finding a summer job?

Gail Zeller, of the Career Planning and Placement Center, said the center's primary focus is helping a student find a summer job related to his major. Files are kept according to major, listing employment opportunities throughout the United States. The center will help the student identify firms of interest to him, types of jobs and will also help develop cover letters, resumes and interview skills.

The best sources of information on employment opportunities in Manhattan are the job board in the Union, local advertisements and personal contacts with businesses in Manhattan.

The center is located in Holtz Hall and the telephone number is 532-6506.

Finance committee lacks faculty representative

By TIM FILBY
Staff Writer

It's that time of the year when the Student Senate Finance Committee tries to decide which slices of the funding pie go where. But this year, the committee is operating without a faculty representative, which is a change from the past.

"Having a faculty representative gives us another perspective," said Lori Leu, senior in social sciences and former senate chairman. "The time we need the representative most is during (tentative) allocations, so that we can have that extra hand in the decision-making process."

The senate, as well as the Finance Committee, usually has faculty representatives. George Wilcoxon, professor of history, had filled one of the two faculty representative positions on Student Senate for more than 20 years, and also was the Finance Committee representative for that time period, Leu said.

After Wilcoxon resigned his position this year, Leu said she split the position of senate and Finance Committee representative into two positions. She then contacted a list of 12 faculty members who would be suitable for the job. However, all declined a place on the committee.

"It's a time commitment," Leu said. "A lot of people have the knowledge to do the job, but they have that knowledge from being involved in other areas, so their time is short."

Without a faculty representative, advice for the committee comes from students and either Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for student affairs, or Chet Peters, vice president for student affairs. Leu said as long as it receives that input, the committee is not hampered by the lack of a faculty representative.

"We (the students) are never alone in the decision-making process," she said. "As long as we have someone from student affairs, we will have someone that has experience with the University."

Kirk Porteous, Finance Committee chairman and junior in radio and television, also said he feels the absence of a faculty representative does not affect the committee's work.

"All we need is a historical perspective on our decision process, and we get that from Chet Peters and Pat Bosco," he said. "Chet Peters is at almost every meeting and has been involved with the University for more than 30 years."

Peters said that without a faculty representative, the committee loses an important voice.

"The only thing having a faculty member gives is a perspective on the issues different from the views of the students and from me," he said. "The Finance Committee deals with student money and it's all their decision. But it would give another dimension to the decision-making process."

Peters said he believes the committee should be able to find a qualified faculty member willing to fill the representative position.

"You try to pick a person you know and one who will work well with the students. We are fortunate to have someone like Dr. (Kathryn) Treadway (assistant professor of curriculum and instruction) working well with Student Senate. We just need to find another qualified person."

Hart gingerly locked the satellite into a special cradle.

President Reagan expressed his delight. "Bob I understand that the satellite you have on board would cost us about $200 million to build at today's prices," he told commander Robert L. Crippen. "If you can't fix it up there would you mind bringing it back?"

That's precisely what the backup plan is.

Nelson and fellow astronaut James D. van Hoften, known to their colleagues as "Pinky" and "Ox," will climb into bulky space suits today and go into the cargo bay to accomplish in six hours what they had planned for 12 earlier in the mission.

They will replace a control box that is four feet high and four feet wide, to restore the satellite's ability to point its scientific instruments at the sun with precision. Blown fuses more than three years ago destroyed that crucial capability.

The capture, after a chase of 1.8 million miles, came at a time when satellites are becoming ever more expensive. Solar Max, which cost $77 million when it was launched in 1980, would run more than $235 million today.

"We're at the end of the era of the throwaway spacecraft," said rescue manager Frank Cepollina. "This is the first of a whole family of in-orbit repairable systems."

Area Law Enforcement Officials are on the look-out for the infamous Paddy Murphy. Murphy, 5'7" tall, but rarely standing, with red, brown or silver hair and of undertermined age is said to be not armed or dangerous. Officials are looking for the famed ninth founding father of the SAE Fraternity because of his uncanny ability to arouse college students into a partying mood causing them to drink heavily and have a very nice time. Riley County District Attorney Colt "45" Knutson said he is very familiar with Paddy Murphy and would just like to keep the partying to a minimum. Sheriff Steven Bob Enrich echoes "45's" statement and added that the problem has been known to grow to epidemic proportions in the past. Paddy has recently been sited in 16 bars in the around Manhattan. He was last seen leaving Schmidts Liquor Store in a piece of #8 @ * sky blue cadillac and was believed to be heading toward Eskridge, Kan. for who knows what. If you have any information about the whereabouts of this — man, don't call the local SAE House, they like him, please contact the proper authorities.

"The drinking age is the only non-educational issue we work on," Tallman said. He attributed ASK's stance on the drinking age to polls showing a large majority of students oppose efforts to raise the drinking age. The student Legislative Assembly (which determines ASK action) also voted to oppose the effort, he said.

Porteous said if any school refused to support the new level of funding, they would be denied future representation in ASK.

In other business, senate increased Finance Committee's recommendation of $6,258.40 for the debate squad to subsidize tournament trips. After initially increasing the allocation to $6,917.70, the senate finally settled on a compromise of $6,599.70 — the same level of funding given to the squad last year.

All other tentative allocations were consistent with Finance Committee recommendations. Amendments to provide the Puerto Rican Student Organization with additional funding for printing and advertising failed, and the group was given $234.50. PRSO made a request for $382 to the Finance Committee.

International Coordinating Council, representing 16 separate international organizations, made an original request of $7,192.41 to the Finance Committee. However, senate eventually decided to allocate $3,506.46 to the council — $146.77 less than its 1983-1984 allocation.

FONE was given its full request of $10,018.85 in a unanimous vote. The increase from its 1983-1984 allocation of $9,531.35 was attributed to an increased cost of renting space at the University for Man house.

Former Student Body President Jerry Katlin addressed the senate during the open period of the meeting to allay concerns about a lack of student input into naming the new coliseum.

Katlin said K-State President Duane Acker called him with the proposed name for the coliseum, and Katlin told Acker he had no objections to the proposal. Katlin said he did not tell senate about the decision because the administration wanted to keep the name secret until a press release was issued.

Students will be involved in the actual hiring of the architect who will design the building, Katlin said.

Point-Counterpoint

Because so many were turned away from hearing Phyllis Schlafly on Monday night in the Union Forum Hall, the Collegian editorial board presents here a point-counterpoint argument based on the context of the Union Program Council debate. While both sides have the equal right to express their opinions, we remain firm in believing continual debate must deter from conflict and move toward resolution for any effective change to occur. Merit must be awarded each argument to reach compromise and understanding about the Equal Rights Amendment and nuclear arms policy.

Kecia Stolfus, editorial page editor

Schlafly fears high court control

When Equal Rights Amendment supporters can't summon a logical argument from the depths of their minds, what happens? At Monday night's speech by Phyllis Schlafly in the Union Forum Hall, those present and possibly a few standing outside found out: they hiss, boo and make catcalls.

This type of behavior shows the ERA forces in their true light. While all of Schlafly's arguments may not hold water, sarcasm on the part of a discussion panel and immature acts by members of the audience with opposing views serve to entrench equal rights advocates on a plane of stupidity.

If the opposition to Schlafly had stopped talking long enough to listen, it might have realized that in any political situation, compromises must be made. Think about it: a group seen as inferior even in the eyes of some politicians goes to Washington, expecting Congress to give it everything it wants. Some training in lobbying techniques is certainly in order.

Schlafly had some valid points. Her entire argument was based on the enforcement of equal rights legislation. She is against having the Supreme Court interpret a constitutional amendment and for good reason. The unpredictability of the court has been proven since its inception. What Schlafly named as perils of a constitutional amendment as interpreted — coed private schools, higher insurance rates for women and federal funding for abortions — is certainly possible with a fickle court.

In light of the ages of some Supreme Court justices, one would think that equal rights groups would be happy to leave enforcement to the bureaucracy because of the possibility that President Reagan will be re-elected and appoint ultra-conservative justices.

What the ERA supporters in the audience offered as arguments was more absurd than anything Schlafly delivered. According to the ERA boosters, the amendment would prevent child abuse and wife beating. So who is to say that a husband who is forced to stay home and care for the children won't abuse them? Furthermore, who is to say that the husband, after staying home all day, will not unload his frustrations on his wife?

Of course, we never found out Monday night. The arguments spewed forth on the matters of family abuse had no accompanying statistics or even solid hypotheses for an equal society, and therefore were nothing more than empty, emotional rhetoric.

The next time a controversial speaker comes to K-State, both sides should stop and listen before making spectacles of themselves.

Lee White, for the editorial board

Current legislation inadequate

Phyllis Schlafly's entire speech Monday night in the Union Forum Hall, as well as her comments and discussions of panel and audience questions, showed a lack of insight into the implications of the Equal Rights Amendment.

Those in the audience who went to hear Schlafly reiterate a viable set of reasons why the ERA should not be ratified may have been disappointed. On the other hand, those impressionable few who allow their support to be guided by impassioned rhetoric instead of tangible evidence were probably converted into anti-ERA advocates. Both situations are unfortunate.

A personal attack on Schlafly is not required to point out her ridiculous beliefs about the dangerous effects of the ERA; however, a consideration of her oratory and her supposed response to questions serves to show the weakness of her stance.

From Schlafly's viewpoint, the ERA would not save women from their current predicament, but only produce more discrimination. She said she sees no benefits from the ERA, even though she admits inequity exists.

Furthermore, Schlafly said she believes the ERA is not necessary because the United States has enough laws to protect the rights of women.

If this were true, Schlafly should have been able to defend her position more accurately and precisely, instead of relying on far-fetched and absurd non-realities.

Both ideally and realistically, the ERA strives to eliminate generalizations about people on the basis of sex alone. Every person should be considered first as an individual. Detailed studies of the ERA have reinforced this concept time after time. Schlafly's failure to see this implication of the ERA seems to show her closed-minded attitude about women's place in society.

An amendment stating the principle of non-discrimination on account of sex is necessary to the Constitution, because of the exact reason Schlafly believes it is not. Current federal laws designed to protect women from discrimination are far from adequate. These laws are ignored, often remain unenforced and are overlooked by businesses and employers. The courts are full of discrimination cases involving breach of these laws.

An amendment to the Constitution would make the consequences of discrimination more severe than they are now, and would serve to better protect individual rights. The magnitude and importance of an amendment to the Constitution far outweighs any other form of legislation.

Advocates of the ERA are not interested in paying higher insurance rates or keeping individuals from attending the school of their choice, as Schlafly asserts. What they are interested in is the right of every person to be an individual and to receive benefits, education, support and pay equal to others without being judged on sex. Period.

Melissa Brune, for the editorial board

Retake proposal harms students

I feel I must speak in defense of fellow K-State students and myself, for I believe we have cause to feel threatened by the pending policies concerning drop/add and class retakes. And not only that, but we have ample cause also to feel threatened by the remarks made and ideas implied by those proponents of changing the current policies.

If a student does poorly in a course for whatever reason, legitimate or illegitimate, he has paid some dues in one way or another. Either he has made an honest attempt, but was unfortunately unable to grasp the main points of the course, or loafed and therefore got what he deserved. In both cases the University got its money and the system worked its semestery cycle.

But from what Michael Finnegan, professor of sociology and anthropology, said, students who do poorly in a course are in a position of being judged whether or not to be forgiven for this heinous crime. Finnegan supports a new retake policy in which a student's past poor grade is not forgiven (as if it has to be) and is figured into his cumulative grade point average along with the new grade after retaking the course.

If a student completes a course satisfactorily, he or she should be given due credit. But not nullifying a poor grade which has been bettered is nothing but punishment, very unnecessary punishment! It's like saying, "Sure, Joe is a very good engineer, but he used to be stupid!"

It would not be a nice feeling to have passed one's required study and yet be in jeopardy of not receiving a diploma due to a committee's judgments on just exactly who is "deserving to graduate."

In addition, I think it is demanding enough for students to decide their courses and devise conflict-free schedules at the last minute with the current time allotted. Sure, it's a headache for professors. But when it comes to the best interests of students, isn't the problem relatively minor?

Only 15 days to drop a class without a W being recorded? The first exams haven't even been given in many cases with the current 25-day period.

A student should be able to drop a class whenever he wishes to up to the 50th day of classes. He isn't getting credit. In fact, he is losing credit hours for that semester. I think it's a matter of students' freedom to make judgments for themselves as to their academic plans.

The way the Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee speaks on these issues makes them sound like they're trying to widen a gap between students and faculty.

Gender shouldn't limit individual success

Editor,

Because my father lost his leg during World War II, it was not he but my mother who supported my family when I was a child. After his death, my mother assumed the task of raising me and my older brothers — alone.

For most of my 20 years I have been neither a staunch supporter nor an opponent of the Equal Rights Amendment. This is because I have been raised on the belief that I should always strive to reach my potential, that if I put my mind to it, I can work to overcome any obstacle.

I am ashamed to say it is only now that I am older that I am beginning to realize how many obstacles my mother must have faced — obstacles that were born out of our society's insistence on placing both men and women in iron-clad roles. The life of those who cannot easily fit within the limits of these roles is not an easy one.

The fact that so many voices can be heard crying out is to me indicative of the fact that such an amendment is in truth necessary. It is unfortunate that we, as a society, have allowed ourselves to be sidetracked into debating circular issues such as "whether or not girls should be forced to fight in wars," or who has the responsibility to protect whom.

These issues aren't unimportant, but keep us from the matter at hand. An individual shouldn't be kept from striving to reach his or her potential on the basis of race, sex or anything, for that matter. This is a basic principle passed on to me by my mother, one to which I wish more people — from both sides of the equal rights issue — would give more thought.

Debate provided educational experience

Editor,

Re: Kecia Stolfus' editorial, "ERA debate fails to find solution," in the April 10 Collegian.

Stolfus feels the UPC Issues and Ideas Committee was "misguided" in bringing Phyllis Schlafly to Forum Hall. I disagree.

True, the debate was heated, and I observed some people who were too caught up in the emotionally laden atmosphere to appreciate the larger picture, but I also talked with many who found value in attending.

The purpose of the Issues and Ideas Committee is to provide intellectually stimulating programs which serve to educate both students and the community. Bringing Schlafly definitely fulfilled this purpose. I was very impressed by her well-thought-out ideas, and though I agreed with only some of what she said, I found the whole evening to be very instructive in what makes a speaker effective and what weakens their arguments.

Furthermore, the experience gave me more of a feel for what politics in this country is all about, while helping me to form my own opinions.

On top of all of this, the forum was interesting and at times, amusing. For one evening, I shared Schlafly's view that American politics is the greatest game.

ERA would produce change in attitudes

Editor,

Phyllis Schlafly, national chairman of Stop ERA, spoke Monday night about the potential negative effects of the Equal Rights Amendment. Schlafly said the amendment would require, among other things, elimination of veterans' preference and tax exemption for separate sex schools, and mandatory draft registration for women.

According to the panel, however, these drawbacks do not justify killing the amendment because existing conditions are bad enough, and many laws designed to prevent discrimination on account of sex are failing where the ERA might succeed. Working women, for example, still receive 59 cents for every dollar earned by men, in spite of the "glorified" Equal Pay Act.

But I think another important idea needs to be considered, and it was touched on by Frank Saal, associate professor of psychology, although it was completely ignored by Schlafly. The most important benefit of the ERA is the influence it could have on the attitudes of the people in this country.

Attitudes are where actions begin. The impact this amendment could have on our children if they read it in the U.S. Constitution is tremendous. Not only would equality of the sexes be something preached about by mothers and grandmothers, but it would be the law.

The "wrongness" of slavery became more impressive to me after I read that it is declared illegal by the U.S. Constitution, and I believe the ERA would have the potential to do the same in the minds of future generations.

Scout cookies

Editor,

Re: editorial cartoon in the April 3 Collegian:

The cartoon was a slur on Girl Scouting in general, scouts in Kaw Valley and Campus Girl Scouts in particular. The cookies are commercially baked and never touched by the girls themselves. To imply the cute little brownie next door would deliberately put anything into a cookie that would harm anyone is scandalous. For the editorial staff to print such a cartoon when in fact no deaths occurred is nothing short of slander. Furthermore, tampering with consumer products is not a subject for humor.

Committee deserves praise

Editor,

The Union Program Council is to be commended for bringing Phyllis Schlafly to K-State. Although I disagree with her views on the Equal Rights Amendment and on nuclear arms, I believe it was healthy for the campus to hear her.

The format of the program allowed presentation of opposing viewpoints through the panel discussion. I found it to be an educational experience. I now understand why Schlafly opposes the ERA, but I still see the central tenet of the amendment — equality of rights regardless of sex — to be far more important than what Schlafly fears women would lose if the ERA were passed.

I would like to thank Schlafly for presenting an unpopular viewpoint. (She would never agree with that statement!) But I extend my thanks even more heartily to the members of the panel: Dorothy Thompson, Affirmative Action; Judy Davis, Regional Crisis Center; John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy; and Frank Saal, associate professor of psychology. They addressed the myths on which Schlafly bases many of her views.

Little American Royal coverage mistaken

Editor,
Re: Rhonda Wessel's article "Little American Royal" in the April 2 Collegian:
As the agricultural editor of the Collegian, Wessel should be sure her articles are accurate and factual. This is a rather petty point to dwell on, but a time period of two weeks, rather than two days, occurred between the LAR sign-up and the first day the animals could be viewed.
More importantly, quotes used should certainly be factual. Judges' comments are meant to be friendly, constructive advice; in 12 years of showing I've never heard such rude sarcastic comments from a judge as were quoted in the article, and I'm sure they weren't his exact words. Therefore they shouldn't have been quoted as such.

The article implies that adequate help wasn't available at the barn to those who needed it. As a four-year participant in the LAR, I found the help and advice available far superior to that of past years. To get help, all anyone had to do was ask.
As I think Wessel now realizes, you can't believe everything you hear. Animals with bad dispositions can occur in any species, breed or sex of livestock. In the LAR, the animal a person receives depends solely upon the "luck of the draw;" anyone could have ended up with No. 326 or No. 322.

One of the purposes of the LAR is to acquaint new people with a segment of the animal science industry. I hope the negative tones contained in Wessel's article won't discourage any interested people from participating in future LAR's.

Definition of missile shield system in error

Editor,
Re: Kecia Stolfus' editorial, "Reagan's arms buildup excessive," in the April 5 Collegian: Stolfus' editorial on Reagan's arms buildup was very interesting but unfortunately the author's knowledge of basic facts is minimal. To state that "anti-satellite limitations" are "electronic shields" to defend against Soviet missiles is nonsense.

Such a system, if it existed, would be an anti-ballistic missile system. An anti-satellite system is one designed to knock out satellites such as communications satellites, etc. "Anti-satellite limitations" referred to are limits that have been proposed on such systems.

Journalists, because of their special place in society, have a certain responsibility to the public. Is it too much to ask that journalists possess at least a small level of competence in the area they are writing?

School prayer only 'lip service'

The president and more than half of the U.S. Senate recently voted for "putting God back in the schools." But the issue of school prayer, although currently defeated, is far from extinction. Those opposing the bill, such as the American Civil Liberties Union, argue that prayer in public schools infringes upon the rights of students and violates separation of church and state.

School prayer proponents tend to support the belief that America is a Christian nation founded upon what is termed "the Judeo-Christian ethic." They say, therefore, that the God of the Christian faith (Yahweh, in Hebrew) is to be acknowledged by our nation's public institutions.

A few of the many examples of the United States symbolizing its belief in God are the prayer given before each session of the U.S. Senate; "In God We Trust" written across currency; and the oath sworn with a hand on the Bible in a court of law. It could be said, then, school prayer is in essence simply another symbolic gesture by our country to acknowledge God.

There are many in this country

MARTIN SCHNEIDER
Guest Columnist

who believe the nation is "going down the tubes" because it has forgotten God, and schools without prayer are another step away from him. They cite many passages from Scripture in support of their belief that America is losing its blessing from God.

An example is Jeremiah 18:9-10: "And if at another time I announce that a nation or kingdom is to be built up and planted, and if it does evil in my sight and does not obey me, then I will reconsider the good I had intended to do for it."

It is argued that school prayer, "In God We Trust", etc., help us as a nation to follow God. President Reagan is of this persuasion.

I believe that in many ways we have forgotten God. And the problem is getting worse.

But the question is whether symbolism is what God wants from a nation. The Scriptures say no: "To obey is better than sacrifice," states 1 Samuel 15:22.

To give God lip service is not to follow him. This is true on the personal level as well as the national level. Scripture uses an interesting metaphor regarding God's relationship to man; that of walking, not talking. First John 2:6 states: "Whoever claims to live in him must walk as Jesus did."

So, what might someone do about school prayer? I say frit on it! If we truly believe God, we need to give him more than symbols. He wants all of who we are — to do more than just talk the talk, but to walk the walk.

Sightings of fugitive unfounded

CLAY CENTER — Authorities checked into a report that Christopher Bernard Wilder was seen in northeast Kansas, but decided the report was false, the FBI reported Monday.

Wilder, put on the FBI's "10 Most Wanted Fugitives" list Thursday, was reported seen at a Clay Center motel Saturday and again Monday.

"The rumor has been checked into, found to be a false sighting and no further investigation is being conducted," said FBI spokesman Max Geiman. "We have absolutely no information to indicate Wilder has been in the Clay Center area."

Wilder is suspected of murdering two women and abducting six others who have not been found. He was charged in Geary County last Friday with first-degree murder, felony murder, aggravated kidnapping and rape in the death of Suzanne W. Logan, 20, of Oklahoma City, Okla.

Charge dropped against soldier

JUNCTION CITY — A charge of involuntary manslaughter filed against a Fort Riley soldier in the January death of his stepdaughter in a traffic accident was dismissed Tuesday.

The Geary County prosecutor's office had charged Darrell Doswell, 20, March 5 under a state law requiring children age 2 or younger to be placed in a safety seat when traveling in the front seat of a vehicle.

Doswell's 18-month-old stepdaughter, Chastity Commodore, was killed when a car driven by Doswell slid off a snowy county road Jan. 15.

According to a pathologist's report, the child, who was not in a safety seat, choked to death on a nickel she was sucking on when the accident occurred.

Lloyd Graham, assistant prosecuting attorney, said his office decided to drop the charge because the state law refers only to a parent or legal guardian of a child under age 2. Although Doswell was the girl's stepfather, he had not taken legal custody of the child, Graham said.

Humor columnist returns home

DAYTON, Ohio — Columnist Erma Bombeck, who has written books, lobbied for women's rights, traveled around the world and dished up tons of advice, says the one thing she hasn't been able to accomplish in her life is to "look like Ann Margret."

The 57-year-old columnist returned to her hometown Monday to charm the Dayton Council on World Affairs — an organization usually concerned with Middle East warfare and the arms race.

"There's a special place in heaven for chaperones," she said. "The sun always shines, varicose veins dissipate...and the bars never close."

But Bombeck later struck a more serious note.

"The people and events I've just described are what world affairs are all about," she said. "We are all part of this world — the past, the present and the future."

KU remains competency test planner

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The University of Kansas will receive $1.25 million worth of business over the next five years compiling questions and researching results of the minimum competency testing program, under action taken Tuesday by the state Board of Education.

The 10-member board agreed to make KU the sole contractor for the minimum competency testing program for the next five years. The 1984 Legislature has passed a bill that would authorize a resumption of the testing of public school children for five years and that measure is awaiting action by Gov. John Carlin.

The bill would provide for testing the minimum mathematics and reading competency of students in grades 2, 4, 6, 8 and 10 at a cost of about $250,000 each year. Carlin recommended the bill, calling for testing in the school years beginning in 1984 and ending in 1989, and is expected to sign it.

Board members approved keeping

KU as sole contractor, citing the need for continuity in the program, which the Legislature established in 1978 as an experimental two-year program and continued for an additional two years in 1981, ending last spring.

KU researchers have coordinated the testing since the program's inception and state board members said the background and familiarity with the state's needs was important.

"I'm quite comfortable and most satisfied with KU," said Harold Blackburn, commissioner of education. "I only bring this up because I've heard others suggest that we might want to consider other bidders for the minimum-competency testing."

Willard Foster, program specialist in charge of the testing program for the Department of Education, disagreed, saying the state should again contract with KU to design the tests, set standards and research the results for comparison with previous performances and identifying trends.

The board also heard a report, but took no action, on a proposal to require all students to pass a minimum-competency test before being issued their high-school diplomas.

Foster told the board it would be a mistake to rely exclusively on minimum-competency tests to determine whether a student was qualified to receive a diploma and said it would be an improper use of the tests.

He also said further study was needed before the state could use the results of minimum-competency tests in the school accreditation process.

Also Tuesday, the state board: — Accepted a report which recommends the tuition charged to out-of-state students at Kansas' 19 community colleges be increased to $865 per semester from the current $798 level.

The proposal would make the tuition rate "commensurate with the tuition charged at the three small state universities and in compliance with state law." The state board adjusts community college tuition costs parallel to the Kansas Board of Regents' tuition decisions for Pittsburg State University, Fort Hays State University and Emporia State. The board is expected to take final action on the report today.

— Agreed to ask the Legislature to conduct studies this summer on two education issues: postsecondary education planning, including vocational technical schools and community colleges; and home study, reviewing Kansas' laws governing the teaching of students at home by parents or other instructors.

— Announced that 19 school districts will participate in a pilot project to educate students about alcohol abuse. The districts are Kansas City-Piper, Ulysses, Kensington, Girard, Andale, Cawker City, Beloit, Sylvan Grove, Westmoreland, Eskridge, Baldwin City, Riley, Riverton, Abilene, Halstead, Chapman, Elwood, Parsons and Altamont.

Carlin grants tax cheaters 3 months to pay

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Bills granting a three-month amnesty period for Kansas tax cheaters and making it illegal to falsely call an emergency telephone number for assistance were signed into law Tuesday by Gov. John Carlin.

Under the tax law, Kansas tax cheaters will have three months this summer, July through September, to come forward and pay back taxes without the threat of civil or criminal penalties.

The law, which takes effect July 1 and expires Sept. 30, was sponsored by Rep. James Lowther, R-Emporia, who said six states have implemented tax amnesty programs and generated large sums of money.

In Massachusetts, some 30,000 people identified by the state as being delinquent in their tax payments, turned themselves in and produced a $57 million windfall for state coffers.

There are no projections of how much Kansans might turn in during the amnesty period. The taxes would have to be paid with interest and the amnesty would apply only to the taxing periods before Jan. 1, 1983. The Internal Revenue Service would be notified of every tax cheat who takes advantage of the offer. There is no federal amnesty program.

The emergency phone law is aimed at combating prank calls to emergency 911 telephone numbers. Currently, there is no law to cover such instances.

The new law, which takes effect with publication in the Kansas Register on Thursday, expands the crime of giving a false alarm to include making calls for emergency assistance when it is known that none is needed. Violations will be a class A misdemeanor, punishable by one year in the county jail and a $2,500 fine.

Several Topeka lawmakers sponsored the legislation because of complaints from Shawnee County authorities about false emergency calls which were traced to a local high school.

Another provision of the bill increases the penalties for desecrating a cemetery, raising it to a class A misdemeanor from a class C misdemeanor, which is punishable by one month in the county jail and a $500 fine.

Other bills Carlin signed into law — Require all infants born in Kansas to be tested for a milk-related disease called galactosemia — a disorder affecting about one in every 40,000 infants. The disease is related to the production of glucose and triggered by an adverse reaction to milk. The law takes effect Jan. 1, 1985. Doctors already take a drop of blood from every new-born baby in the state to check for hypothyroid disorders and protein accumulations in the blood — commonly called PKU — and the same drop of blood will be used to check for galactosemia.

Students protest Kissinger speeches

By The College Press Service

AUSTIN, Texas — Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's recent visits to two campuses have brought back some of the same kinds of confrontations his policies about Vietnam and Chile provoked a decade ago.

Last week, 53 protesters — 17 of them University of Texas students — were arrested during a demonstration against Kissinger's appearance at a campus forum on Central America.

Only three days before the March 22 incident, Kissinger cancelled a similar speech on Central America at the University of South Florida, where activists had held protests and teach-ins prior to his scheduled appearance there.

The Texas protests were the largest here since the anti-war demonstrations of the late 1960s and early 1970s, officials said.

Students in both Florida and Texas objected to Kissinger's $20,000 speaking fee, but concentrated their demonstrations on the Nixon and Ford administration official's foreign policy record.

Most recently, Kissinger headed President Reagan's Commission on Central America, which recommended increasing U.S. aid to American-supported regimes by $8 billion over the next five years.

The former secretary's scheduled campus appearances on the commission's behalf began stirring up some groups as soon as they were announced.

At Texas, administrators tried to stop trouble before it began by warning the Austin chapter of the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador (CISPES) not to protest during the visit. Administrators also told the group not to take signs or posters into the auditorium in which Kissinger was to speak, not to stop non-students from passing out leaflets and to let the university preview the leaflets before CISPES distributed them.

CISPES sued, charging the rules violated its rights to free speech and assembly.

A U.S. District judge agreed, but upheld the university's right to throw hecklers and posters out of the auditorium.

At South Florida in Tampa, Harry Vanden, political science professor, organized "a whole series of events around Kissinger's visit," including lectures about the former secretary's complicity in the armed overthrow of the Chilean government, films like "Dr. Strangelove," and a three-hour teach-in.

"Kissinger's policies have caused a great deal of suffering and pain throughout the world," Vanden said.

As campus activity mounted, Kissinger's booking agency called and said he would have to cancel the March 19 event, said Troy Collier, director of South Florida's lecture series.

"We weren't given a specific reason," he said.

Kissinger's Washington office did not return the College Press Service's telephone calls.

"I don't think (Kissinger cancelled) because of protests," said Don Walker of Harry Walker, Inc., a New York booking agency that arranges lectures for Kissinger, James Watt, Gerald Ford, Helmut Schmidt and others.

"We've represented him since 1977, and this is the first college lecture he's cancelled," Walker said. "He just told us it was personal."

The prospects of protest didn't stop Kissinger from going to Texas, where bedlam erupted when he took the podium before a crowd of 1,000. When the smoke cleared, police had arrested 53. None was a CISPES member, officials said.

"I'm not exactly sure what's going to happen with the arrested students," said Glen Maloney, a Texas administrator. "It's going to take a while to get things cleared up."

The students will face disciplinary hearings, and the university will re-evaluate its demonstrations policies, he said.

A spokesman at CISPES's national headquarters in Washington said it the group wasn't behind the Florida and Texas incidents, though it is encouraging to students to find out what speakers will be coming to their campuses for graduation ceremonies far enough in advance to organize responses, said Van Gosse, CISPES's campus activities director.

Walker declined to say which campuses Kissinger might visit this spring.

Kissinger is not the only speaker serving as a magnet for protesters this spring.

Young America's Foundation, a conservative youth group based in Reston, Va., is trying to organize enough protests at American University, the New York Institute of Technology, the University of Toledo, University of Southern Mississippi, Butler University and Middle Tennessee State University to stop the scheduled April appearances of Vladimir Posner.

Posner, perhaps best known in this country as a frequent guest on the "Nightline" TV show, is a commentator for Radio Moscow and plans to speak on arms control and U.S.-Soviet relations.

Bills

ing procedures, depending upon certification by district courts. The law takes effect July 1 upon publication in state statute books.

— Changes the legal name and clearly defines what mobile homes are, setting specific maximum lengths, widths and heights and designating the type of permanent chassis and foundation a structure must have to be considered a manufactured home. The law takes effect July 1.

— Permit Kansas' 19 community colleges to increase student tuition by 20 percent. The bill, which takes effect July 1, would raise the limits on tuition that can be charged from the current range of $10-$15 per credit hour to $12-$18. Currently, only four schools are charging the maximum, but the Kansas Association of Community Colleges asked for the legislation saying most of the schools plan increases and will soon be at the statutory limit.

— Continue the Department of Human Resources and the office of the secretary of human resources for one more year. Without the bill, the agency would have been abolished in July under provisions of the Kansas Sunset Act, which requires lawmakers to review and continue government operations.

— Allow cities or other governing bodies to establish a special fund for depositing revenues from oil and natural gas production on public property.

Lakes cloudy; cold waters aid catfishing

By TOM STALLBAUMER
Collegian Reporter

Current conditions are ideal for catching a variety of fish — especially channel catfish, said Chuck Bever, employee of the Kansas Fish and Game Commission.

"The water is still pretty cold, about 41 to 42 degrees, and the channel cat will be out in the moving water," Bever said. "Due to the recent rains, runoff will cause streams and lakes to rise. Where water is rising, such as streams or at the head of a lake, there will be some channel cat activity."

The best baits for catching channel catfish are shad sides and live shad, Bever said.

Though recent rainfall has been beneficial for channel catfish fishing, rain also has made Tuttle Creek Reservoir dirty. This is not good for crappie fishing, he said.

"The crappie are out in the deeper water now, in brushy habitat," Bever said. "If you don't have a boat, a good place to try to catch crappie would be at a heated dock on a lake."

Fishermen also may have luck catching large mouth bass now, Bever said. It is best to fish where the water warms up first, which would be the shallow ends of a lake or pond.

"The most effective bait to use for large mouth bass are spinner baits which have a little piece of bright metal attached to them and spin as you reel them in," he said.

Another type of fish that may be caught at this time of year is walleye.

"Walleye are best taken in moving water — such as above or below a reservoir — or at the face of a dam near a rocky point," he said.

"Walleye spawn in water that is from 42 to 47 degrees. The spawning takes place in the rocky areas. Streams that have rocky shoals (a shallow, rocky spot in a stream) are good areas to catch walleye," he said.

There have been many walleye caught at Rocky Ford, but since the water overflowed out of Tuttle Creek Dam was increased, the fishing hasn't been as good, he said.

Another area that may good for catching walleye is on the face of a dam.

"You'll want to fish on the face of a (rocky) dam after dark, because walleye spawn in rocky areas after dark," he said. They are usually in 1 to 4 feet of water. During the day, the walleye move out away from the face of the dam into deeper water."

Bever said fishing for walleye will be best in mid-to late-May. The most effective bait to use are jigs (lures jiggled up and down in the water) and crankbaits (lures that imitate fish), he said.

Mike Weisbender, at Ole Mike's Shooters Gun and Tackle, said the equipment used for fishing at this time of year varies according to the type of fishing.

"If you're fishing for channel cat, you'll probably want to use 10 to 17 pound test line and shad sides for bait," Weisbender said.

"For crappie fishing, four to six pound test line would do, and the bait should be either a jig or a minnow," he said.

Jason Wolfe, junior in animal sciences and industry, spends Tuesday afternoon fishing for walleye at Tuttle Creek Reservoir's Rocky Ford Fishing Area. Kansas Fish and Game officials say the fishing at such areas has been good this season due to excess water runoff from recent wet weather.

Barn styles change with industry specialization

By DIONA NACE
Collegian Reporter

The role and function the barn plays on farms has evolved from a general purpose building into a specialized structure with often only one function.

"Specialization started with the introduction of the tractor to the farm. The tractor was the beginning of farm mechanization," Wendling, professor emeritus of extension agriculture engineering, said.

One of the primary functions of the barn used to be housing horses or other work animals, Wendling said. With the tractor taking the place of those animals, the stalls that held the animals are no longer needed.

"The floor plans of a typical barn would have one or two horse stalls, feed boxes, tack rooms, feed rooms and grain bins on the main floor. Above that there would be the haymow, where the hay was piled loose. Off to the sides there would be attached sheds, one of which was used for milking," Wendling said.

It was formerly common practice to milk five to 15 cows.

"The egg and cream check every week provided for the food you bought in town and your clothes," he said.

The first generation of barns were built from 1860 to 1930, and on many farms they were a sign of prestige.

"The bigger your farm, the bigger your barn," Wendling said.

A shed on the south side of many barns was usually open and used to feed cattle. It contained a manger and provided a place of protection for cattle during, he said.

"In hilly areas, some of the barns would be built right into the side of the hill. The basic design would be the same, only the main floor would be in the basement and you could drive right into the haymow," Wendling said.

"It was a common practice among early builders to use as much native materials as possible. In the Flint Hills, you'll find limestone prevalent in barns, sheds and houses. Around Hays is another limestone region, only it is softer and could be used for fence posts also," he said.

"Those fence posts were durable, and many of them are still there. The only problem they have with them is in winter when they tend to get brittle and break easily if run into," Wendling said.

Barns of the past were made of lumber native to Kansas, including oak, cottonwood, walnut and some elm.

"I know of one barn down by Burden that is solid walnut," he said.

In some areas, pine or other materials were used because of a scarcity of native materials.

"Specialization, which started in the 1930s with the tractor, came into full force after World War II when electricity became prevalent on the farm. Before then, there were really few feasible ways to run a motor which provided the mechanization," Wendling said.

"My father, for as long as he was on the farm, said the barn was a general purpose building. Now my brother, who farms with his son, has it a strictly beef facility," he said.

Wendling said that in years past, a typical farmer had a small cow herd and ran the operation from start to finish. Now there are variations of the farm, including the independent cow herd, the commercial feedlot or finisher and the backgrounders.

The beef cow herd owner produces the livestock, the backgrounder buys from the producer when the cattle reach a weight of 400 to 500 pounds, and he sells them at a weight of 750 to 800 pounds for finishing. There are two prevalent methods of finishing. The first is on the farm and the second is through a commercial feedlot. The feedlot is the most common, and it uses open lot confinement which has few, if any, shelters, he said.

Kansas cattle are not kept in confinement because of the temperature and moisture, which doesn't make it feasible.

"As you move farther north into Nebraska and Iowa, you will see more indoor cattle facilities," Wendling said.

With specialization, dairy cattle operations had two options, he said. One was to try and market Grade A milk, which is picked up daily and used for drinking. However, this grade also is governed by strict sanitation regulations which require the dairy producer to install windows for better ventilation, gutters to remove manure and a milk room.

Wendling said that in the late 1940s, farmers increased their herds from 10 cows to 40 cows. This was due to the availability of electricity which powered coolers and milking machines.

He said that today most dairy operations require an average ratio of average one man to 50 cows. The dairy cows, often both dry and fresh, are kept in enclosed or partially enclosed free-stall housing.

The other dairy market option, Grade C, had lower sanitation requirements and was used for cheese, but doesn't exist today, he said.

"In the old general purpose barn, swine were never kept inside. They had small portable sheds and were allowed to run loose on a range system," Wendling said.

Swine began being kept in confinement during the 1950s, and this trend expanded during the 1960s. Swine housing facilities were the first to utilize the liquid waste removal systems with slatted floors, he said.

"There are four types of specialized swine units. They are farrowing, gestating sow, nursery and finishing. Each type or stage has different environmental requirements. For the farrowing and nursery, you have to provide a more controlled environment," Wendling said.

Most pigs are weaned when they reach a weight of 35 pounds. They are then moved to finishing barns because the don't need such controlled environments as they had in farrowing and nursery barns.

The general purpose barn isn't dead and forgotten.

"In the past 20 years, small 'hobby' barns similar to the general purpose barn on a smaller scale have become common," he said.

"People who work in town and live in the country and have some horses use these barns. They will have the stalls and the haymow just like the old barns did, but they will be smaller," Wendling said.

"In the past 30 to 50 years the barn and farmstead have gone from one general purpose barn with some small outside buildings to large specialized buildings," he said.

Students pursue treasure during fantasy role-playing game

By BECKY WILEY
Collegian Reporter

On Saturday, Seaton 161 and some K-State students will be transformed. The classroom will turn into a dungeon and the students will become assassins, thieves, druids and other characters living in a world of magic.

Unbelievable, maybe, but hard work and the power of imagination will make the metamorphosis a reality.

The K-State Gaming Council will host Kan-Con 4, an Advanced Dungeons and Dragons tournament and gaming convention, Saturday and Sunday in Seaton Hall. Additional events include an open gaming room for AD&D, other fantasy and science fiction gaming and movies. The tournament is open to anyone.

James Vassar, tournament chairman and senior in social sciences, said that although the convention is a fund-raising project for the council, its main purpose is to bring together people who play AD&D and the original Dungeons and Dragons and to allow them to learn other such games.

Dungeons and Dragons originated in 1974, Vassar said, and has been gaining in popularity, especially among college students. D&D, as it is commonly called by game enthusiasts, is a fantasy role-playing game in which a Dungeon Master acts as referee and judge while officiating over a world of his creation. Players portray characters generated by dice.

Inside the dungeon are treasures which the fantasy characters attempt to go in and get without meeting any of the characters protecting the treasure.

"D&D is conflict-oriented towards battles and things. There are a lot of mind games. Players try to figure out puzzles, like who are the good guys and who are the bad guys, that sort of thing," Vassar said.

"The game offers a way to escape from everyday pressures and provides an outlet for pent-up emotions," he said.

Gary Phillips, sophomore in psychology, said although some people play for the competition, he plays the game for the imagination involved.

"It breaks you away from what I like to call mundania, because the character you play is different from what you are. They're extensions of various parts of your personality," Phillips said.

Vassar said D&D players all have favorite characters they like to portray, and his is a magic-user.

"How much further into fantasy can you get than having empathy for a character who can do magic?" he said.

He said many people empathize with their characters. Some have temper tantrums if their character gets killed in the dungeon. Some dress up in cloaks and armor.

Vassar said a good playing session for D&D must last at least three hours, but most players believe that the longer the session, the better.

"I've been in a game that lasted 14 hours. It's just like reading a good book. You get caught up in it," Vassar said.

Cathy Hammer, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine, also attested to the many playing hours involved in D&D.

"You want to reach a reasonable stopping point, but a lot of times we play past that point and have to come to another," she said.

Vassar said many equate D&D with devil worshipping. They hear words like "dungeon" and "magic" and associate the game with evil.

"Some people get the idea that it's (D&D) a bunch of chanting people sitting around a pentagram in a room full of burning candles. It's not like that," he said.

Phillips said people tend to read more into D&D than there really is.

"Players aren't becoming devils and demons. We're not worshipping devils, we're fighting them. But it's just a game. People who are against it have been sadly misinformed," he said.

Vassar said religion does enter into the game, but not the religions of today.

"It's more the religions like Norse, Greek and Roman mythology. Those help put the players into the non-reality of the situation by giving them a different frame of mind. It's not to give them another religion," he said.

Jeff Ayers, freshman in electrical engineering, said he tries to make his games as true to life as possible.

"I've never tried to play God. I've always tried to conduct a game that was realistic with maybe a few extra things thrown in — like magic," Ayers said.

Vassar said D&D isn't the only fantasy role playing game available. Some, such as Spies and Mercenaries, are set in a more contemporary setting and resemble something one would see in a James Bond movie.

Games called Super Heroes and Villains and Vigilantes deal with comic book-type heroes.

Gamma-World is a game created by the Tactic Strategy Review, the company which designed AD&D and D&D. Phillips described Gamma-World as a game of high technology. The scenarios are set in post-nuclear holocaust, and the characters deal with high levels of radiation and mutations. Imaginary lasers and sonic bombs are used.

"The mutations are special. They allow the character to survive. For example, I play with a character that has six arms — that allows him to do things faster. But often, the mutations are a handicap. Then it's more of a challenge for your character to survive," Phillips said.

Vassar said there are also games like the ones described called PBMs (play by mail). Players are mailed sheets of information and they write out their responses and mail them back. Computers referee the games.

Census report shows more women employed

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Women now hold nearly one-third of the nation's management jobs and have significantly raised their representation in many other occupations, the Census Bureau reported Tuesday.

A new analysis of employment figures comparing 1970 and 1980 found women increasing from 38 percent of the labor force to 42.6 percent.

But their share of many previously male-dominated jobs increased much more sharply than that growth would indicate.

Women, for example, comprised 17.1 percent of the nation's judges in 1980, up from 6.1 percent a decade earlier. And their representation among lawyers rose from 4.9 percent to 13.8 percent.

The appointment of Sandra Day O'Connor to the Supreme Court was symbolic of the growth in female lawyers and judges.

The new study compiled by the Census Bureau and the Bureau of Labor Statistics found women holding 30.5 percent of the nation's executive, administrative and managerial positions in 1980.

That's up from 18.5 percent a decade earlier, said Suzanne Bianchi and Nancy Rytina, who prepared the study.

"Women have been at the vortex of sweeping changes in demographic, social and economic patterns" in recent decades, Bianchi said.

Today, she observed, women are less likely to have children and more likely to finish college, and they are making ever greater inroads in the workforce, although earnings remain below those of men.

"The question for the upcoming decades is where the balance will be struck between the roles of women as wives and mothers and women as workers and economic providers for their families," she wrote.

On the same day the Census study was released, Heidi Hartman, a researcher at the National Academy of Sciences, told a congressional panel that women still face pay discrimination. Wage rates for jobs traditionally held by women are depressed, she said, adding that is why working women earn less.

In the new Census study of women in the workforce, one of the largest numbers of female managers was in medical and health related operations, where they were more than half at 50.8 percent. But that was actually a decline, from 60.6 percent of such managers in 1970.

Next highest was personnel and labor relations specialists, which climbed from 33.4 percent women in 1970 to 47 percent in 1980.

And women also made up a significant share of postmasters and mail superintendents, 43.5 percent, up from 31.8 percent.

Perhaps the most significant growth came in the area of public administration. In 1970 women made up 21.7 percent of the public officials in the country, but no women were counted as chief executives of government agencies.

By 1980, 11,876 women headed government agencies to make up 25.6 percent of those chief administrators, and their overall share of public officials had climbed to 33.6 percent.

Those gains notwithstanding, women also increased their presence in the traditionally female dominated administrative support jobs such as clerks and secretaries.

Film deals with lesbianism in new way

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

After "Making Love" and "Personal Best" comes a low-budget, independently produced film that eclipses both of its predecessors in terms of honesty. "Lianna" is neither the slick Hollywood treatment of homosexuality found in

Review

"Making Love," nor is it the pretentiously artistic rendering of "Personal Best." "Lianna" has a documentary-like realism in its simply constructed scenes.

"Lianna" is about a college faculty wife in her 30s who finds herself attracted to a female professor. Lianna's marriage had been very rocky, with her husband philandering with graduate students. When she unexpectedly arrives at a faculty party and finds her husband having sex with a coed, she begins her own search to find happiness through fulfilling her own sensual desires. This means accepting the advances of her professor and entering into a lesbian relationship in which her family and friends are alienated.

"Lianna" describes the consequences caused by such a decision to reveal her homosexuality. Unlike "Personal Best," which had a strong element of plot outside of the lesbian relationship, "Lianna" is concerned solely with the effect of such a relationship. Even though this leaves the film lacking in traditional dramatic tension, the material resonates with emotions that raise the film above the sensationalistic nature of its subject.

The depiction of Lianna's coming out is actually secondary to the effect that it has upon her life. Lianna must first move out of her home, something that she has a difficult time explaining to her children. One child reacts indifferently while the other child pulls away into seclusion. Lianna must then find an apartment and build a whole new life, finding a job and making new friends.

While it may turn out to be true that "Lianna" tells us little we didn't already know about the consequences of coming out, the film is very successful at conveying the emotions. There is a clarity of vision in the presentation of these emotions that outdistances the film's predecessors.

The personal integrity necessary to make such a drastic change in lifestyle is shown through Lianna's routine. Scenes that might have been mundane are imbued with a richness in detail that make them powerful insights into Lianna's character. Director-writer John Saules ("Return of the Secaucus Seven") takes a very simple approach to his subject, allowing the characters to always be the focus of attention, instead of any stylistic approach.

At times the dialogue provided by Sayles seems a bit contrived, though. All of the characters are supposed to be from a college community, so maybe that explains why they all speak with such wit; but much of the dialogue has Sayles' stamp on it a little too clearly. Often when a character speaks, it is obviously the words of Sayles instead of the words that the character would actually speak.

Overall, though, "Lianna" is a remarkable achievement. Without becoming melodramatic, the struggles between Lianna and her husband are depicted with a genuine feeling of authenticity. Sayles is able to introduce a surprising amount of comedy. Sometimes in the middle of a dramatic scene he turns the audience's expectations around, resulting in laughter instead of tears. He never takes his subject so seriously that he can't find humor in the lives of the characters.

FBI continues adoption network investigation

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX, Ariz. — A two-month-old FBI investigation into an adoption network accused of defrauding scores of couples in several states who had sought to adopt Mexican babies is continuing, and there is no indication when it may be concluded, an FBI agent said Tuesday.

"It will be a while before we present a completed report to the U.S.

attorney," said Kurk Klossner, who is assigned to the FBI's Phoenix office.

Klossner said the Phoenix office is coordinating the massive investigation, which he said is only beginning.

Asked to comment on reports that subpoenas had been issued in connection with a grand jury investigation, Klossner said he could only say that the "U.S. attorney is considering subpoenaing records or witnesses."

The probe centers on an adoption network operated by Debbie Tanner of Wilcox and Bryan Martin Hall of El Paso, Texas.

No charges have been filed in the case. One law enforcement official has been quoted as saying he had determined about 80 clients in 20 states paid amounts ranging from $1,000 to $10,000 to several people in Arizona and Texas who said they would arrange the adoption of Mexican infants.

Tanner and Hall have maintained that their adoption network, which used lawyers in Mexico and private adoption agencies in the United States to match couples with children, has not broken any laws. The two have claimed to have placed as many as 400 Mexican children with adoptive parents in the United States.

Police track moves of murder suspect

By The Associated Press

BEAUMONT, Texas — An Australian-born race car driver suspected in the murders of seven women in five states apparently stayed in a Southeast Texas motel the night before a Lamar University nursing student disappeared, police said Tuesday.

Christopher Bernard Wilder left Florida, where he is suspected in the disappearances of three women and the abduction of another, and traveled to Baton Rouge, La., where he allegedly stole license plates for his 1973 Chrysler, police said.

The car was found in a Beaumont shopping center parking lot last week.

Wilder, who was placed on the FBI's 10 Most Wanted list, has been charged in the abduction of a Florida State University student who survived the attack and in the murder of an Oklahoma City woman whose body was found near Milford Lake in Geary County.

Beaumont Police Lt. Charles Henderson said Wilder stayed at the Gulf Coast Motel in Winnie, about 25 miles southwest of Beaumont, on the night of March 22.

The following day, Terry Walden, a 24-year-old mother of two, disappeared. Her body was found in a canal just west of Beaumont on March 26. She had been stabbed several times.

"We don't really know for sure where she was abducted from or when," Henderson said. "She had things to do Friday morning, but she did not make it to the bank or the Alan Mills studio, and we're not sure about the grocery store," he said.

Henderson said Wilder was seen in Dallas on March 24. From there he went to Oklahoma, where a woman was reportedly abducted the following day. Wilder then journeyed to Kansas, Colorado and on to Las Vegas, Nev., he said.

Interior designers exhibit studio work

The talents of interior design students was displayed Tuesday in the Union Courtyard through Interior Designer, a showcase of various room designs.

The work of students in interior design studios I through V was represented, as well as the work of students in Interior Design Graphics.

Reem Mutwalli, senior in interior design, and Karen Mooie, junior in interior design, coordinated the displays as an academic project. They said they also wanted to demonstrate the wide range of students' capabilities in this field.

"Interior design is a degree offered by the College of Home Economics. Home economics doesn't mean just cooking and sewing," Mutwalli said.

Interior Designer was the first exhibit of its kind at K-State, she said. Before, sample interior designs had never been displayed outside of the home economics college.

"Some people seem to be in a haze about interior design. They're confused and think it's just rearranging furniture, but interior designers go through a long process of analyzing, designing and working," Mutwalli said. "We are first presented with a (designing) problem, and then we must analyze the problem to find the right solution," Mutwalli said.

The solution is then presented through colors, drawings, floor plans, perspectives, sketches, electrical schemes and schedules for furniture, appliances and finishes such as walls, carpeting, and ceilings.

She added that code standards of a building and whether a structure will be for commercial or residential use are also considered when creating a design.

"The final stage is to present your work. The client reviews it, and then you go about reforming it," Mutwalli said.

A plan for a brokerage firm designed for national competition is included in the commercial designs exhibit.

Plans for Ryan Realty, a real estate firm, and an information booth in the Union which would convert the booth into an ice cream parlor also were included in the exhibit.

A plan for Quarry Falls, a house created by studio IV, was the prominent residential design of the exhibit. A floor plan drawing and scale model were displayed, along with plans for electrical arrangement and utilization of the house's interior.

The last phase of the design was a board on which samples of some of the actual materials that would go into the house were displayed. These included carpet, tile, wallpaper, and wood samples, as well as upholstery swatches and pictures of furniture.

Reaping profit from expertise

Students operate small businesses

By TOM STALLBAUMER
Collegian Reporter

Some K-State students have been prompted to transform their interests and specialized talents from hobbies into small businesses.

Steve Brown, sophomore in construction science; Ken McBean, freshman in business; and Rob Bundy, a Washburn University sophomore; are in the process of opening their own business — Wildcat Ironworks.

It will be a gym and is scheduled to open Aug. 1. Wildcat Ironworks will be located in the new Laramie Plaza in Aggieville.

"It will be a club where conditioning is achieved using free weights," Brown said. "There will be some Nautilus equipment, but the emphasis will be on free weights. We've also lifted on Nautilus equipment before, and felt the results weren't as good as free weights produced, so we decided to center our gym around free weights."

"We decided to open a gym because we wanted a place to work out," he said. "The Rec Center (L.P. Washburn Recreational Complex) weight room is always too crowded, and Ahearn Field House has hours that make it difficult to use those facilities."

The gym will have complete facilities, with separate locker rooms, a co-ed whirlpool and sauna, a suntan booth, exercise bikes, rowing machines, aerobic classes, lifting accessories, sports apparel, home fitness equipment and inversion equipment, Brown said.

"A trained staff will be hired to help individuals with their weight program," he said. "We plan to hire a woman to assist our female members because some women are uneasy about having a man help them with their weight-lifting program."

The three are offering several membership plans to spur student interest.

"There are no initial club fees," Brown said, "just a membership fee which we hope will best fit the individual's needs. Another thing we are doing is eliminating overcrowding by limiting our membership capacity to about 300, but that may change. We're not real sure yet how many people we can handle."

Setting up such a business requires much planning, Brown said.

"We began plans for Wildcat Ironworks last September. It wasn't until just recently that we were sure we had financial backing," he said.

"We have received good response from people who have heard about the gym by word-of-mouth, and we have already started to put up posters telling people about us. We also have a T-shirt with our logo on it coming out soon."

Ironworks will not be the only student-owned business in Manhattan.

Chris Eadens, junior in electrical engineering, operates a graphics design service out of his home.

"I kind of got started doing it by accident," he said. "I just stumbled across it. I was selling hats, when someone else mentioned they needed a design for a hat, so I worked up a graphic. They liked it and bought the prints. That was my first job."

"I'm still working on expanding the business, but it depends a lot on my class load. Right now it is a home operation, but I hope to branch out. I'd like to hire some people to do the graphics for me and then (I would) move into the marketing and sales aspect of my products," Eadens said.

"I also hope to take advantage of my electrical engineering knowledge and go into computer graphics eventually," he said.

Eadens said it is difficult for him to earn a consistent income with his business, and if he doesn't find a job with a company after graduation, he would like to develop this business.

"I'd much rather be doing this during the school year than working a part-time job," he said. "This way, I can make the same amount of money working a few hours a week as I would putting in many times more hours working at minimum wage."

Eadens said he does not feel threatened by competition.

"There are very low fixed costs," he said. "Basically what I'm selling is my expertise. I've gained a lot of confidence and experience in the last couple of years, and I know my prices are competitive. Most companies that design logos, such as those in Kansas City, charge about 30 percent more than I do."

Eadens said he sets prices according to the individual job.

"Most jobs take from 50 to 100 hours of work, which takes at least a month to complete," he said. "I did do one job which took much longer, and I figured, on that job, I did make less than minimum wage, but that doesn't happen very often."

Hospital offers to X-ray boxes of Girl Scout cookies

Concern over recent discoveries of pins in Girl Scout cookies has prompted The St. Mary Hospital to offer to X-ray cookies.

Nancy Davis, director of nursing, said there have not yet been requests for such X-rays.

"To the best of my knowledge, no X-rays have been requested," she said. "However, I realize there has been some local concern about the cookies."

The X-rays will be performed for no charge as a community service of the hospital.

Those wishing to have cookies X-rayed may go to the main desk of the hospital, 1823 College Ave.

Personnel Services to gather directory data

Information for the 1984-1985 Campus Directory is being collected from each college and department by a different procedure than that used in past years.

"This year the Personnel Services office is gathering the information for the directory," Beverly Toliver, accounting clerk for Student Publications, said.

In the past, the personnel office sent a computer printout of information about faculty and staff members to Student Publications, which would then send each department their respective listing and ask for corrections, Karen Osborn, clerk for Student Publications, said.

The information, along with the corrections, would then be typed into a computer.

The student publication offices at most colleges do not do this paperwork, Dave Adams, director of Student Publications, said. Generally, the personnel office is responsible for it.

"For the last four or five years Student Publications has done this (gather information)," Adams said. "This started when the information from the personnel office became inaccurate. Bill Brown, who was director of Student Publications at the time, decided that if the directory was going to be put out it was going to be accurate."

The computer system is improved and will help the personnel office solve the problem of inaccuracy.

"We will still be the coordinator of the student directory," Adams said. "We tap the registrar's files for the student information, and now we will do the same with the personnel office for faculty and staff information."

"Personnel Services has taken over this responsibility because it is important for them to have an accurate and up-to-date list of faculty and staff members," he said.

According to a personnel circular, people who will not be included in the new directory are "persons working at locations other than Manhattan, employees working less than 50 percent time, temporary and emergency classified employees, and graduate student employees."

"These people have never been included because the people in those positions change frequently," Adams said.

Optometrist eyes side effects of bent frames

By GREG PROSKE
Collegian Reporter

Many people in the United States and in other countries may have backaches and bad posture because the frames of their eyeglasses are bent.

Manhattan optometrist Norbert Stigge has written a report about an experiment he conducted to determine how bent frames, which cause the center of the lenses to be off-center, affect the entire body. His report was published in the Kansas Journal of Optometry in July 1983.

"I got the idea for the study several years earlier, in the early 1960s. I would visit elementary schools, and I'd listen to the footsteps of children as they walked across the gym floor," Stigge said.

"Some of the children would clomp heavier on one side than the other when they walked, and I knew these children had bent glasses' frames," he said.

He said that a person's eyes are supposed to see through the center of the lenses where vision is focused.

"Lenses are prisms. They bend light. When frames are bent, they move the center of the lens up, down or to either side," Stigge said.

When vision is directed any place other than the center of the lens, it is bent in some direction dependent upon where the center has been moved, he said.

People who have bent frames often can't tell their vision has been altered.

"The more powerful the lens, the bigger the discrepancy will be with bent vision," Stigge said.

To determine the effects of the discrepancy, a 34-year-old male was first trained to use his vision to fuse vertical prisms in the amount of three diopters (the power of prism or lens), regardless of whether the prisms were positioned face up or face down before either eye. This was done to see how the subject would react to this type of lenses.

"We took an X-ray of the guy standing without shoes. Then, we fitted him with glasses with a one-diopter base down on the left eye," Stigge said.

This is equal to the prismatic effect induced by off-center spectacles, he said.

"The subject was to wear these glasses every waking hour for 10 days. Then, we would take another X-ray.

"The experiment lasted seven days. The subject came in and said he was feeling severe back pains on the seventh day of the study. He couldn't straighten his back," Stigge said.

"We took X-rays of him standing again and compared the pictures. His entire spine on down to the pelvic girdle was twisted. He had developed what is called an S-type spinal curvature," he said.

He emphasized that a one-diopter disparity is not powerful, and the more powerful the lens, the more disparity in vision there will be, thus having a greater effect on the body.

"I found that what we perceive in the world is so important that our bodies will adjust to how we see it. If we tilt our glasses, our horizon is tilted. So, we tilt our vision to adapt. Somewhere our bodies have to adjust," Stigge said.

He said contact lenses also can become off-center and cause the same discrepancies in vision that bent frames can. This happens when they slide on the eye.

Athlete's foot-like fungus curbs chinch bug numbers

Chinch bugs at the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station are being exposed to a fungus similar to athlete's foot as part of an experiment to control the pests.

The fungus can be an effective biological control against the chinch bug, said William Ramoska, insect pathologist at the experiment station. The fungus' technical name is beauveria bassiana, and unlike athlete's foot contracted by humans, it can be fatal to the insects, he said.

Chinch bugs are insects that resemble large gnats, Ramoska said.

The fungus attacks the soft, moist areas of the skin, joints and body openings of the insects just like athlete's foot does to people.

Chinch bugs are a problem in wheat and sorghum fields. The damage they cause costs consumers and producers millions of dollars each year, Ramoska said.

An experienced lawn maintenance worker can drive down almost any street and point out lawns invaded by chinch bugs, he said.

Use of the fungus is a biological control method. It does not eliminate the entire population of chinch bugs, but keeps the number of chinch bugs low without upsetting the natural balance, he said.

There is a chemical used to eliminate chinch bugs, but it is not used effectively because it soon dissipates and loses its effectiveness in the soil.

"Insects are susceptible to all sorts of diseases and viruses, just as humans are," Ramoska said. "And, just as all humans do not die when infected with a disease, neither do all insects."

Insects don't contract the same diseases as humans. However, there are similarities, he said.

Fighting for Funds...

Fighters leave the ring after a consolation fight Tuesday night.

Bill Phillips, Alpha Kappa Lambda, pursues Trent McMahan, Sigma Chi, during preliminary action Monday night. Phillips beat McMahan and went on to win the flyweight division.

...Fraternity and pride

Call it War Between the Greeks.

Although it sounds more like a Hollywood action movie, the title best described the fifth annual Sig Ep Fite Nite, sponsored by Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity, Miller Beer and the Golden Gloves Association of America to raise money for the American Heart Association.

The room in the Elks Lodge, where the three day competition was held, shook with excitement as the crowd of nearly 500 people looked on.

For the boxers, the fights were more nerve-racking than exciting.

"I'm nervous as hell," Gary Jermain of Alpha Tau Omega, said. "This is the most pressure I've felt in my life."

Gary and his twin brother Jerry, also of ATO, each claimed championship wins.

Gary led off action in a bout against Pat Cunningham from Kappa Sigma. The fight began evenly before Gary landed several consecutive blows to Cunningham's head, causing the referee to stop the fight in the second round.

"Fighting's tough — it's really tiring," Gary said. "After I've won it (the championship) the last two years, people expect me to do well, so it's a lot of pressure."

Gary then took a place in his brother's corner to watch Jerry trade punches with Jay Jarrett from Sigma Nu.

The fight was a classic. Jarrett's left jab constantly found its mark to the side of Jerry's head, finally knocking him to the canvas.

The fight was even in the second round with each fighter receiving and dishing out their share of blows, but Jerry got Jarrett back pedaling in the third round and landed a superior number of punches to pull out the victory.

"Once you land that first punch, everything gets better. The prelim fights are tough because the fights are less controlled than the final fights, where the people have a little more experience," Jerry said. "I've been so nervous all week that I haven't been able to concentrate on classes."

"I think 50 percent of the energy you use is before the fight," Gary said. "Your legs get weak and you really tense up."

The brothers said formal boxing training isn't the key to their success — they don't have any — and they don't train extensively for the tournament.

"The less you train, the better," Jerry said. "We have six guys in the house in consecutive weight classes, so I've been able to spar, which helps you with actual fight experience."

"The two of us have been beating on each other for a while, which gives us a little edge," Gary added. "Everybody says the best fight they could have would be between us. I'd rather knock the hell out of him than anyone else."

But who would win?

"We're in different weight classes," Gary answered with a smile.

One group who enjoyed the fights was the officials, who made the long drive from Hutchinson all three nights to referee the bouts.

"We really look forward to this tournament," Gary Davis, president of the KansasOklahoma Golden Gloves, said. "This is my fourth year here, and we have more judges who want to come up every year. We really don't mind the drive because it's a lot of fun."

Davis said that while the competition is at a novice level, the fighters have something else going for them.

"They really go for it, and they have a lot of heart," he said. "Although they don't have much experience, these guys are really good athletes. I really enjoy watching them."

So did everyone else.

Men continue to struggle

Jayhawks net win over tennis team

K-State's men's tennis team dropped its spring season record to 2-10 with a 9-0 loss to the University of Kansas on Tuesday at Cottonwood Racquet Club.

The Wildcats again failed to win a set as they dropped their second consecutive Big Eight dual match.

In singles competition, the Jayhawks' top player, Mike Wolf, defeated K-State's Kris James, 6-1, 6-1.

Wolf, a freshman from Kansas City, is a top area player who has earned a spot at the Olympic qualifying tournament. According to James, Wolf is already one of the conference's top players.

"He's beaten both Oklahoma and Oklahoma State's top players, who were considered the top players in the conference before the start of the season," James said. "He's the kind of player who doesn't have many weaknesses. He's really tough to hit a passing shot by, and he had great touch on the ball."

In other singles play, No. 2 Mark Hassenflu fell to KU's Michael Center, 6-0, 6-4, while Scott Sandlin lost 6-1, 6-4 to Jim Synett.

Richard Blevins, playing in the No. 4 position, was defeated by Charles Stearn, 6-1, 6-3, while No. 5

Zane Burke was blanked by Scott Alexander, 6-0, 6-0. No. 6 Clark Renfro rounded out singles play, losing to John Cochran, 6-4, 6-3.

In doubles play, the K-State's No. 1 team of James and Blevins were defeated by Wolf and Center, 6-0, 6-2. In No. 2 play, Hassenflu and Sandlin lost to Synett and Stearn, 6-1, 6-0, while Burke and Jim Medina were defeated by Alexander and Franco Caciottolini, 6-1, 6-1.

"We didn't play really well; it was just one of those days," James said. "We lost to them 7-2 in the fall, and we thought we might be able to pick up a couple of wins, but none of the scores were really close. We could have done better, but we have to keep our heads up."

The team will have a chance to break back into the winning column today when it faces Johnson County Community College at 2 p.m. at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Complex.

"Earlier in the year we picked up a couple of wins against Drake and Bethany which gave us a lot of confidence," James said. "We have such a young team — we have four freshmen. If we can win against Johnson County it should really help our attitude."

K-State's No. 1 singles player Kris James returns service during a cross-state tennis contest with the University of Kansas on Tuesday at Cottonwood Racquet Club. James lost the match 6-1, 6-1.

Nicklaus to perform in Masters

By The Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Jack Nicklaus thinks he can win the Masters.

Again. The simple fact of his presence at the Augusta National Golf Club is proof.

"If I didn't think I could be competitive, if I didn't think I had a chance to win, I wouldn't be playing," said Nicklaus, the man who has compiled a career record in golf's major events that not only is unmatched, is, in fact, unapproached.

The Golden Bear counts a record five Masters victories among his collection of 17 major professional titles. His last Masters triumph came in 1975. In the years since, however, he's been second twice, third on another occasion and missed a playoff by a stroke in still another.

He came close in those years, very close to adding still another major title. But he missed. Just barely. His last official victory came in the 1982 Colonial National Invitational.

Since then, Nicklaus

— had the 1982 U.S. Open title snatched from his grasp by Tom Watson's historic chip-in birdie on the 17th hole at Pebble Beach.

— had a chance to win both the 1983 Honda and Bay Hill classics, and finished second and fifth, respectively.

— fell one stroke short of gaining a playoff for the 1983 Canadian Open championship, the one big title that eluded him.

— was second in the 1983 World Series of Golf.

— was in position to win the 1984 Los Angeles Open but finished third when David Edwards shot a closing 64, and — was the victim of Tom Kite's closing rush and finished second in the 1984 Doral Open.

In short, he's done everything — but win.

"That's the one thing lacking," in his preparations, Nicklaus said before a practice session at the Augusta National Golf Club, site of the elite tournament that begins Thursday.

"I've had a pretty good pre-Masters. I've had competition. I've had competition in contention. I've played well at times. I've done almost everything I wanted to do. I'm as ready as I'll ever be."

U.S. groups called 'terrorist' Lady 'Cats standouts quit basketball squad

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union charged Tuesday that U.S. groups opposing Soviet participation in the 1984 Summer Olympics are "terrorists" and accused a State Department spokesman of lying when he said the Reagan administration doesn't sanction the groups.

The charges came one day after the Soviet National Olympic Committee requested an emergency meeting of the International Olympic Committee to discuss its complaints about the Los Angeles Games.

Soviet sports officials say the United States is requiring Soviet athletes to apply for visas in violation of the Olympic charter, which says official delegations only have to show their Olympic cards to enter the host country.

The Soviets also have complained about U.S. groups that plan demonstrations to oppose Soviet participation in the Olympics, and a group that has said it will try to persuade Communist-bloc athletes to defect during the Games.

The Soviet statement issued Monday demanded the United States take steps to prevent such activities.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said in Washington that the Reagan administration will uphold its guarantees to respect the Olympic charter. State Department spokesman John Hughes said all accredited Soviet athletes will be allowed "unhindered entry."

He said the United States "will take whatever steps are necessary to safeguard the security of all" Olympic participants. He also said the Reagan administration in no way sanctions the anti-Soviet groups, but that their lawful activities are protected by First Amendment free-speech guarantees.

The official news agency Tass noted Hughes' comments, and charged that "he lied at least twice."

The Soviet complaints about travel arrangements center on a letter sent by the U.S. Embassy in Moscow to Soviet officials this month explaining procedures for entering the United States.

According to the Soviets, the letter said visas would be required. But a U.S. Embassy official said the letter only requested a list of Soviet Olympic delegation members so the Los Angeles Organizing Committee could issue Olympic cards that would allow members to enter the United States without visas.

The spokesman, who asked not to be named in keeping with embassy policy, said the Soviet delegation is being treated "exactly the same" as all other national groups.

Tass issued a report Tuesday night quoting LAOOC president Peter Ueberroth as "admitting" that the U.S. Embassy had asked Soviet athletes to apply for visas.

On Monday, Ueberroth dismissed all of the Soviet allegations and said visas wouldn't be required.

Lady 'Cats standouts quit basketball squad

Two starters for the 1983-1984 K-State women's basketball team have quit the squad, Head Coach Lynn Hickey announced Tuesday.

Junior center Angie Bonner and sophomore center Tina Dixon will not return for the 1984-1985 season but will continue their education. Both cited personal reasons, a lack of enjoyment in the game and a desire to concentrate on other areas of interest for the rest of their college careers as reasons for leaving the squad. Bonner and Dixon have indicated they do not plan to attend any other university to play basketball.

"It is definitely a big loss to our program," Hickey said. "But right now we are just concentrating heavily on recruiting. At this time, we feel that we will be able to bring in some very talented athletes to fill the void."

The Lady 'Cats, who finished their regular season as co-champions of the Big Eight Conference with the University of Missouri and who won the Big Eight post-season tournament, will lose Bonner's team-leading 15.1 scoring average. Bonner was a member of the second team all-Big Eight Conference squad, the Big Eight all-tournament squad and the District V all-regional team. Dixon, who averaged 12.3 points per contest and led the team's rebounding with 6.9 rebounds a game, was also a member of the Big Eight all-tournament team.

In departing from the team, Bonner and Dixon join Barbara Gilmore and Sheronda Jenkins, who also left this season's squad for various reasons. Jenkins was dismissed from the team after she failed to attend practices before the Lady 'Cats' appearance in the post-season tournament.

Royals fall to Orioles

By The Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Cal Ripken Jr. drove in four runs with a pair of homers as the defending World Series champion Baltimore Orioles posted their first victory of the season in five tries, beating the Kansas City Royals 6-3 Tuesday night.

A three-run Ripken blast, following a two-out error by Kansas City third baseman Greg Pryor, gave the Orioles a 5-0 lead in the second inning. His leadoff homer in the fifth was his third of the season.

Scott McGregor, 1-1, allowed a two-run homer in the third to Pat Sheridan and Don Slaught's RBI single with the bases loaded in the fourth.

Gloves pop at Sig Ep Fite Nite finals

The leather was popping Tuesday night at the final night of the fifth annual Sig Ep Fite Nite sponsored by Sigma Phi Epsilon, Miller Beer and the Golden Gloves Association of America to raise money for the American Heart Association.

The amateur competition at the Elks Lodge was limited to K-State fraternity members.

In the final bout of the evening, Brian Crane, Pi Kappa Phi, stopped Dan Allen, Sigma Nu, in the third round after landing blow after blow to Allen's right temple to capture the championship of the light heavyweight division.

Bill Phillips, Alpha Kappa Lambda, won the flyweight title after stopping Mark Barbee, Alpha Tau Omega. Phillips landed several punches to Barbee's head before the referee stopped the fight midway through the second round.

Frank Ornelas, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, won a close decision over Pat

McKernan, ATO, to win lightweight title.

The referee stopped welterweight bout between Gary Jermain, ATO, and Pat Cunningham, Kappa Sigma, in the second round and declared Jermain the winner.

In a tough battle, Jerry Jermain,

Baseball squad loses to Cowboys

The K-State baseball team continued its fall on hard times Monday when it lost a pair of games to the fifth-ranked Oklahoma State Cowboys, 7-0 and 10-1. The losses extended the Wildcats' losing streak to 14 and dropped their Big Eight Conference record to 0-8 and overall record to 6-14.

In the sixth inning of the first game, a possible Wildcat rally was thwarted when, trailing 5-0, K-State loaded the bases with no outs.

ATO, — Gary Jermain's twin brother — beat Jay Jarrett, Sigma Nu, by a unanimous decision to win the light middleweight championship.

Bryan Bayouth, ATO, and Brook Redd, SAE, fought toe-to-toe in the final round of their middleweight

However the possible big inning was snuffed out quickly as Cary Colbert popped out and Brian Bascue hit into a double play.

Pete Incavaglia and Bryan Kostishion each homered for Oklahoma State.

OSU's John Farrell, 6-1, received the win, and Mike Wilkerson took the loss, dropping his record to 1-4.

In the second game, Oklahoma State scored a run in the first inning, two in the second, four in the third and three in fifth to cruise past the Wildcats.

K-State's lone score came on a home run by catcher Steve Goodwin.

The Cowboys' Mike Trapasso improved to 4-1, and K-State's Gerry Zimmerman fell to 2-3.

The Wildcats will meet Marymount College in a double-header at 1 p.m. today at Frank Myers Field.

The University of Oklahoma is scheduled to visit K-State in Big Eight competition Saturday.

K-State oarsman to hold auction

The K-State crew team will hold an auction from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. today in front of the Union.

Among the items to be auctioned are an official pen from the office of Kansas Sen. Bob Dole, a poster autographed by Gov. John Carlin and a hat from K-State President Duane Acker.

Auctioneers will be Bob and Bill Wilson of Wilson Realty. Proceeds from the auction will be used to support the crew during the 1984 season.

South America moves closer to democracy

By The Associated Press

SANTIAGO, Chile — Democracy has a new Latin beat, one echoing up and down a continent.

You can hear it in the clangor of pots and pans in Chile, in the samba drums of young Brazilian marchers, in the chants of election crowds in Argentina and demonstrators in Uruguay.

Across South America, the military lockstep is breaking down.

Where only two elected civilian governments existed five years ago, a half-dozen now debate and decide their nations' future in the open light of parliaments and the press. And pressure is mounting on four remaining military governments to hasten their withdrawal to the barracks.

"Civilianization" is contagious. Last October's elections in Argentina inspired democrats in nearby Uruguay and Chile. And those movements now encourage others, even raising faint hopes in Paraguay, ironclad domain of strongman Gen. Alfredo Stroessner.

Analysis

"We have to unite all the opposition around a single, peaceful action plan, just as the Chileans are doing now," Paraguayan opposition leader Juan Manuel Benitez Florentin told a reporter visiting Asuncion. South America's new democracies may operate in the shadow of a military that reserves a "right" to intervene again. But South American politicians, academics and others say growing public awareness, international condemnation of military repression and the armed forces' own weariness of grappling with society's ills may slow the historic cycle of military coups.

The most bitter showdown is here in Chile, the beautiful land of 11 million people strung slenderly along the continent's Pacific coast.

Democratic roots may run deepest here — Chileans claim a 130-year electoral tradition. But the military ruler — the glowering Gen. Augusto Pinochet — may also be the most immovable.

A protest movement to topple the authoritarian president sprang to life a year ago in the dusty slums and on the stately boulevards of this Old World-style capital. Developments in 1984 may determine whether the Marxist left or capitalist center leads the opposition, and whether strikes and demonstrations can force the army to abandon the general.

The battle lines are clearly drawn. "We will never have a dialogue with Pinochet," Gabriel Valdes, leader of the centrist Democratic Alliance coalition, said in a recent interview.

"The public keeps saying, 'Enough! Enough!'"

A Pinochet spokesman, Alfonso Marquez de la Plata, government secretary general, said the regime is willing to discuss changes in Pinochet's long-established plan for a slow return to democracy.

"But the opposition says, 'We are the only ones who have the truth, everything we say is right,'" Marquez de la Plata said. "This is the antithesis of dialogue."

Not all the opposition is free to protest or make dialogue, however.

From his 17th-floor office, Marquez de la Plata can see the grimy city prison where one key anti-Pinochet figure — Marxist opposition front leader Manuel Almendra — has been jailed since Feb. 15 for calling publicly for Pinochet's ouster.

The 68-year-old president mixes repression with concession as he maneuvers to maintain the power the Chilean military seized in a bloody coup Sept. 11, 1973, when they brought down the elected government of President Salvador Allende, a Marxist who was pulling Chile sharply leftward. Allende and as many as 10,000 other Chileans died in the coup and its aftermath.

The Pinochet decade has lurched from boom to bust.

As the economy soared in 1980, "El General" went to the people with a referendum on his plan for returning Chile to democracy — over a 17-year period. Chileans approved it two to one.

Within a year Chile slipped into a disastrous depression — unemployment reached 25 percent — and many Chileans' apathy gave way to anger, finally overflowing into "National Protest Days" of strikes and rallies staged monthly beginning

Officials adopt proposal to end mining of ports in Nicaragua

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House Foreign Affairs Committee overwhelmingly condemned the CIA-directed mining of Nicaraguan harbors Wednesday, even as Reagan administration officials said privately that the mining probably would not be resumed.

The committee adopted a non-binding resolution against spending U.S. funds for the mining operation on a 31-3 vote less than 24 hours after the Republican-led Senate approved a similar measure by an 84-12 margin.

The dissenting votes were cast by Republican Reps. Henry Hyde of Illinois, Mark Siljander of Michigan and Gerald B. Solomon of New York.

The House Rules Committee agreed to a request by Rep. Dante B. Fascell, D-Fla., chairman of the Foreign Affairs panel, to schedule the resolution for action by the full House today.

Rep. Edward Boland, D-Mass., chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, which also had to approve the request for action today, said the committee voted by a party-line margin of 9-5 to do so.

Boland also told the Rules Committee that the intelligence panel was briefed on the CIA role in the mining as long ago as Jan. 31. He said this was after the mining had begun. Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said earlier that his panel was not briefed on the issue. The administration contends it kept the intelligence panels advised.

The House resolution, similar to the one approved by the Senate, expressed "the sense of Congress that no additional funds be used to mine the ports or territorial waters of Nicaragua." The resolution does not carry the weight of law.

Residence hall fees may increase in fall

Students living in K-State residence halls may face a 6 to 7 percent rate increase in housing costs for the 1984-1985 school year.

The tentative 1984-1985 budget for the Department of Housing was presented at the Housing Council meeting Wednesday. A final budget is expected in October.

The tentative budget estimates residence hall rates will increase by 6.6 percent, or $60 per semester. Cooperative housing costs would be raised to $750 per semester from the current $700.

"This (tentative budget) may have to be severely revised," Tom Frith, director of housing, said.

The budget for utilities and communications were increased by 10 percent. Many who attended the meeting said the actual increases would be closer to 30 percent.

Chet Peters, vice president for student affairs, also noted that this proposal does not include deferred maintenance, because the total maintenance costs will be budgeted next fall.

The tentative budget was prepared with an intended occupancy rate of 95 percent. Only 89 percent of the halls are currently occupied. However, this percentage is lower than at the beginning of the semester due to internships and student teaching assignments, Frith said.

Jerry Katlin, graduate in public administration, asked how the housing department would ensure that freshmen live in residence halls or greek houses.

"The statement regarding the residency hall requirement has been more prominently displayed in brochures," Frith said. "Now that space exists, it (freshman residency in halls) will be a requirement." The requirement does not apply to freshmen who are over age 21, living at home, veterans or married.

Frith said high school guidance counselors have been advised of the rules, as well as local landlords. Letters also are being sent to students who are applying for admission without making an housing commitment.

"The more vacancies exist, the tighter the rules are," Frith said.

The council also discussed progress on the remodeling of Van Zile Hall, particularly accessibility for the handicapped.

Frith reported the plans have been drawn and approved and are now at the state architect's office. The plans are scheduled to be bid on by contractors early next month.

"Around the first of June, contractors can start moving in," Frith said.

Speech team raises funds for nationals

By KIMBERLY STOLLE
Collegian Reporter

By "walking their way to nationals," members of the individual events speech tournament team plan to raise final donations before K-State sponsors its first National Individual Events Speech Tournament this weekend.

Beginning at 3:30 p.m. Friday, 12 students will walk to the Manhattan Holiday Inn Holidome with their luggage in tow. The students plan to raise money by receiving pledges for each mile walked as they prepare for their participation in the tournament, Lynne Ross, director of individual events and instructor of speech, said.

Determined to treat this tournament like all others, the team will move into the Holidome for the duration of the tournament.

With 105 colleges and universities preregistered, K-State will play host to approximately 540 students from across the United States for the tournament. Within a four-day period, 799 entries will be performed, Ross said.

To qualify for nationals, individuals must either be in the top 10 percent of their district or must place consistently high in three invitational tournaments.

"It's pretty rigorous to qualify to attend nationals," Ross said. "In terms of how tough it really is, K-State has 21 entries at the tournament. And we are the seventh largest, in terms of numbers of entries at this tournament. We're excited. Our odds are pretty good."

"There are two schools that have overwhelming numbers of entries. George Mason University at Fairfax, Va. has 65 entries, and Bradley University at Peoria, Ill. has 60 entries. So, they're the giants. And the rest of us are trying to catch up," Ross said.

K-State began its individual events speech squad eight years ago. Within the last five years the squad has earned a strong, consistent reputation, she said.

"This is the first time we have even put in a bid to host the national tournament. They do this on a bid system and select the site two years in advance. It's really quite an honor to be selected as a site for a national tournament," Ross said.

K-State was chosen as the site of the tournament after consideration of a list of criteria including facilities available, hotel accommodations, meal provisions, hired judges and staff members and a location accessible to public transportation. Most participants will fly to Kansas City and rent cars to drive to Manhattan, she said.

The tournament includes 10 events, but the maximum number of events an individual may enter is six. These events include: impromptu speaking, informative speaking, prose interpretation, dramatic duo, extemporaneous speaking, persuasion speaking, after-dinner speaking, communication analysis, dramatic interpretation and poetry interpretation.

First rounds begin Saturday morning. The finals will be held Monday, and the awards assembly will begin at 3:30 p.m. Monday in the Union Forum Hall. All rounds are open to the public.

The top six places of each event will be awarded a trophy. Ten pentathlon trophies also will be awarded.

Reagan visits Missouri auto assembly plant

By The Associated Press

CLAYCOMO, Mo. — President Reagan told autoworkers at an assembly plant Wednesday that the economy has recovered and people have gone back to work because "all of us...have hung tough" and ignored those who said it couldn't be done.

In remarks after Reagan had lunch in the hourly workers' cafeteria and toured the assembly line of a modernized Ford plant in Clay County outside Kansas City, the president said his effort to "rebuild America from the bottom up" hasn't been easy.

"Times have been rough, and yes, the recession was much deeper and longer than almost anyone predicted," Reagan said. "But these problems had been building up for 20 years, and we were determined to find a real economic cure, not just resort — as they had so often in the past — to another political quick fix."

And in a jab at his political opponents who accuse him of a lack of compassion, he said, "There's no compassion in snake oil cures."

"All of us, working together and ignoring the gloomcriers and pundits who said it couldn't be done, have hung tough," Reagan added.

While Reagan visited the Claycomo plant, which the White House had selected as a model of resurgence in the auto industry, the leading Democratic contender for his job, Walter F. Mondale, toured a Chrysler plant across the state in Fenton. Reagan stopped at that plant a year ago to view the evidence of a recovery that was just then getting under way.

Many of the several hundred workers gathered at the end of the assembly line to hear Reagan's speech wore blue and white "Mondale" baseball caps that had been handed out earlier at the plant gate by the United Auto Workers.

Mondale's trip was strictly political — the Missouri Democratic caucuses are a week away — whereas the president's trip to Claycomo and Dallas, where he is to visit a housing site today, was billed by the White House as an official visit and therefore paid for by the taxpayers and not the Reagan reelection committee.

But it would be difficult to distinguish Reagan's remarks to the autoworkers from those he delivers at political events such as campaign fund-raisers. The message almost always is: The economy is on the mend and the Reagan program should get the credit for it.

Honor society hosts conference

K-State's chapter of Phi Alpha Theta International Honor Society will hold a regional conference on campus Saturday.

Papers will be given from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. in Cardwell 120, 123 and 124. The two best papers, which will focus on original research, will receive awards.

The public is invited.

Committee organizes canoe trip

A canoeing trip on Buffalo National River in northwestern Arkansas is being planned for K-State students, faculty and staff for Easter weekend, April 21 and 22.

The trip will cost $40, which includes canoes, paddles, jackets, canoe bags, six meals and cooking equipment.

Sign-ups for the trip will continue in the Union Activities Center until Friday.

Students aid project development

Some K-State students are working with the Meadowcreek Project this semester under the guidance of Gary Coates, associate professor of architecture, and David Seamon, assistant professor of architecture.

Meadowcreek is a center for education and research in ecology, agriculture, renewable energy and the ethical, social, economic and political aspects of sustainable settlement.

The class traveled to Arkansas to study the Ozarks site, discuss the building program, and take part in portions of a month-long program of lectures and workshops at Meadowcreek to explore the meaning of "place."

Other speakers discussed folklore, anthropology, philosophy, theology, economics, geography, conservation and architecture.

Coates had earlier presented a lecture at Meadowcreek on "The Expression of Place in Architecture" and Seamon addressed "The Phenomenology of Place." During the visit Coates spoke on "Architectural Planning."

Throughout the semester, students are preparing a plan for the development of the Meadowcreek Project site and designing elements within the plan.

Big Lakes center to sell plants

The Big Lakes Developmental Center will hold a plant sale from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Thursday at the University For Man House.

Included in the sale will be cabbage, broccoli, cauliflower, lettuce and early tomatoes. Hanging baskets, foliage plants and bedding plants such as marigolds and geraniums also will be sold.

The plants are grown at the K-State greenhouses by developmentally disabled men and women from Riley, Geary, Clay and Pottawatomie counties who attend the Big Lakes Adult Training Center in Manhattan. These clients receive training in horticulture as part of their program at the center.

Proceeds from the sale will go back into the Big Lakes program. This sale is held in conjunction with UFM and K-State.

Former representative to speak

Former Rep. Paul "Pete" McCloskey, R-California, will speak at 2 p.m. April 17 in the Union Big Eight Room on "Reagan's Foreign Policy in the Mideast."

McCloskey was a member of the House of Representatives from 1967 to 1982. He was known as a liberal Republican who spoke out on his concern for the environment and objection to the Vietnam War.

McCloskey, whose trip is sponsored by the Association of Former Members of Congress and the Department of Political Science, will visit journalism and political science classes Monday and Tuesday. He also will be the featured speaker at the annual political science banquet Tuesday evening.

The banquet is open to all political science students and will honor winners of the Cobb, Douglas, McCoy and Samarrai scholarships.

Sororities compete in '84 Derby Days

By SUZANNE LARKIN
Staff Writer

K-State greets this week are combining competitive activities with a cooperative spirit and compassion to help needy children.

The Sigma Chi Derby Days, sponsored each year by the Delta Upsilon Chapter of Sigma Chi fraternity, began Tuesday and will continue through Saturday.

For most, the week is one of fun-filled activities. But there is a serious side to all the playful competition.

Derby Days is a service project for Wallace Village, a center for treatment and rehabilitation of children with learning disabilities or emotional problems. Derby Days began at K-State in 1969 but has been a national tradition of the Sigma Chi fraternity since 1930, when it was initiated at the University of California.

Located in Broomfield, Colo., near Denver, the village concentrates on a segment of the population whose needs are seldom realized nor met. According to a Derby Days informational booklet, children with minimal brain damage, estimated to be possibly 5 percent of the total elementary and secondary school population, are treated there.

The booklet states that the village has served children between the ages of 5 and 18 in both its residential and day treatment programs from each of the 50 states, Canada and other nations. The program is now in its 40th year.

An important part of the village's philosophy stresses that these children are not mentally retarded, but rather have suffered brain damage which affects specific areas of behavior. In all other areas the children are believed to have normal or above normal intellectual potential. In most cases, it is hoped that the child will be returned to a regular classroom or vocational situation within three to five years.

Although events may vary among chapters, the central theme of Derby Days is the same — to strengthen the ties of friendship between sororities and with the men of Sigma Chi, said John Nuzman, senior in marketing and Derby Days chairman.

"We began in December putting everything together. A whole lot of work and planning went into Derby Days, but the fun which we will all have participating and the results from Derby Days — the money we will be able to give to Wallace Village — will make all of the hard work well worth it," Nuzman said.

"We all become closer because we are all working toward a common

Officials mark monies for faculty pay raise

An average merit-based salary increase of 7 percent for K-State faculty members will be assigned this week and sent to the Kansas Board of Regents for final approval.

In January, Gov. John Carlin's budget recommendations included a 6 percent increase for faculty salaries. This 6 percent was the figure used to tentatively assign merit raises, K-State President Duane Acker said Wednesday.

"Faculty salaries are being finalized this week by department heads and (college) deans," he said. "The first step was taken several weeks ago, and that provided merit pay adjustments utilizing a 6 percent increase in salary funds that had been a part of the governor's budget message."

The governor also recommended additional funds for needed enrichment.

"That was translated by the Legislature into an additional 1 percent of salary funds, which is about $500,000," Acker said.

A University-wide policy for distribution of the remaining funds was the result of deliberations by the Dean's Council, the Budget and Program Planning Group and the Administrative Council — the last two of which include faculty members, Acker said.

"That policy is that the final 1 percent be used to correct existing salary inequities, and to meet market competition, in the case of both current faculty in high market areas and to increase the salary level of vacant positions that must be filled for the coming year," he said.

Inequities have resulted when faculty members were hired for salaries which were too low for the position or not competitive with those elsewhere, Acker said.

The extra funds will be used to increase the salaries for about one-third of the faculty positions, including department heads and directors.

"There may be a few instances where these guidelines cannot be met, and these will be reviewed by the provost and dean or appropriate vice president on an individual basis," he said.

The merit pay assignments will probably be reviewed by the Regents at their May meeting, Acker said.

Student Senate to continue tentative allocations today

Student Senate will continue tentative allocations tonight at 6 p.m. in the Union Big Eight Room. Organizations to be reviewed, the amount requested and the Finance Committee recommendation are as follows:

- U-Learn: $12,770; $10,523.80
- Associated Students of Kansas at K-State: $630; $444.40
- KSDB-FM Radio: $12,027.94; $11,087.94
- University for Man: $10,145.08; $9,586.48

- MEChA: $618; $379.56
  - Student Governing Association: $31,558.24; $30,368.78
- In other business, senate is scheduled to:

- Approve ASK delegates; to represent K-State in the April 14 Legislative Assembly at Lawrence.
- Anyone may attend senate meetings. Guests may speak during the open period at the beginning of each meeting.

Speaker relates women's communications role

The progress of women in communications and the guarantee of a free and responsible press are the main concerns of Women In Communications Inc.

This view was given by WICI national president Lynn Martin Haskin at a joint dinner Wednesday at the University Ramada Inn with the K-State Department of Journalism and Mass Communications to celebrate both organizations' 75th anniversaries. Professional and student WICI members and K-State faculty members were present.

Haskin is assistant to the provost for academic planning and organization at Temple University in Philadelphia. She holds three degrees, including a doctorate in communications from Temple. She also is past president of the Philadelphia WICI professional chapter.

Past research she has performed includes a brief-impact study of pay inequities among Pennsylvania newswomen. She wrote a chapter on this subject in the book "Room With No View," a woman's guide to the men's world of the media. Haskin said she believes there has been an impact on inequities because of the book.

"Women are not the vice-presidents, the policy makers, the executive editors. They should be. The current administration in Washington has taken a relaxed attitude toward the progress of women," Haskin said.

WICI's goals are the same as they were when they began in 1909, she said. These goals are that women want equal opportunities for careers, equal access to education, the right to protect the First Amendment and to work for a free and responsible press and to recognize excellence in communications.

Haskin said that attempts to weaken the Freedom of Information Act have been made by the federal government. The media role in Grenada was small because the government released little information about the invasion.

MURPHY PRONOUNCED DEAD

The long and eventful life of the ninth Founding Father of Sigma Alpha Epsilon is over. Paddy Murphy has been declared dead by District Judge Jeffery Spicollee. Investigators have just begun to unravel the events leading up to Murphy's death. After successfully lobbying in Topeka against a bill that would raise the legal drinking age (Paddy always wanted as many drunks around him as possible) he headed towards Manhattan to celebrate. After several citations of the well known boozier Murphy went to Eskridge, Kan. to visit some livestock. He returned to Manhattan on Wed. and went directly to Aggie Lounge where he reportedly consumed 13 pitchers of beer and 4 dozen pickled eggs. After a lengthy and inebriated tour of Aggie, Murphy attempted to crash every sorority on campus (reports from sororities unprintable). After late night with Barb and Duane and a strange visit with Bessy from Call Hall, Murphy supposedly went to Tuttle Creek to wind surf around four in the morning. That's when tragedy struck. His clothes were found six miles north of the tubes in the river and his barn siding surf board and gunny sack sail were found smashed to bits on the rocks. Hundreds of fish lay belly up all over the lake, cause unknown.

Although he was never a pretty sight Paddy Murphy will be sorely missed by those who knew him. Murphy left no wife or children but he had a ban of brothers across the nation that will mourn his death.

The Last Will and Testament of Paddy Murphy will be read tonight at 1015 Denison. The presence of all members in good standing of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity and all Little Sisters of Minerva are requested. Paddy will be buried on Sat., April 14th.

Sports should include swimming

K-State has a fine facility for a non-revenue sport but lacks a team to use it. What sport? Swimming.

The Natatorium includes two full-size pools and a diving pool. It also has seating for both spectators and competitors. The Manhattan High School swim team uses the pools extensively for both practices and meets.

Financing is the roadblock to having a swim team at K-State. The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics is busy raising money for the new coliseum. Non-revenue sports, such as swimming and wrestling, probably would have received funding if the coliseum was financed by the state and not private donations.

The biggest expense of starting a swim team at K-State would be scholarships. This could be held to a minimum by recruiting current K-State students.

A second major expense would be hiring a coach. By recruiting a faculty member instead of adding another member to the coaching staff, this expense also could be held to a minimum.

The third largest expense would be travel. Allocations would be necessary for this. The rest of the expenses would be minimal because very little equipment is required to train for the sport.

If the athletic department can raise millions of dollars for a coliseum to fund basketball in, surely they can find funds for non-revenue sports such as swimming. By having a swim team, K-State athletics would have a more balanced program which would benefit students and increase school pride.

Censorship borders on paranoia

Unfortunate, but not unexpected, is another in the latest series of attempts at censorship by the Reagan administration.

According to the College Press Service, the administration would like to grant the Pentagon the power to authorize or disallow publication of research findings by college faculty working under government contracts.

The administration believes controlling what universities publish will prevent the Russians from unlawfully gaining access to new and advanced technology.

The Reagan administration is paranoid. The costly nuclear arms buildup is evidence of this, and now further proof exists. The government has no right to take away the First Amendment rights of free speech and free press for the glorified cause of national defense.

College athletes lose out in current system

Editor,

Re: Kevin Dale's column, "Amateur athletics shouldn't exist," in the April 10 Collegian.

An inaccurate rebuttal deserves a reply.

Dale's confirmation that only 15 players from the University of Nevada-Las Vegas teams in 10 years graduated indicates something is broken. He cites Tarkanian's son Danny as an example that college athletes can juggle their roles as student and competitor.

However, young Tarkanian is proof to the contrary. He received his doctorate in human behavior from U.S. International, yet played basketball at UNLV, clearly indicating the academic-athletic split I advocate.

In addition, the National Collegiate Athletic Association fifth-year clause that Dale cited is further proof that many student athletes are not successfully juggling the two roles.

But when is a college degree not a degree? When the graduate can't read his diploma. Creighton basketball player Kevin Ross graduated at the end of his playing career. He is now enrolled in Marva Collins' preparatory school in Chicago, learning how to read.

Dale should read Alan Page's interview in Kansas City Times last year, where he recalls numerous former Viking teammates who as college graduates could not read the team playbook.

When Dale compares Carl Lewis and Big Eight athletes, he only muddies the water. Lewis has an agent and a lawyer. High school seniors recruited by the Big Eight do not. Lewis signs contracts. Big Eight recruits sign letters of intent.

The NCAA cannot hire enough watchdogs to police the thousands of programs involved in intercollegiate competition. Even when the NCAA prevails, who loses? The young athlete.

Young athletes are sold a bill of goods that sells them short. Juggling implies compromise. I am concerned with the integrity of the academic community, which has been raped repeatedly, in spite of Dale's assertion that the system works.

Meaning of dead week lost in cramming

Editor,

With finals once again upon the students of K-State, we are reminded of the short time we have between the so-called dead week and finals week to review for finals. Again this year, dead week will be on Monday through Thursday and finals will start on Friday and continue through the following Wednesday, with only that Sunday free to study for exams.

Many of us will again be given new material during "dead week" which we will be expected to know for comprehensive finals during this period. Where has the "dead" in dead week gone? There seems to be a problem with the dead week policy at K-State.

Although it seems to be an unwritten policy for instructors to "not give new material during dead week," many instructors still do rush in a few more chapters or problems during time. If K-State is going to have a dead week, it should be treated as one. It should be a period of review and a curtailment of normal classroom activity.

Currently there is no policy for teachers to follow concerning dead week in the Faculty Handbook.

The Faculty Handbook should state that instructors can only review material that has already been previously covered before the first day of dead week. It should also plainly state that dead week be at least a four day period directly preceding finals week for the sole purpose of review.

In addition, teachers should be given the option to hold class for review or dismiss it and allow students to review on their own.

We must be able to retain as much information as possible if our education is to be a success. Are we really retaining it when we "cram" our review time in such a short period already congested with newly presented concepts and theorems? I don't think so.

Senate treats international council unfairly

Editor,

Tuesday night I attended the Student Senate meeting for allocation of funds and was truly insulted at the treatment of the International Coordinating Council. The lack of consideration the items in our budget were given, as well as our poor attitude of a majority of the senators, was appalling.

Special consideration needed to be given when deciding on the items in our budget. We are not one organization, but 16. Our funds must be distributed among all the member organizations. Senate did give ICC the funds for International Week, but what about funds for the other 15 groups?

Are all of those groups to be penalized because they did not go before the senate as separate groups? We could have, but in the spirit of cooperation, we did not. Instead of forcing senate to review 16 separate budgets, we came as a council. ICC saved senate a tremendous amount of time and trouble, and we were called "uncooperative."

ICC had reviewed its budget at least four times before the meeting, making its own budget cuts. It was also asked by the Finance Committee to submit an extra budget with updated figures detailing the money used during International Week, which had not taken place when the original budget was made. ICC was well prepared as well as cooperative.

I also object to the amount of time spent on our issues in debate. As the evening progressed, the senators did not want to hear the facts, but only to go home. ICC was therefore penalized for their position on the agenda, as well as the poor attitude of the Opening Pandora's box in space

Last week President Reagan announced the United States would not pursue a comprehensive ban on anti-satellite (ASAT) weapons. He claims "No arrangements or agreements beyond those already governing military activities in outer space have been found to date that are judged to be in the overall interest of the United States and its allies."

This statement is consistent with the administration's policy of building weapons now and negotiating arms control later.

Regardless of whether that approach is effective here on earth, the situation in space is radically different. The arms control issue in space is unique because mankind is in a position to halt this arms race before it has begun. The situation is analogous to the nuclear arms race before the first ICBM was deployed.

We must recognize it is Washington, not Moscow, whose military relies most on satellite communications. In Europe and the Middle East, the regions of the world the United States would most likely face the Soviets in a war, the Soviet Union would be able to direct its forces with land-based communications; the United States could not.

The United States has troops deployed in 63 countries around the globe, and a seven-ocean naval commitment, both of which are heavily dependent on satellites for communications.

If we were to engage in conflict with the Soviet Union in either the Middle East or Europe, it would be the United States, not the Soviet Union, who would suffer more from a loss of satellites.

Perhaps more ominous is the scenario in which one of the superpowers loses its ability to monitor the other's nuclear arsenal. Both the United States and the Soviet Union are increasingly dependent on satellites to perform this function. It would be destabilizing if either side, or both, lost their ability to monitor the other in time of war. Destabilization, in this sense, would mean heightened tension and an increased risk of a launch-on-warning situation.

Both sides would be much better off if they mutually agreed not to threaten the satellites they both depend on more and more every year.

Reagan cites the problem of verification as an obstacle to any space weapons treaty that cannot be overcome. Nothing could be further from the truth. By using the very satellites Reagan's policy will endanger, we can monitor the development of any ASAT system.

Neither side will deploy weapons they have not first tested, and when that testing is detected, we would know the treaty was being violated. After all, the United States has a marked edge in satellite reconnaissance technology, and the Russians are the ones who have proposed to ban ASAT systems.

Wouldn't the United States be much better off maintaining its edge in satellite reconnaissance technology rather than embarking on new fields of arms escalation?

What about the idea of the peaceful exploration of space? If we take this first step in militarizing the final frontier, I am afraid we will be forever committed to exploring our universe with a scientific experiment in one hand and a six-gun in the other.

Not only will the superpowers be forced to pay the cost of militarizing their space missions, but other space programs will suffer as well. The European and Japanese efforts, as well as any Third World projects, will have to add the cost of military defense to an already financially restricted space program.

Perhaps this is Reagan's long-term goal after all — to force the poorer nations to depend on the United States or Russia for defense in space, as they must now on earth.

The essence of the situation is that we are still in a position to prevent the introduction of arms into space. Reagan has placed his hand on the lid of Pandora's box and he appears determined to open it. Once that lid has been removed we will never be able to put it back on.

Shortcuts tempt selfish generation

WASHINGTON — Sensational revelations about a Wall Street Journal reporter's role in an insider stock trading scandal have probably prompted the question: "What else can you expect from a slimy press?"

But the story has turned out to be more than a lesson in journalistic ethics. In the sometimes lurid profiles of individuals involved in this financial industry soap opera, one can see a pattern of ambition and impatience common to a bulging baby-boom generation.

Thanks largely to the Journal's own confessions about skulduggery within its walls, we've already met many of the key actors:

— A reporter, R. Foster Winans, 35, assigned to the team responsible for a much-followed (on Wall Street, at least) gossip sheet, the Journal's "Heard on the Street" column. In the course of fielding and passing rumors on publicly-traded companies, Winans admitted, he leaked market-sensitive information contained in stories subsequently published by the Journal.

— Winans' homosexual lover, David Carpenter, 34, a former Journal employee and self-described "free-spender," who is said to have owned stock in companies about which the reporter wrote in "Heard on the Street" columns.

— A New York stock broker, Peter Brant, 31 and an avid polo player, who may have been a source for and made profits from columns written by Winans.

— A Manhattan attorney, David W. C. Clark, 34, the stock broker's apparent patron in social as well as business pursuits, who made six-figure profits on trades in stocks mentioned in "Heard on the Street" columns.

At issue for the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), which is investigating trading in 21 stock issues, are the gains the above-mentioned men and others may have made from advance knowledge of soon-to-be-published newspaper articles.

But many Americans may find importance in the personal stories of the primary characters. They're in their early- to mid-30s and ostensibly on the make. But they're into fun and fancy lifestyles that they can't afford without taking shortcuts or getting in over their heads.

Take, for example, the stock broker and his lawyer client. Both changed their surnames, jetted to London to buy their suits and hobnobbed with their wives among the aristocracy at exclusive clubs in New York.

However they did it, they were "doing right" by the standards of a generation geared toward retirement before 40.

Other occupations haven't been immune to population pressures. In journalism and law as in business, many members of the baby boom's peak (25 to 34) are entering an important phase of their working lives amid indications that their shear numbers may be the biggest obstacle of all. And let's be honest about it. Fierce competition only encourages shortcuts.

That may be the big lesson of the Wall Street Journal's insider trading scam. Once promised everything, we may be the most selfish of generations, but too pragmatic for our own good.

Drugs, psychotherapy may reduce symptoms

By KATHLEEN COLE
Collegian Reporter

Fear for most people is an emotion that creeps in and out of their lives like an unwelcome visitor.

For schizophrenics, however, the visitor comes to stay, bringing with it suspicion, paranoia, indifference and social isolation.

Schizophrenia is a disease that is frightening, not only to its victims, but also to their families, friends and co-workers. Those afflicted with the disease are known to act bizarrely, say strange things, withdraw from family and friends and attempt harm to themselves and others.

Victor (not his real name), has suffered with symptoms of schizophrenia for about 10 years. When he was a sophomore in college, he became depressed and unhappy about his life. His mother said he lost interest in school and friends and seemed to lack confidence in himself.

"We could sense his frustration," his mother said, "but his feelings didn't seem unlike those of other college students who choose to live away from home."

"We showed our support in the best way we could, but the stress continued to build," she said. "Then one night, Victor was playing his stereo at full volume in his dorm room. Another student on the floor came to his door and asked him to turn it down. The request enraged him so much that he picked the entire stereo system up and threw it out the window of his third story room. When the police arrived, Victor was standing in the shower, fully clothed, with the cold water running. He went willingly with them to the hospital," Victor's mother said.

The doctors called it a nervous breakdown, his mother said, but it was, in fact, just the beginning of what was to be a long struggle with mental disease.

The disease, believed to be the result of flawed brain biochemistry, seems to affect people going through particularly stressful times in their lives, Marge Allen, president of the Riley County Mental Health Association, said. It generally occurs between the ages of 15 and 50 and may be triggered by changes in lifestyle, career and personal relationships, such as moving away to school, getting a new job or having a child.

It is estimated that 1 percent of the population will have a schizophrenic episode sometime in their life, Allen said. The seriousness of the episodes may vary, however, and some victims may never seek any type of help.

"Schizophrenics may feel they are able to affect the weather, the outcome of a basketball game or if lightning strikes a tree," Allen said. "They may display feelings of omnipotence about the world."

"Schizophrenics can experience changes in their senses, such as increased hearing and visual sensations. As a result, they may become unusually sensitive to the sound of a refrigerator going on and off, or a radio or television. They seem somehow connected to the machines," she said.

"Victims of the disease sometimes see images or hear voices talking to them, and it becomes difficult to distinguish between what's real and what's not," she said.

Closely related to this increased acuteness of the senses is a condition that causes the senses to be flooded with stimuli, Allen said. Normally, individuals can function by screening out some of the stimuli going into their brains, but in the case of schizophrenics, the screening process seems to fail and a flood of information is received all at once.

"It's just a madhouse in their heads," Allen said. "Confusion and mental distress result as they find themselves constantly having to test reality. Many victims learn they can control these symptoms, though, with maintenance doses of antipsychotic drugs," she said.

Help for the schizophrenic today can be found not so much in a cure, but in learning to cope with the symptoms, Allen said. There is no cure for schizophrenia, but there are ways to control the more disabling aspects of the disease.

Most research has shown that the use of drugs alone in treating schizophrenia is almost as effective as using both drugs and psychotherapy, Dr. Sam Lacy, psychiatrist at Lafene Student Health Center, said.

The role of neuroleptic (antipsychotic, tranquilizing) drugs is crucial in the first steps toward stability, Lacy said. Chemical treatment is very effective with the active symptoms of schizophrenia, such as violent or unusual behavior, anxiety, confused thinking and symptoms related to increased acuteness of the senses.

"The drugs are less effective in treating symptoms related to depression, apathy and torturing fears," Lacy said.

Neuroleptic drugs in the treatment of psychosis are safe, he said.

but this does not mean they are without side effects.

The side effects vary among patients and depend on which drug is used, Lacy said. Some patients experience a type of restlessness that makes them feel as though they can't sit still (called akathisia). A patient might describe the feeling as being "like ants crawling around inside your body," he said. Other patients experience a type of stiffness (called akinesia) that affects their muscles so that they move in a jerky manner. There are drugs, however, to help diminish these effects.

Through time, some misunderstanding has occurred about both the concept and treatment of the disease.

Schizophrenia does not refer to multiple, dual or split personalities as is often thought, Lacy said. The "splitting" identified with schizophrenia concerns the separation of emotions and ideas within a single personality. This splitting, sometimes called inappropriate effect, can cause the victims to laugh for no reason at all or to laugh at something gory.

Another application of the concept of splitting relates to the idea of object constancy, Lacy said. Schizophrenics, being unable to accept the usual mixture of hate and love in human relationships, may split the world into all good and all bad, categorizing people as loveable figures or hateable figures, he said.

Historically, the impact that neuroleptic drugs has had on the treatment of symptoms like these is reflected in the decrease in institutionalization since the 1950s when the drug Thorazine was introduced, Lacy said. Nevertheless, new problems arise with the deinstitutionalization of the mental patient.

"The question is, 'Are drugs alone enough?'" Lacy said. "The answer is no. Drugs can do a lot, but alone they are an incomplete treatment. Drugs allow for the most painful aspects of the disease — painful to victims and painful to the people around them — to be treated, so that further steps can be taken to orient schizophrenics to a more stable existence, an existence that will allow us to tolerate, live with and love them," Lacy said.

The exact causes of schizophrenia are still unknown, but research and rehabilitation efforts are providing new hope for victims and their families in dealing with the disease.

The fact that schizophrenics respond to drug-induced changes in the neurochemistry of the brain has led researchers to suspect that the basic cause of the disease is organic or biologic in nature, said Herbert Spohn, director of the research department at the Menninger Foundation in Topeka.

"We are interested in finding out which aspects of (schizophrenic) behavior medication can and cannot reduce in order to develop an accurate symptom picture that drugs do modify," Spohn said.

Spohn suggests this information may lead to more effective ways of dealing with the disease and may be a clue to its causes and possible cures.

"It's hard to say whether we are close to a cure for schizophrenia," Spohn said. "I would say we are a lot closer today than we were 10 years ago. Current research has gone in a lot of interesting directions, although no one can say whether anyone is on the verge of a breakthrough. We are confident, however, that we will find either a cure or a better method for preventing the genetic vulnerability for schizophrenia in individuals," he said.

The outlook for schizophrenics is not as hopeless as it once was, Spohn said. The use of drugs along with the aid of rehabilitation programs can go a long way in helping patients make stable adjustments, he said. There are also programs, like the psychoeducational workshops offered by the Menninger Foundation, that can help the families of patients come to a better understanding of the nature of the illness.

In addition, the National Institute of Mental Health sponsors support group programs through a variety of local mental health groups that may help patients and families cope with the problems of mental disease. One such program is Recovery, sponsored by the Riley County Mental Health Association.

Marge Allen, president of the association, said the Recovery method of problem-solving attempts to teach basic living skills to former mental patients by focusing on the small details involved in the patients' daily routines.

"You learn how to carry on with your routine even though you may not feel like doing anything," Allen said. "You make your muscles take you in to buy your bread or your thread, regardless of what your mind tells you. It takes working on the trivial things, like cleaning up your room or washing your hair, to learn to deal with life as it occurs," she said.

"This program doesn't necessarily apply to one illness. Rather, it addresses the ability or inability to function in a normal way and cope with your head," she said.

"So, you could say there is recovery for schizophrenics; just as there is recovery for diabetics and alcoholics who, by maintaining certain lifestyles, are able to function and have very worthwhile positive experiences," she said.

Wolf Creek plans safe, report says

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Emergency plans for response to a disaster at the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant in Kansas are adequate, according to a report issued by the staffs of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

NRC spokeswoman Clare Miles said Tuesday that the agency staffs recommended the Atomic Safety and Licensing Board authorize issuance of an operating license if other safety requirements are met.

"In the report they say that inadequacies have been sufficiently addressed and that the requirements for emergency plans have been met," she said.

"If the licensing board accepts our staff finding as opposed to those of the intervenors, then the only matter resolved is emergency planning. The license cannot be issued until the plant has been inspected and deemed ready for fuel loading," she said.

Miles said the staff recommendation would be considered along with recommendations from the utilities building the plant at Burlington and the intervenors who questioned the adequacy of state and local plans to cope with a radiation emergency at the plant.

PUBLIC NOTICE

The doors at Stereo Factory will open today at noon and will remain so until 8 this evening for a Scratch and Dent Sale. Recently, inventory produced thousands of dollars worth of slightly damaged stereo merchandise. The insurance adjuster says sell it. This sale lasts from noon until 8 tonight. The stereo equipment is slightly damaged but in full working order. Some units have no boxes or owner's manuals. That's why many items will be sold at dealer cost or below, in both home and car stereo. This sale is on a first come, first serve basis. Stereo Factory will accept cash, check, Visa, Mastercharge or American Express. No trade-ins or layaways please. Because the prices are so low and the equipment is scratched or dented, all sales are final. Stereo Factory's Scratch and Dent Sale items are limited one time buys and come on a first come, first serve basis. Choose from JVC, Bose, Technics, Sony, Alpine or Clarion, all of Stereo Factory's major lines of stereo. The insurance adjuster says sell it, during the Scratch and Dent Sale from noon until 8 tonight and only at Stereo Factory.

Nurse sentenced to gas chamber

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — A coronary-care nurse convicted of killing 12 elderly hospital patients with heart drug overdoses at two Riverside County hospitals was sentenced Wednesday to die in the gas chamber.

The sentence against Robert R. Diaz, 46, was handed down by Superior Court Judge John Barnard, who two weeks ago found the nurse guilty of murder in the series of deaths in March and April 1981 at Community Hospital of the Valleys in Perris and San Geronimo Pass Hospital in Banning.

Because of a finding of "special circumstances" in the complex case, the judge had two options in passing sentence — death in the gas chamber or life imprisonment without possibility of parole.

Guitarist's estranged wife wins suit

LONDON — The estranged wife of The Who guitarist John Entwistle has won damages over an outburst on television in which he called her "a dog."

At a hearing Tuesday, Alison Entwistle, 38, won undisclosed damages from Channel 4 television and Goldcrest Films, which produced the offending interview with the rock star.

"Every dog has its day, and today I've had mine," she told reporters after the hearing.

She said she had not sued her husband because he had apologized to her and their 12-year-old son and asked that the remark be cut from the film before broadcast.

Entwistle was in good spirits after her victory, joking that the case "has been a bone of contention for over a year."

New York college honors writer

NEW YORK — City College of New York awarded its Langston Hughes medalion to writer Ralph Ellison on Tuesday "for contributions to arts and letters."

The award coincides with the 20th anniversary of the publication of "Shadow and Act," a collection of Ellison's essays.

Ellison, 70, is best known for "Invisible Man," a novel of black experience, which won the 1953 National Book Award.

City College has conducted an annual Langston Hughes Festival, honoring the black poet, for the past nine years, but the Hughes medalion is a new award being presented for the first time.

Cabinet cowboy selected to hall

WASHINGTON — Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, who still manages to rope a steer in rodeos, will join the ranks of Buffalo Bill, Kit Carson and Sam Houston in the National Cowboy Hall of Fame.

"He's thrilled" about being selected, spokesman B. Jay Cooper said Tuesday.

Baldrige will be inducted at ceremonies in Oklahoma City April 24 for "his contributions to the West as a statesman, rancher and rodeo competitor," Cooper said.

In his youth, Baldrige, now 61, worked on western cattle ranches during summer vacations, attending Connecticut schools in the winter.

He rode in his first rodeo at 14, eventually joining the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association in 1964 after becoming a successful businessman. He joined the Reagan Cabinet in 1981.

Weather

Partly cloudy today, a 20 percent chance of showers, highs in the mid- to upper 50s. Northwesterly winds 15 to 25 mph. Clearing tonight, lows in the mid- to upper 30s. Mostly sunny Friday. Highs in the low to mid-60s.

Democracy

last May, protests orchestrated to the rhythmic banging of household pots and pans in the smoggy Santiago evenings.

The demonstrations were costly — 62 people were killed in 1983, most shot by police in clashes with protesters. But Pinochet ended some harsher authoritarian measures and opened indirect talks with the Democratic Alliance, comprising Valdes' Christian Democrats and four other centrist parties.

Talks collapsed. The Alliance demands Pinochet's resignation and full democracy within 18 months. The general, for most Chileans just a white-uniformed figure on television, counters with a vague scheme for future plebiscites to endorse the Pinochet way to democracy.

But the demonstrations continue and so do the president's concessions.

Burglary loss exceeds $5,000

Sometime between noon March 31 and 6:30 a.m. April 1, someone burglarized a silver 1982 Datsun 280 ZX which was parked in the 400 block of Houston Street.

The suspect apparently first tried to open the driver's door with a small pry tool. When the burglar discovered the door couldn't be opened that way, a small window behind the driver's seat was broken. After realizing the driver's door lock couldn't be reached from that window, the suspect broke out the driver's door window.

Once inside the car, the suspect attempted unsuccessfully to pry the stereo system out of the dash, destroying the dash in the process. The burglar removed one pair of T-top roof pieces with covers, two stereo speakers, six cassette tapes and a complete set of McGregor golf clubs in a white leather golf bag.

sions. After protests March 27, Pinochet dismissed his economic team and pledged to relieve unemployment.

The opposition is weakened by distrust — legacy of the Allende years — between its two political blocs, the Democratic Alliance and Almeyda's Democratic Popular Movement, a coalition of Communists and other Marxists.

Popular young labor leader Rodolfo Seguel, a key anti-Pinochet organizer, has sought to draw the two factions closer together, but he sounds exasperated.

"The political differences are very deep," he said in an interview. "It's not for labor leaders to try to resolve them."

The divisions keep the multi-party opposition from offering their countrymen a coherent view of a post-Pinochet Chile.

Jaime Insunza, a 38-year-old Communist who is secretary-general of the Marxist bloc, says it is ready to discuss its program with the Democratic Alliance, "but always with the conviction that our program corresponds with the needs of the country."

Would a post-Pinochet Chile revert to Allende-style Marxism?

The leftists are well-organized in the squatter camps and shantytowns that ring this 443-year-old city. And the unemployed slum-dwellers are bitter, complaining about Chile's $21-billion debt to U.S. and other banks, and claiming their country has been "stolen" from them.

But Chilean analysts suggest that the Marxists, who even in Allende's day could garner little more than one-third of the vote, would not try to revolutionize the Chilean system on such a narrow political base.

The protest movement, meanwhile, drives on toward its immediate goal — toppling Pinochet. The underlying strategy: Step up disruptive actions, draw harsher repression, attract additional support.

But Valdes cautions: "If the government takes a tough position...I think the protests will move toward radicalization. Very dangerous."

Extremists are already at work. Gunmen and bombs of the outlawed Leftist Revolutionary Movement are blamed for the slayings of seven policemen since late last year.

Elsewhere on the continent, the clash is not so bloody, but the anti-military fever runs as high:

presidential choice to be made next Jan. 15 by an electoral college dominated by the pro-military party. As elsewhere, debt-burdened Brazil's economic woes feed popular anger at a leadership the people did not choose.

URUGUAY

The 11-year-old military government promises national elections for next November, but the traditional parties in this historically democratic country oppose the armed forces' efforts to retain a political role indefinitely. Dissident Uruguayans turned recent soccer-victory celebrations and annual carnival events into anti-military protests.

PARAGUAY

Stroessner, who has held power for three decades, has allowed two dozen old political foes to return from years of exile. But the dissidents' activities are tightly controlled, and few Paraguayans expect any quick liberalization.

DEMOCRACY CHALLENGED

Some of South America's new civilian governments are under pressure.

Bolivia is the likeliest candidate for a reversal of the democratic trend. A possible military coup is now openly discussed in La Paz, where President Hernan Siles Zuazo's 17-month-old elected government is wracked by economic indecision.

In Peru, leftist guerrilla violence has prompted elected President Fernando Belaunde Terry to suspend civil liberties regionally and, for a time, nationally.

SPRING INTERSESSION

14 May - 1 June 1984

INTERSESSION—SPRING AT KSU

The three weeks between Spring Semester and Summer School are a special time at KSU—the weather is great, parking is easy, staff are busy but the frenzy of graduation is over and life on campus is extremely pleasant. Intercession is an excellent way to take courses—it allows the student to pursue one course intensively, without the interruptions and demands of other coursework or other campus activities. Classes generally meet about three hours a day (usually in the mornings). Both students and faculty have found it a rewarding experience.

Spring 84 Intercession offers over 30 credit courses from a wide variety of departments and colleges within KSU. Courses offer up to three credits each. Fees and registration procedures are explained in this brochure. If this publication doesn't answer all your questions, please call the Division of Continuing Education at 532-5566 (toll-free in Kansas, 800-432-8222). Questions about specific course content or requirements should be addressed to the instructors themselves.

REGISTRATION

Intercession is open to KSU students and to the public. Prior enrollment at KSU is not necessary and registration is a simple one-step process.

Intercession registration will take place in the BASEMENT OF FARRELL LIBRARY (not in the Union, where we've been in previous years); registration dates are April 30-May 2 and the registration staff will be available from 8:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. those three days. Additional registrations will be accepted during regular office hours at 317 Umberger Hall from May 3 through May 14. Course fees are due at the time of enrollment. The decision as to which courses will "go" will be based on the number of registrations recorded during the first week of registration, and the go/drop list will be posted near the Information Desk at the K-State Union on Monday, May 7th. Go/drop information will also be available from the Continuing Education Registrar's office (317 Umberger, 532-5566).

Students are asked to check with their advisors to ensure that the Intercession class will meet degree requirements.

BE PROMPT!!

Although registrations in "go" classes will be accepted until the first day of Intercession, students are encouraged to register during the April 30-May 2 registration period at Farrell Library. The "go/drop" decision is based on enrollments collected during that period. Delays in student registration could result in a course being cancelled: students interested in Intercession classes should register early to be sure their preferred classes have a good chance of going as scheduled.

LATE FEE

Students enrolling after the third class meeting but before the close of Intercession will be charged a late fee of $10 and must have written permission from the instructor. Students attempting to enroll after an Intercession class is finished may do so with written permission from the instructor, and they will be charged a late fee of $20.

COSTS

Costs are $29 per undergraduate ("UG") credit hour and $45 per graduate ("G") credit hour; these costs are the same for Kansas residents and for non-residents. Some classes will require lab fees, materials fees, or other costs, and these are indicated in the course listing. The lab and materials fees will be collected by the Continuing Education Registrar at registration or by the instructor at the first class meeting. Lab fees collected by Continuing Education are non-refundable after the go/drop decision has been posted (May 7), except for courses which have been cancelled. Travel arrangements, for courses requiring them, must be made with the instructors as early as possible.

CREDIT

Classes are offered for one, two, or three resident credit hours. This reflects a deans' ruling of one credit maximum per 15-hour week of Intercession instruction. The maximum credit allowed is four (4) hours per student. Anyone wishing to enroll in more than four credit hours must have written approval from his or her academic dean at the time of registration. STUDENTS SHOULD SIGN UP FOR COURSES ON AN A-PASS-FAIL BASIS AT THE TIME OF REGISTRATION, BEFORE ONE-THIRD OF THE CLASS MEETINGS HAVE ELAPSED. Intercession grades count with G.P.A.

CANCELLED CLASSES

No individual notification about cancelled classes will be made. Students who enrolled in a cancelled class have the option of registering in another class or obtaining a full refund. The student must report to 317 Umberger Hall to officially DROP or ADD.

REFUNDS

A full refund is made if the withdrawal request is received before the second class meeting, or if the class is cancelled. One-half of the fee is refunded if the withdrawal request is received after the second class meeting, but before one-third of the class meetings have elapsed. No refund is permitted if the withdrawal request is received after one-third of the class meetings. All refund requests must be made in person or in writing to the Registrar, Continuing Education (not to the instructor). No refunds will be given after the class begins, for those taking the course for non-credit. Those lab and materials fees collected at Registration will not be refunded after May 7th except for courses which have been cancelled.

BOOKS

Textbooks (required or recommended) have been ordered for some classes and will be available at Varney's at the start of Intercession. Information about textbooks is available from the instructor or from Varney's. Classes for which textbooks have been ordered are indicated with the letters TB at the end of the course description in this listing.

Instrumental Analysis of Food and Agricultural Products (2 UG/G)
Prof. Richard Bassette and Prof. Ike J. Jeon. May 14 through May 25, 1984. Daily from 8:30 a.m. until noon and 1:30 p.m. until 5:00 p.m. Call Hall 140, 156, and 160.

This course will provide an unique opportunity for students to be exposed to the most up-to-date instruments used in food analysis. The theory and principles of operation of these instruments will be presented by experts from the instrument companies. Students will have an opportunity to get some hands-on experience with these various instruments.

Enrollment in this course is limited so as to provide adequate opportunity to work with the instruments. We anticipate giving the students coded samples of unknown concentrations to analyze. The other responsibility of the student taking this course for credit will be on a brief written report on the principles of the operation of each of the instruments.

Limit: 20
Pre-req: Senior standing or consent of instructor
Fee: $38 UG/$90 G; plus $5.00 lab fees to be collected by the instructor.

Problems in Basic Design: Architectural and Interior Design Delineation (2 UG)
Prof. Robert Bullock. May 14 through May 25, 1984. Daily from 8:00 a.m. until noon. Seaton Court 106 and 107.

This basic delineation course will provide instruction for students who wish to develop drawing skills and techniques for rapid visualization. Effective and speedy drawings contain perceptual images loaded with space, form, information and organized sensory qualities.

Students can accomplish more successful drawings when they understand how to utilize a variety of special cues, such as: • Linear perspective • Scale Overlapping • Definition • Contrast • Assimilation • Textural Gradients • Frame of Reference • Color Transitions etc.

The effects of light and luminous sources on forms and surfaces of various materials and textures constitute a more complex perceptual system. Particular methods used to delineate surfaces and textures under various lighting conditions will be discussed and demonstrated in the classroom and applied to the projects.

Students at varying stages of ability will be encouraged to convey what they understand about form rather than what they "see." Students will have the option of working with markers or design colors (Gouache). A list of suggested markers and designers colors and a tentative sign-up sheet is posted on Professor Bullock's office door.

Limit: 20
Pre-req: Any basic design course in Architecture/Art/Interior Design/Engineering etc.
Fee: $58 UG; plus $10.00 materials fee for copying and printing to be collected by the instructor.

Architectural Ornament (3 UG)
Prof. E. Rex Slack. May 14 through June 1, 1984. Daily from 9:00 a.m. until noon. Seaton Hall 101.

Hands-on experience in designing and creating with architectural materials. Stained glass will be the predominant medium of expression. Detailed instruction will be provided pertaining to the design and construction of flat stained glass panels in both the leaded and copper foil methods of fabrication. (Orientation date is May 8th.)

Limit: 16

Prof. Virginia Cartwright. May 14 through June 1, 1984. Daily from 9:00 a.m. until noon. Seaton Hall 206.

In this course, we will investigate the use of daylight in architecture as a means of lighting space and as a means of enhancing architectural form. We will take a field trip to Dallas, Fort Worth and Houston to study the Kimball Art Museum, the Dallas Museum of Fine Arts, and other buildings. Back at K.S.U., we will further analyze each of these buildings using various means including physical models.

Limit: 20
Pre-req: $87 UG; plus travel fees to be collected by the instructor. See instructor about travel arrangements and costs.

Prof. Mike W. Lin. May 14 through June 1, 1984. Daily from 8:30 a.m. until noon. Seaton Hall 307 and 308.

The objective of the course is toward increasing a student's ability to delineate drawings and rendering rapidly and convincingly in the design profession. The media to be covered are pencil, ink, marker, pastel, colored pencil, watercolor, etc. Learn how to draw quickly, sketch loosely and blackout perspective drawing accurately will also be emphasized.

Limit: 22
Pre-req: Consent of instructor
Fee: $87 UG

Problems in Landscape Design: Microcomputer Applications in Environmental Design (3 UG/G)
Prof. Kenneth R. Brooks. May 14 through June 1, 1984. Daily from 8:00 a.m. until 10:00 a.m. and 10:00 a.m. until noon or 1:00 p.m. until 3:00 p.m. Seaton Hall 314.

The purpose of this course is to introduce the students to the uses of microcomputers as a tool in the typical professional practice of Environmental Design. Students will become familiar with the function operation, characteristics and applications of some common and popular computer software and hardware. Students will develop the ability to evaluate common planning and design practices and determine how they might be expedited by computer technologies. Laboratory exercises will give students experience with word processing, data base information applications, spreadsheet application for financial, engineering and statistical uses and limited BASIC programming.

Limit: 30
Pre-req: Not for junior landscape architecture majors or consent of instructor
Fee: $87 UG/$135 G; plus $30 laboratory materials and supplies fee to be collected by the instructor.

Play focuses on struggle for goodness

By KIMBERLY STOLLE
Collegian Reporter

Finishing their 1983-1984 season, the K-State Players will perform Bertolt Brecht's "A Good Woman of Setzuan" at 8 p.m. today, Friday and Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

The play focuses upon the struggles of a prostitute, Shen Te (portrayed by Carol Holstead, graduate in speech), as she tries to avoid the evils of the world. It presents a parable demonstrating the impossibility of human purity, said Kate Anderson, assistant professor of speech and director of the play.

"The theme is based on the relationship between morality and the system, a relationship between power and money. It shows contradictions in a person's life who is trying to lead a good life and who keeps coming up against all of these things that makes the person somehow powerless to remain good — if they're going to survive," Anderson said.

Shen Te is chosen by three Chinese gods as the town's only "good" person after she was the only person who offered the gods shelter during the night. The gods reward Shen Te with a sum of money for her goodness.

Shen Te then follows a series of mishaps as she tries to remain a good person, as the gods warned, yet survive within her society, Anderson said.

"This is my favorite Brecht play," Anderson said. "I like it because I think it's interesting and it's fun. There's a lot of contradictions, so it's an interesting and challenging script."

"And, I think it says something and asks interesting questions. I like to do plays that I think are entertaining and have humor, but also say something, have some sort of meaning, ask questions and hopefully, get people thinking about it," she said.

Although "The Good Woman of Setzuan" is not considered a musical, it does include music and lyrics throughout it.

The lyrics are written by Brecht, but the music is original. Catherine Gundlach, graduate in music, composed the music for the production, Anderson said.

A cast of 22 members and musicians will produce K-State's version of the play.

The set can be compared to a junkyard. Various items have been found and assembled as props for the setting, including a rusted-out truck. Although most of the set has been assembled this way, some pieces have been built by the set construction crew as well, Anderson said.

Although Brecht's works are decades old, Anderson said she believes today's audience can still relate and enjoy Brecht's "The Good Woman of Setzuan."

"It's a very, very straightforward story. Now, Brecht comes from a particular political philosophy, and if you want to look at it from that perspective, you will see it. But if you don't, if you simply look at it as a story, it still asks fascinating questions like, 'What's wrong?' 'What's right?' 'What would you do in this situation?' 'How could you get out of it?' and 'How would you solve this problem?' I think we can all identify with that. We've all been in these situations," Anderson said.

Tickets for "The Good Woman of Setzuan" are $3 for the general public and $2 for students and senior citizens. Tickets may be purchased at McCain Box Office, Monday through Friday from 12:30 to 5 p.m. On performance days, tickets may be purchased from 3 to 9 p.m. at the McCain Box Office, in addition to the regularly scheduled hours.

goal. The sororities are supporting us in our drive to raise money, and in turn we support each other," he said.

"The money we raise for Wallace Village is a real accomplishment, and it is possibly the biggest service project that any fraternity at K-State does, but a real factor in Derby Days is the emphasis to raise money for Wallace Village," Nuzman said.

The five days of competition pits sororities against each other in such events as volleyball games, a dance contest, beer chugging and canoe racing.

Alpha Delta Pi won the competition three years in a row, from 1979-1981. The Chi Omegas won in 1982. And last year, Alpha Xi Delta received the Derby Days traveling trophy.

T-shirt signing Tuesday kicked off this year's events. Men of Sigma Chi wear white T-shirts and try to get the most signatures from women in participating sororities. Scoring is based on the total number of signatures divided by the total number of girls in each house.

First through fifth places are awarded in each event throughout the week, Nuzman said. The sorority with the most accumulated points will be declared the winner of Derby Days at its close on Saturday preceding a breakfast at Kite's Bar and Grille, volleyball finals and a hot dog and beer lunch. Several events will follow, beginning at 12:30 p.m.

The K-State sororities participating include Alpha Delta Pi, Alpha Xi Delta, Alpha Chi Omega, Gamma Phi Beta, Kappa Delta, Kappa Kappa Gamma, Sigma Sigma Sigma and Chi Omega.

Each year, K-State Sigma Chi raises about $2,000 to $3,000 for Wallace Village.

Most of the donations originate from active chapter projects, either in the form of specific fund-raising efforts or redirection of previously budgeted amounts for such things as Christmas cards, homecoming floats or Derby Days' profits.

The Sigma Chi project with Wallace Village is hailed as being the first international service project ever adopted by a men's college social fraternity, while gaining momentum nationwide. According to the booklet, more than 145 Sigma Chi chapters on college and university campuses throughout the United States and Canada have supported Wallace Village through their local fund raising efforts.

"We all feel that this project is worthwhile, and each one of us can contribute in our own way. There is a place for each of us to contribute, just as there is a place and a right for everyone to live his life to the fullest," Nuzman said.

Speech

ed. This contest is comparable to the Olympic decathlon except the participants enter between four and six events. The 10 schools with the best overall scores will receive sweepstakes trophies.

Pewter plates will be awarded to all finalists and semifinalists in each event. Quarterfinalists will receive a marble paperweight.

"I feel very confident this year. I'd feel more confident if we hadn't lost so many of our seniors," Ross said. "But I'm very confident with how we're going to do. I'm sure that K-State's going to place within the top 10," Ross said.

Kellie Sanders, senior in speech, has entered five events, qualifying her for competition for the pentathlon award. Sanders is entering the categories of impromptu speaking and extemporaneous speaking and will give an informative speech about the premenstrual syndrome, a persuasive speech about scientific fraud and a humorous after-dinner speech about shoplifting.

Tom Overmyer, junior in theater, and his sister Mary Overmyer, freshman in pre-physical therapy, will present a duo titled "Bar and Ger" by Geraldine Aron. Tom also will present a duo titled "Hopscotch" by Israel Horowitz with Angela O'Hara, sophomore in pre-law. In addition, he will perform "The House of Blue Leaves" by John Guare for his dramatic interpretation and "Program of the Theatre" for his poetry interpretation.

O'Hara also will do a poetry interpretation titled, "Growing up, not just getting older..."

Vincent Bly, junior in theater, will perform a dramatic interpretation titled "Little Shop of Horror" and a poetry interpretation titled "About Atlanta & #7."

Jerry Lobb, junior in finance, will perform an impromptu speech and will give an informative speech about artificial skins.

Curtis Sneden, sophomore in radio and television, will perform an impromptu speech and an informative speech about the skin's healing process.

Gretchen Wells, junior in theater, will perform a drama interpretation titled "Night Mother."

Jeff Ramsey, senior in chemistry, will perform an informative piece about plant communication.

Amy Achenback, freshman in arts and sciences, will speak about childhood depression for her informative speech.

Laurie Memming, freshman in arts and science, will perform an extemporaneous speech.

Marcy Sullivan, junior in journalism and mass communications, will perform a prose interpretation of "Where are you going, Where have you been," by Joyce Carol Oates.

Colleges fight research censorship...

By The College Press Service

Three universities that make millions of dollars by performing research for the Pentagon say they will drop all their Pentagon research contracts if the Reagan administration goes ahead with its plans to censor professors' publication of certain research results.

In a letter to administration officials, the presidents of California Institute of Technology, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Stanford University — which together do about $400 million a year in Department of Defense research — last week said they would stop doing all military research if the rules are implemented.

"Major universities," said David Wilson, a University of California official and co-chairman of the committee that is trying to hammer out the research publication rules, "do not sign contracts that give someone else the ultimate authority to decide whether the material is published."

The new rules would give the Pentagon the right to approve and censor the scientific reports of certain kinds of research on campuses, said Dr. Leo Young, director of the defense department's research and laboratory management office.

"We want the right to approve what you publish," he said.

The reason is "that we've got to slow the flow of all this good technology stuff going to the Soviet Union," he said. "The Russians come here and buy all the stuff they can in Radio Shack, and most of the leakage comes from businesses. But some of it comes from universities, and we have to slow it down."

In essence, the administration proposes to create a new category of research, pointed out Rosemary Chalk, spokeswoman for the American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS) in Washington.

"For the 40 years that the government has been funding military research on campuses, there's been classified research and unclassified research," she said.

"There were strict rules about publishing the results of classified research, and many schools, particularly in the late sixties, adopted policies not to do it," Chalk said.

"Now, they want to call some of the unclassified research they fund 'sensitive,' and apply the same censorship rules to it that they used for classified research," she said.

An official at the National Academy of Sciences (NAS) who asked not to be named because he is not an official NAS spokesman, called the proposed censorship "an exercise in paranoia. It's a way for the Pentagon to make more projects secret without having to justify it. You can understand their fears the Russians will steal our weapons, but we're talking about science, not weapons."

"We profit from publication of their science as much as they profit from ours," he said.

Young contended that "less than one percent" of the Pentagon research contract would be affected by the rule.

Asked if it was possible that the Pentagon could one day decide to classify a majority of its research contracts as sensitive, Young said, "nothing can stop that in principle. But these are reasonable people. It's a danger, but a very small danger. I believe."

Young said the censorship proposal is an opening negotiating position in a constructive effort to limit the flow of technological research to the Soviet Union while doing as little as possible to abridge the rights of universities.

Wilson also said he is confident a rule palatable to both the Pentagon and the universities can be formed. "It's not impossible that we can find a resolution to it. This is a very big issue, but there is no sense of real panic,"

The committee of university and Pentagon officials will meet to try to work out the differences sometime later in 1984, Young said.

Tax rates down since 1982

Taxpayers faced both good and bad news in 1983. The most favorable news was that tax rates were decreased 9 percent from those of 1982.

The following table lists those savings in dollars by income groups:

50,000	13,294	12,064	1,230	16,306	14,727	1,579

The table shows the progressive nature of the current income tax system.

The 1982 tax returns show the amount of taxes paid by different income groups. The Internal Revenue Service data show the following:

INCOME	TAX RATE	INCOME	TAX RATE
Less than $10,000	4.5%	$30,000-40,000	14.7%
10,000-12,000	7.6	40,000-50,000	16.8
12,000-16,000	9.4	50,000-75,000	19.6
16,000-20,000	11.0	75,000-100,000	24.6
20,000-25,000	12.2	100,000-200,000	29.1
25,000-30,000	13.4	200,000-1,000,000	36.1

These percentages (tax rates) are averages based on the 1982 returns that were filed. They represent the share of adjusted gross income paid in income taxes.

The outlook for 1984 income taxes varies. While the tax rates are slated to drop approximately 4 or 5 percent below 1983 rates (the last step in President Reagan's tax cuts), Social Security taxes and self-employment taxes will increase.

An employee paid 6.7 percent Social Security tax on $35,700 of earnings in 1983, resulting in withholding totaling a maximum of $2,392. In 1984, the same 6.7 percent is withheld, but on earnings of up to $37,000 for a withholding of $2,533.

Before this year, all Social Security benefit payments were exempt from federal income tax.

Beginning in 1984, some social retirement benefits will be included as taxable income for the first time. The new rule generally applies only to married couples filing joint returns with more than $32,000 of adjusted gross income and single people with more than $25,000 of adjusted gross income. In certain cases, however, even if a taxpayer's adjusted gross income is less than those figures, part of his Social Security benefits may be taxable income.

The self-employed will face many changes in 1984. A self-employed person in 1983 paid 9.35 percent self-employment tax on $35,700, for a maximum tax of $3,338. For 1984 a self-employed person will pay 11.3 percent on $37,800 of earnings, for a maximum tax of $4,271. This is an increase of $933.

...Campuses support limited military influence

By The College Press Service

The threat by some universities to drop out of Pentagon-funded campus research projects is just the latest example of a seemingly deepening uneasiness over colleges' more cozy relationship with the military.

Military funding of campus and university research has increased rapidly during the Reagan administration.

The Pentagon is paying campuses $894 million to do military research this year. President Reagan has asked for a $996 million campus military research budget for next year.

With the funding increases have come protests, physical and otherwise, this school year.

Most dramatically, 27 University of Michigan students occupied a research lab last November for two days to protest their school's involvement in secret military research.

More typically, major university defense contractors have held extensive forums and debates over their military connections.

"Having such huge military spending (on campus) may have some influence on the rest of the university as to policy," said Jerome Frank, author of "Sanity and Survival in the Nuclear Age," at a recent Johns Hopkins University meeting to protest campus involvement in military and nuclear research.

Johns Hopkins' recent rechartering of a ROTC program might not have happened if (the university) didn't have this big investment in the military, he said.

When the staff of a Stanford University lab balked at X-ray research related to nuclear weapons, the university agreed to take on only the aspects of the research not related to weaponry.

Harvard University students helped put a measure on last November's ballot that would have turned Cambridge into a "nuclear free zone." If passed, the law effectively would have kept Harvard out of nuclear weapons research contracts.

In February, California Institute of Technology faculty members asked the administration to drop plans to add a U.S. Army policy center to existing federally-financed research labs because the policy center had more to do with the military matters than scientific matters.

"When a prestigious university does research in nuclear weapons," Frank said at the Johns Hopkins forum, "it very powerfully reinforces the dangerous illusion that a nuclear war can be won by the side that has the greatest technology."

Not all campus officials oppose the growing college ties to the Pentagon.

"The university has stated through its trustees that national security is a part of its public service mission," said Edward Cochran, spokesman for Johns Hopkins' Applied Physics Lab, which is currently doing almost $275 million worth of research for the Pentagon.

Weapons research is "a necessary evil," said Johns Hopkins graduate student Bill Saunders.

REASON #4 TO CALL YOUR PARENTS:

YOUR ROOMMATE.

Your parents told you that your new roommate might have a few idiosyncrasies. They weren't kidding.

But they never told you how much fun it was going to be working out your differences.

So call and tell your parents all about the fights at 3 AM, the tantrums at 5 AM, and the laughing when it's done. They'll be glad to hear you're working it out.

So go ahead, call your parents after 11 PM weeknights or between 11 PM Friday and 5 PM Sunday when rates drop to their very lowest.

Your parents will be glad to hear that you're still in good hands.

K-State freshman softball pitcher Lisa Tarvestad excitedly recounts the final inning of the second game Wednesday at Griffith Park. The 'Cats won both games with Allen County Community College. The team will play at Iowa State University on Saturday in a triangular tournament.

Softball team secures double-header sweep

By HUEY COUNTS
Sports Editor

The K-State softball team scored four runs in the sixth inning to grab a 5-4 victory and complete Wednesday's double-header sweep of Allen County Community College at Griffith Park. The Wildcats won the opener 4-1.

The Red Devils took a 2-0 lead in the first inning of the second game. Wildcat pitcher Lisa Tarvestad struck out Gina Crotts to begin the game, but Tammy Turgeon singled and scored on a double by Erin Hannagan. Elaine Allen cracked a single to score Hannagan, but Kandi Wilson hit into a double play to end the inning.

Shelly Cairns worked Tarvestad for a walk to begin the second inning and Jane Pinneo followed with a single. Cairns later scored on a fielder's choice, and Kim Godfrey knocked in Pinneo with a sacrifice fly to center field, giving the Red Devils a 4-0 lead.

The Wildcats got their first run of the game in the fourth inning. Leslie Taylor singled and moved to second on a wild pitch by Allen County's Laurie Armstrong. Sherri Chacey followed with a single to knock in Taylor.

Neither team scored in the fifth, setting the stage for the Wildcats' sixth inning heroics.

Taylor drew a walk, but was forced out at second. Pam Rufener reached base on an error by the Red Devils' shortstop and Chacey moved to third.

Chacey scored when Allen County's center fielder misplayed a line drive off the bat of Annette Kirkham.

Joyce Hawley hit a soft liner over second base to score Rufener and move Kirkham to third. Kirkham scored on a long fly out by Rachelle Borders to knot the score, 4-4.

Alise Willson then singled to score Hawley from second base.

Tarvestad retired the first two Red Devils' batters in the seventh before Turgeon reached base with her second single of the contest, bringing Hannagan to the plate.

Head Softball Coach Ralph Currie instructed Tarvestad to intentionally walk Hannagan.

Tarvestad "forgot" what Currie had said and threw the first pitch by Hannagan for a strike. The freshman hurler from Manhattan then got Hannagan to pop out to first base and move her record to 4-0.

"I forgot on the first pitch (to walk Hannagan)," Tarvestad said. "And I was mad because I didn't want to walk her. But it's a good thing I got her out."

Currie said he thought that a lack of practice time on how to intentionally walk a hitter may have led to Tarvestad's mix-up on the mound. "She was supposed to walk her," he said, "but we haven't worked on it much in practice."

Tarvestad struck out three and gave up six hits in the contest.

In the first game, K-State scored first when Taylor reached base on an error by the second baseman and scored two outs later on a misplay by the shortstop.

K-State tallied their final three runs in the second inning on three hits and two Red Devils' errors.

Borders started the inning with a triple and scored on Marcie Borchard's single. Taylor scored her second run of the game after reaching on an error and scoring on a base hit by Chacey.

Allen County's lone tally came in the sixth inning when Crotts singled, stole second and scored on Hannagan's double.

Kathy Gillpatrick, 3-4, picked up the victory, allowing three hits and striking out five.

"It was probably the best game that Kathy has pitched," Currie said. "She threw really well."

The Wildcats, 8-4, are scheduled to travel to Iowa State University on Saturday for a triangular against the Cyclones and the University of Oklahoma.

"Oklahoma is a tough team," Currie said. "Iowa State is a lot like us, they're young, but they play excellent defense."

Hartman announces new House addition

K-State Head Basketball Coach Jack Hartman, announced Wednesday he signed his first recruit to a spring national letter-of-intent.

The signee is Derrick House, a 6-foot-8 forward from Phillips County Community College in Helena, Ark.

House averaged 24.5 points and nine rebounds last season for his squad, which ended the year with a 20-6 record and a conference title. He connected on 59 percent of his field goals and 71 percent of his free throws.

House was a first team all-Arkansas Jucio Conference pick and also was named the most valuable player of his league.

"Derrick is not only a great shooter, but he's a classy individual as well. The community will fall in love with him," said Jimmy Allen, his coach at Phillips County.

Hartman said he is excited about his newest addition to the Wildcats.

"He can mix it up with the big boys inside," he said. "He's not afraid to get the tough rebound inside or for that matter, go outside and take a shot. We feel very fortunate to have him."

House received scholarship offers from more than 40 National Collegiate Athletic Association Division I universities. He had narrowed his choices to Memphis State University, the University of Hawaii, Lamar University and K-State before choosing the Wildcats.

Baseball squad wins twice

The K-State baseball team's 14-game losing skid came to a halt Wednesday as the Wildcats won both ends of a twin bill against Marymount College at Frank Myers Field. K-State edged the Spartans 5-3 in the opener and crushed them 16-3 in the second game.

With two outs in the bottom of the sixth and trailing 3-1, K-State's bats came alive. Mark Goodwin and Brian Bascue had base hits, and both scored on David Banning's double. Eric Gossett followed with a two-run homer to secure the 'Cats victory.

Cary Colbert's home run in the fourth inning — his fourth of the season — provided K-State's first run.

The Wildcats jumped all over a pair of Marymount hurlers in the third inning of the second game, scoring 10 runs on seven hits.

Colbert and John Tirrell each had three hits, and Banning, Jay Kvasnicka and Jack Fritz added a pair of hits each to the attack.

Rose takes walk down aisle

By The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Pete Rose took five walks Wednesday — four to first base and one down the aisle.

The Montreal left fielder got married in his hometown early Wednesday, then went 0-for-1 with four walks in the Expos' 9-3 afternoon victory over the Cincinnati Reds to remain one hit shy of 4,000.

His next shot at that mark will come in Montreal's home opener Friday night against the Philadelphia Phillies, the only other team for which he has played.

"I'm going to get another hit this year. I'm not worried about that," Rose said. "I'm just happy we won today's game. I'm a little disappointed, but it was just one of those things that happen."

The wedding, Rose's second, was a private ceremony at his attorney's office. He married 29-year-old Carol Wolung of Lawrenceburg, Ind.

"It was a short ceremony this morning, that's all," Rose said, shrugging it off. "That's something you do on your way to getting 4,000."

"I had to get married because that was the only way I could get her on the team plane back to Montreal. Only wives are allowed on the plane."

With the nuptials behind him, Rose turned his attention to getting the lone hit that keeps him from the plateau reached only by Ty Cobb.

He swung only once, fouling off a pitch, while drawing walks in his first three trips to the plate against starter Bruce Berenyi. He walked on a 3-2 count and a pair of 3-1 counts, while the fans booed Berenyi's wildness.

Rose hit the first pitch back to reliever Frank Pastore in the sixth, and drew a walk on a 3-1 count from Pastore in his last at-bat.

Fans tossed debris on the field when Rose was taken out for a pinch runner, and Pastore was booed when he was removed.

"The only bad thing about the whole day, I think, is I didn't like the reaction toward Pastore," Rose said. "He was just trying to do his job."

Cobb set the all-time record of 4,191 hits in 24 major-league seasons with Detroit and Philadelphia in the American League.

Cobb reached 4,000 hits in his 23rd season at age 40, playing for Philadelphia in 1927. Rose, who turns 43 on Saturday, is in his 22nd season.

However, it's taken him more at-bats to approach the mark. Cobb played in 3,033 games with 11,429 at-bats in his Hall of Fame career, while Rose has played 3,258 games with a record 13,070 plate appearances.

The Expos were paced by Andre Dawson, who drove in four runs. Cincinnati tied it in the bottom of the first with an unearned run off Bryan Smith, 2-0, who scattered six hits over six innings. Tony Perez doubled and scored when shortstop Argenis Salazar fielded Dave Parker's grounder and threw wildly to third.

Royals beat Orioles, 5-2

By The Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Jorge Orta singled for the only hit in Kansas City's four-run fourth inning and the Royals went on to defeat the Baltimore Orioles 5-2 Wednesday night, handing the defending world champions their fifth loss in six games this season.

Orta's looping single to center scored Pat Sheridan, who stole second after reaching on a fielding error by first baseman Eddie Murray. Loser Mike Boddicker, 0-2, then walked Hal McRae, Frank White and Steve Balboni to force Orta home with the second run and was lifted after throwing two more balls to Butch Davis.

Balboni belted his second home run of the season in the sixth after the Orioles closed within 4-2 on leadoff homers by Murray in the fourth and Rick Dempsey in the fifth.

Center of thoughts—

It was as it should be. It was as it had been countless other times in his career. He positioned himself at the side of the lane. Taking the pass from Earvin Johnson, guarded by two opponents, he faked to his right, turned left and tossed up the "sky hook." The ball fell through the basket and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar was the National Basketball Association's all-time leading scorer.

Throughout his career he has been idolized, criticized and praised. Some of it deserved, and much of it not.

But through it all, Abdul-Jabbar has constantly put his best on the court.

Who's the best center ever? The defensive-minded Bill Russell? The physically dominating Wilt Chamberlain? The graceful, scoring Abdul-Jabbar? Will Ralph Sampson pass them all?

The arguments could go on forever. Using head-to-head competition is nearly impossible because when Abdul-Jabbar entered the league, Russell had retired and Chamberlain was nearing the end of his career, although he still had a couple of good seasons left in him. And Sampson is just beginning a professional career as Abdul-Jabbar's comes to a close.

Abdul-Jabbar's records speak for themselves. He has been selected to play in the NBA All-Star game 14 times, now ranks first in league history in blocked shots and field goals made; fourth in games played, field goals attempted, rebounds and scoring average; among the top five in field goal percentage; eighth in free throws attempted and seventh in free throws made.

But more important than any trophy, record or victory is the man himself. What kind of man is Abdul-Jabbar?

In his autobiography, "Giant Steps," he talks about growing up in the racial violence of the late 1960s, his feelings during the Vietnam War. The book turned out to be much more than a listing of his awards, his childhood idols or his all-time favorite teammates.

HUEY COUNTS
Sports Editor

When I finished the book and put it down, I found that I was not only thoroughly impressed with Abdul-Jabbar as a basketball player, but as a person.

I found it fascinating how that throughout his life, he always stood up for what he believed was right, even if it cost him friends or relatives.

He refused to participate on the U.S. basketball squad in the 1968 Olympic Games because he felt that if white America was going to treat blacks poorly, then white America could win the Olympics on its own.

He and Wilt Chamberlain broke off communication when in his autobiography, Chamberlain said that black women were inferior sexual partners and socially inferior because they were unsophisticated. Abdul-Jabbar retaliated against the statement in public and he lost a good friend, but he had spoken out for what he believed.

Abdul-Jabbar may go down as the greatest scorer of all-time in basketball history books, but in my book he'll go down as one of the most thought-provoking individuals I've ever read about.

And when he retires from basketball, I hope he keeps himself in the public eye, because I believe he has a lot to share with the rest of us.

The Los Angeles Lakers have three of the top scorers in history of the National Basketball Association. Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who broke Wilt Chamberlain's record of 31,419 points April 5 in the Lakers' win over Utah, now heads the list with 31,439 points as of Tuesday night. Chamberlain and Jerry West formerly played for the Lakers. Elvin Hayes, who will retire at the end of this season, is the only other player besides Kareem to remain active in the NBA.

Board chooses fall ad manager, Collegian editor

Members of the Board of Student Publications met Wednesday to select the fall Collegian editor and advertising manager.

Beth Baker, senior in journalism and mass communications, was chosen fall 1984 Collegian editor. Darren McChesney, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, was named advertising manager for the semester.

Baker currently is managing editor and has worked for the Collegian for six semesters. She has held internships at The Oskaloosa Independent and The Parsons Sun.

McChesney was the advertising manager during summer 1983, has been an advertising representative for two semesters and has completed an internship at The Hutchinson Daily News.

Panel increases colleges' tuition for non-residents

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The tuition paid by out-of-state and foreign students at the state's 19 community colleges in the fall will increase from $798 to $865 per semester under action taken Wednesday by the State Board of Education.

The board voted to increase the tuition to bring community college rates into line with the tuition charged by Pittsburg State University, Fort Hays State University and Emporia State University — the three smallest state universities governed by the Kansas Board of Regents.

The higher tuition, $865 a semester or $57.75 per credit hour, will take effect July 1.

In other business, the board voted to allow Washburn University to offer a program in court reporting next fall, despite opposition from a private school in Salina.

Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, spoke in opposition to the new program, saying it duplicated the one being offered by Brown Mackie College in Salina.

Mining

only on condition that they not be identified, said the initial phase of the mining ended Friday — before the Senate vote Tuesday night — and likely would not be resumed.

Some officials said the mining had accomplished its purpose of making clear to Nicaragua the high price it would have to pay for continuing to arm leftist insurgents in El Salvador. However, they said, the flow of arms was continuing nonetheless.

But one senior State Department official said the mounting political outcry against the mining was a major reason why it probably will not be continued.

The State Department official acknowledged that the CIA might be reluctant to resume the mining after the Senate's approval of the anti-mining resolution sponsored by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and backed by Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., and GOP Whip Ted Stevens of Alaska.

President Reagan gave his written approval for the mining in February, Goldwater disclosed Tuesday in a sharply critical letter to CIA Director William Casey.

As Reagan toured a Ford assembly line in Claycomo, Mo., Wednesday, he was asked his reaction to the Senate resolution. "You wouldn't want to hear it," he replied. But Tuesday night, immediately after the Senate vote, the president told reporters that "if it's not binding, I can live with it."

Deputy Secretary of State Kenneth Dam told a House hearing that the United States is not at war with Nicaragua but is engaged in "collective self-defense."

Rep. Michael Barnes, D-Md., chairman of the Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Western Hemisphere affairs, asked Dam about a statement by Goldwater that the mining was "an act of war."

"I don't believe that is a correct statement," Dam replied. He said the U.N. charter explicitly recognizes the right of collective self-defense.

House passes anti-mining resolution

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House joined the Senate Thursday night in condemning the CIA-directed mining of Nicaraguan ports, and leaders of Congress abandoned efforts to funnel an emergency appropriation to the Salvadoran government which the Reagan administration says is desperately needed to battle leftist revolutionaries.

By a vote of 281-111, the House, controlled by Democrats, passed a non-binding resolution expressing "the sense of Congress that no additional funds be used to mine the ports or territorial waters of Nicaragua."

Meanwhile, sources said Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., and Speaker of the House Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., decided there was not time for a House-Senate conference committee to decide Central American aid issues before a 10-day Easter recess beginning today.

A senior State Department official, speaking on condition that he not be identified, said earlier that congressional failure to approve funds for El Salvador before the recess would "create major difficulties for the Salvadoran military."

A source close to the Senate GOP leadership said O'Neill and Baker offered to allow the diversion to El Salvador of $32 million funds appropriated for other purposes as a stopgap until the conferees could meet after the recess to consider the administration's request for $61.7 million.

Marc Weinberg, a White House spokesman, said the administration was "continuing private discussions with members of Congress" on the issue.

Some administration supporters in Congress condemned the delay.

"We continue to procrastinate without a thought of what this will mean to the survival of democracy in El Salvador," said Rep. William Whitehurst, R-Va., during the House debate.

Meanwhile, leaders of Congress charted a collision course over whether to continue U.S. aid to Nicaraguan guerrillas, with the GOP leadership of the House vowing to support continued aid and Democratic leaders of the House saying they would fight it.

Opening debate on the resolution condemning mining of Nicaraguan ports, Rep. David Bonior, D-Mich., said, "This administration has engaged in international terrorism and the world awaits to see if the American people will stand up for international law."

House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., responded by describing the resolution as "a partisan sideshow affecting international politics."

"You are aiming at the president but you are going to hit the people of El Salvador," Michel told the House, making the argument that the mining is needed to halt Soviet and Cuban arms shipments to Marxist-led Salvadoran rebels.

Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., delivers a campaign speech Thursday in Independence, Mo.

Hart praises policies of Truman in speech

An onlooker at the rally displays her opinion of Reagan's military policies.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. — Walter Mondale's policies belong to the past, and a commitment to new ideas is necessary to defeat President Reagan, Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., said Thursday in a speech following the tough political style of Harry S. Truman.

Hart spoke in the former president's hometown, blasting Mondale and Reagan. The stop was part of Hart's preparation for the Missouri Democratic presidential caucuses to be held April 17.

"We can't beat the wrong policies of Ronald Reagan if we offer only the failed policies of the past," he said.

Hart pointed out similarities between his policies and those of Truman.

"If it was right for Truman to move away from (Franklin) Roosevelt in the 1940s, it's right for us to move away from the policies of the Carter-Mondale administration," he said. "If we don't do this, we will be unable to move away from the Reagan administration, which would be a tragedy for America."

Hart has often criticized Mondale's ties to special interest groups. Such ties are a barrier to needed change, he said.

"We need a president with the toughness of a Truman to put national interests ahead of special interests. The biggest enemy of change is special interest groups which have an interest in maintaining the status quo."

"He (Truman) recognized that no responsible candidate can agree with labor union leaders 100 percent of the time," he said. "Truman said we can't permit private interests to put personal gains above the national welfare."

Hart's critics have suggested his campaign of "new ideas" ignores the traditional ideals of the Democratic Party. However, Hart said, 1984 is a time for change, and the party must have a commitment to innovation.

"We must use new ideas to achieve the oldest ideals of this country," he said. "Truman was a pioneer on the frontier of change. The history he helped make is our truest heritage as Democrats."

"The question in this campaign is not who believes most in the Democratic principles — all the candidates do — but who can best achieve these ideals," he said.

Hart said he became a member of the ## Group allows for input into redevelopment plan

By LEE WHITE
Manhattan Editor

A group called Citizens for Better Development has been incorporated as a non-profit organization to allow Manhattan residents to have more of a voice about the downtown redevelopment project.

Spokesmen for the group are Frank Hyde and Daniel Smith, graduate students in planning, who stressed that the group isn't against redevelopment, but the method in which the city has worked toward completing the project.

"What the organization is for is to allow the people of Manhattan to have some input into what happens to their town," Smith said. "We're not against redevelopment. We're against people not having input as to how their money is used."

The organization also will endeavor to provide alternatives to the current redevelopment plan and provide citizens with information about the project that is difficult to get, Hyde said.

Smith, 28, group vice president, worked for development corporations for eight years, mainly helping to coordinate shopping center projects. He holds a bachelor's degree in architecture from K-State. Hyde, 25, organization representative, holds the same degree as Smith and worked for a development firm in Vermont for two years as a developer of housing projects. He also was assistant to the Wyoming State Historical Architect.

Smith and Hyde said about 30 people have formed a steering committee that will set a meeting date in the near future for prospective members to attend, they said.

"We want people to know we welcome anyone who wants to know what's going on," Smith said.

The group plans to start accepting grants and donations as soon as its financial structure is made final, Smith said. The group is non-profit, but donations are not tax deductible, he said.

"We've been offered quite a few donations, but once we get our finances set up, we'll start accepting them," Smith said. "We'd like to have hundreds (of members). Maybe thousands."

Hyde said he thinks there are enough people who question the redevelopment plan to form a large organization.

"From listening to radio talk shows, there are a lot of people dissatisfied with what's going on," Hyde said.

While the primary issue in the beginning will be the downtown redevelopment project, the spokesmen said the group will be concerned with all forms of community development.

"We'd like to see something a little more environmentally integrated with the rest of downtown, so that everyone will benefit," Hyde said.

"We're relying on citizens' input and help to get this (formation of the group) done. We also don't want to see this city hurt."

Assistant City Manager Jim Pearson said he believes the group is wrong in its belief that the city hasn't properly educated the public about the project.

"It (project planning) has not been taking place in a vacuum," Pearson said. "There's no way that a private, non-public organization is going to provide better communication than the legislative body that has control over the process."

Pearson said he "would be open to suggestions as to how the citizenry could be educated better."

Allocation angers ICC president

By PAUL ENGLIS
Collegian Reporter

A searing rebuttal of Student Senate's tentative allocation for the International Coordinating Council was delivered by the ICC president during the open period of the senate meeting Thursday night.

Ardo Mnassaghianians, senior in construction science, told senators that he was frustrated over the apathy and ignorance about ICC demonstrated at the group's tentative allocation hearing Tuesday.

ICC was allocated $3,506.46 for 1984-1985 — the amount recommended by Finance Committee — which is $146.77 less than was allocated for this year. ICC had requested $7,192.41 for the 1984-1985 school year.

Further controversy with Finance Committee's recommendations was raised as senators argued over the purpose of the committee's allocation guidelines. Allocation guidelines outline the number of advertisements, trips and other expenses which can be funded with money allocated by senate.

Finance Committee chairman Kirk Porteous, senior in radio and television, said the guidelines were established to help the committee cut groups' allocation requests to fit the budget. He said the guidelines aid the committee in being fair to every group.

Brian O'Neill, graduate senator, expressed concern that the groups seeking funding were not aware of the guidelines.

"I am worried about a catch-22 situation here. The groups are not told what the Finance Committee guidelines are," he said. "Since they don't know what the guidelines are, they don't know how to ask for funding."

The dispute about the guidelines was raised because Associated Students of Kansas at Kansas State University did not specifically designate where all of its allocation would be spent during its Finance Committee hearing.

Because the committee was unaware of all expenditures incurred by the group, the committee's recommendation for funding was less than the group requested. At Thursday's meeting, the group presented its specifications and asked for additional funding.

Finance Committee member Steve Cashman, freshman in business administration, said allowing ASK at K-State to specify where its money would be spent after its Finance Committee hearing was unfair to other groups.

Brett Lambert, ASK campus director and sophomore in pre-law, justified asking for an increase in the Finance Committee recommendation because ASK at K-State is a lobbying group.

"Lobby groups are unlike any organization this group funds," he said. "We are building an effective organization here at K-State."

Senators allocated $596.20 to ASK at K-State, $155.80 more than Finance Committee recommended and $33.80 less than ASK had originally requested.

Senators approved funding for KSDB-FM as recommended by Finance Committee with only one change. Withholdings from an engineer's salary were taken out of KSDB's allocation because they are provided for elsewhere in the budget. KSDB was allocated $10,813.51.

An increase of $420.20 was made to Finance Committee's recommendation for U-Learn, making its total allocation $10,006.68. The additional money will be used to pay work-study employees this summer.

Debate continued until 1 a.m. Friday on allocations for MEChA, Student Governing Association and University for Man. A story on these allocations will be included in Monday's Collegian.

State Democrats to elect first convention delegates

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Kansas Democrats elect their first delegates to the party's national convention Saturday, and it appears likely former Vice President Walter Mondale will claim a few more than Colorado Sen. Gary Hart.

Twenty-six of the state's 44 delegates to the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco in July will be elected Saturday afternoon at five congressional district conventions.

The remaining 18 delegates will be elected at the state party convention in Topeka May 12.

When all the negotiations among the supporters of Mondale, Hart and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, as well as those who prefer to remain uncommitted, are finished and the votes tabulated next month, Mondale is expected to claim 20 or 21 of Kansas' delegates to Hart's 15 or 16, with seven or eight not pledged to any candidate.

Seven state party and elected officials must go to the national convention officially uncommitted, but among those seven is expected to be at least one delegate who privately supports Jackson.

A spokesman for the Mondale campaign in Kansas said Thursday that if the former vice president does as well as he hopes Saturday — and gets support from the small band of Jackson delegates — the Mondale camp probably would be willing to elect a Jackson person to one of the unpledged state at-large positions to be picked May 12.

At local caucuses across Kansas March 24, the Jackson forces failed to reach the 20 percent threshold set by national party rules to qualify for any national delegates.

Unpledged slates achieved the 20 percent threshold only in the 1st District of western Kansas.

Of the 764 delegates elected at the local level — who will be attending Saturday's district conventions — Mondale claimed 372, or 49 percent; Hart got 319, or 42 percent; Jackson collected 25, or 3 percent, and 48 chose to be elected in unpledged status,

Housing plan may increase 1985-86 rates

An article in the April 12 Collegian, "Residence hall fees may increase in fall," erroneously reported that a proposed housing rate increase may take place in the 1984-1985 school year. The proposed 6 to 7 percent increase actually may take place during the 1985-1986 school year.

The tentative budget for fiscal year 1986 for the Department of Housing was presented at the Housing Council meeting Wednesday. A final budget is expected in October 1984.

The tentative budget estimates residence hall rates may increase by 6.6 percent, or $60 per semester. Cooperative housing would be raised to $750 per semester from the current $700.

"The (tentative budget) may have to be severely revised," said Tom Frith, director of housing.

The budget for utilities and communications were projected by 10 percent in the tentative budget. Many who attended the meeting said the actual increase would be closer to 30 percent.

Outstanding ag adviser selected

Frank Gibbons, assistant professor of horticulture, has been selected as the outstanding adviser in the College of Agriculture for the 1983-1984 school year.

Gibbons advises 28 students in addition to teaching three classes. He also is performing research relating to environmental requirements of ornamental plant materials. He has been awarded several grants to support the research, some of which is conducted through the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station.

His professional memberships include the American Society for Horticultural Science, Gamma Sigma Delta, Pi Alpha Xi, Kansas Arborists Association, Natural Resources Management Committee, International Society of Arboriculture and the National Association of Colleges and Teachers of Agriculture. He is an adviser for the K-State Horticulture Club.

Professor receives teaching award

Robert Page, associate professor in landscape architecture, is the recipient of the Tau Sigma Delta medal as the Teacher of the Year in the College of Architecture and Design.

The medal was presented April 6 at the annual initiation and awards dinner of Tau Sigma Delta, a scholastic honorary.

Bernd Foerster, who is retiring as dean of architecture and design, also was honored with a medal recognizing distinguished service to the college.

Vet-med college hosts symposium

Representatives from 14 colleges of veterinary medicine in the United States and Canada are expected to visit K-State Saturday for a regional educational symposium.

The goals of the symposium are to discuss the teaching hospital concept as it relates to the mission of teaching, research and service at the veterinary colleges.

The symposium is sponsored by the American Association of Veterinary Colleges and the K-State College of Veterinary Medicine. The opening session will be at 9 a.m. at Frick Auditorium.

K-State President Duane Acker, Don Trotter, former dean of veterinary medicine; James Coffman, dean of veterinary medicine and Marvin Samuelson, associate professor of veterinary medicine, will be among speakers at the event.

Program to honor Kansas senator

Sen. Billy McCray, Kansas legislator for 18 years, will be honored at 7 p.m. Monday at the spring 1984 Conference of the Missouri-Kansas-Nebraska (MO-KAN-NE) Chapter of the Mid-America Association of Educational Opportunity Program personnel to be held at the Manhattan Holiday Inn Holiday.

The banquet honoring McCray will be highlighted by conference keynote speaker, Bill Sedlacek, director of the Counseling Center of the University of Maryland at College Park. Sedlacek will speak about his research on the assessment of disadvantaged and minority applicants for graduate and professional schools.

The theme of the conference is "Legislation-Education and Special Populations."

McCray will conduct a conference session on "Working with State Legislators Regarding Educational Funding."

McCray, who will retire from the Kansas Legislature this year, has won various awards and certificates of merit during his political career representing Wichita's 29th District.

Visiting architect to lecture

A San Francisco architect, Max Jacobson, will present an Oscar Ekdhall Memorial Lecture at 3:30 p.m. Wednesday in the Union Little Theater.

The public is invited.

Jacobson, with two other architects, established the JSW Partnership in 1974. Over the years, the partnership has completed more than 100 projects, most of them in the Bay Area. Their projects have been published in several books and in such magazines as Sunset and Progressive Architecture.

U-LearN updates DIAL cassette system

U-LearN, a campus information service, has announced plans to improve its DIAL cassette tape system during the summer.

The system, which was established in 1979, is a collection of tapes which address problems ranging from marital problems to how to get a job in the University library. Individuals call the DIAL number and request the tape they wish to hear, Susie Farber-Welsh, U-LearN coordinator, said.

"This (DIAL system) is all going to be rearranged to make it more accessible," she said. "It's all going to be redone this summer to make it updated and what the students want."

"We're having an advertising campaign in the fall to start this up again, and that's why it's going to be reworked this summer — updating the tapes, making them more accessible."

Farber-Welsh said she hopes to add new tapes which students have requested.

"We had a lot of people wanting information on advising, so we're trying to make a tape for advising; how to get an adviser; how to get a different one if you are not happy with the one you have and what do you do if you have a double major," she said.

"Another tape series we're trying to get is how to succeed in graduate school, how to write your thesis — all about graduate school life," Farber-Welsh said.

The tapes range in length from three to 10 minutes and each includes a suggested reference for further information.

The system also may include information about careers.

"This is just in the negotiation stage, nothing has been set up. But our idea is to set up a linkage with the Alumni Association so that we can get some scripts from K-State alumni explaining what their (work) days are like, where they are employed, what kind of money they make, what the industry is like and those kind of questions," Farber-Welsh said.

The Universities of Missouri and Kansas offer similar career services which have proven to be successful programs, she said.

Farber-Welsh said she believes alumni will be willing to participate.

"I don't perceive any problem because I think alumni would like to share their knowledge with students. I think they will appreciate that," she said, "but it is still in the negotiating stage."

Anyone wishing to listen to the tapes currently in the DIAL file can call 532-6907 from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday, noon to 6 p.m. on Saturdays.

City to begin repair of streets' potholes

Every spring marks the debut of bikinis, sailing out at Tuttle Creek Reservoir and obstacle course driving on Manhattan's city streets.

Potholes are again evident on local avenues.

Several large potholes on major streets have created driving hazards, and as the weather becomes warmer, city workers are beginning to repair streets.

Initially the repairs will be temporary. Patching will be implemented until cement can be laid in approximately one to one and a half months.

"Some of the temporary methods will hold fairly well, some won't hold well at all because of the moisture and the amount of traffic (on a particular street)," Director of Public Works Bruce McCallum said.

Cost of repairing city streets damaged from winter is difficult to estimate, he said.

"Ft. Riley Boulevard is the worst in terms of damage," he said.

The other major street requiring attention is Griffith Drive in the Northview section of Manhattan.

Both are slated for repairs this summer.

"Ft. Riley Boulevard alone would require approximately $200,000 to repair it," McCallum said.

Six months ago the Manhattan

Department of Public Works applied for $100,000 of state monies to help fund the repairs. McCallum said he isn't sure whether the city will be successful in acquiring the funds. The state will allocate funds to various communities, all of which are competing for the money, he said.

The amount of money allocated to Manhattan depends upon the severity of the damage inflicted on the streets. This summer, $35,000 to $40,000 will be used to patch the streets. The same amount was spent for that purpose last year.

"This hasn't been the worst winter in terms of severity of street damage. A couple of years ago it was worse," McCallum said.

He said damage to streets can be minimized by patching and sealing them throughout the year.

The use of sand and salt (used to melt the snow and ice) hastens the deterioration of the asphalt streets.

"The salt, in heavy concentration, aids in deterioration. We've tried to eliminate the use of it, but using salt helps to cut down on the number of traffic accidents," McCallum said.

Use of salt in moderation is less harsh on the streets and allows the number of accidents to be kept to a minimum, he said.

LA mayor to deliver talk

Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley will visit K-State on Monday to deliver the 64th Alfred M. Landon Lecture at 10:30 a.m. in McCain Auditorium.

No topic for the lecture has been announced, however, William Richter, chairman of the lecture series and professor of political science, said Bradley is expected to discuss urban affairs and the problems of governing America's second largest city.

As a leader in the effort to bring the 1984 Summer Olympic Games to Los Angeles, he also is expected to include comments about preparations for the games, which will be one of the major events in the world this year.

Bradley was elected mayor of Los Angeles in 1973 and has been re-elected twice since then. His 1982 attempt for the California governorship was unsuccessful.

Chariot race to boost city's Special Olympics

The 21st annual Lambda Chi Alpha Chariot Relays will be held at 4 p.m. today at Memorial Stadium.

Sixteen chariots sponsored by individual fraternities and riders from nine sororities will compete. The relays pit four representatives of a fraternity pulling a sorority representative in a relay-type race.

"This is an increase of four fraternity chariots from last year's competition," Bill Charlton, sophomore in political science and a member of Lambda Chi Alpha, said.

Each fraternity entry pays a fee to participate. All money received from the event will be given to the Manhattan Chapter of Special Olympics. This year's goal is $1,500.

In an extra effort to meet that goal, individual scholarships will not be given to a fraternity and sorority member this year.

"We wanted to devote more money to Special Olympics and to the community this year. We feel this will affect more people and will be of better use to a worthy cause," Charlton said.

Other attractions scheduled for the relays include a five-member brass quintet from Manhattan High School and a hot air balloon.

A relay queen also will be crowned during the event. Each sorority nominated a queen candidate, who was required to write an essay on a pre-determined subject. A selection committee from the Lambda Chi Alpha house will choose the winner based on the essay. The relay queen will then present a check to Special Olympics for the amount raised at the relays.

After the relays, there will be a presentation of trophies. The first-place team will receive a traveling trophy, and other trophies and plaques will be awarded to runner-up teams.

Kansas Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, will be the grand marshal and Richard "Swannie" Swanson will be the starter. Jeff Turner, a representative from Special Olympics, will be the guest speaker.

The relays are free and open to the public.

Reception to honor dean of architecture

More than 1,500 invitations have been sent to students, faculty and Manhattan citizens for a retirement reception to honor Bernd Foerster, dean of the College of Architecture and Design.

The reception is scheduled for 2 to 4 p.m. Saturday on the south lawn in front of McCain Auditorium and Nichols Hall.

"It is scheduled as an outdoor lawn party. If it rains, it will be held in the lobby of McCain," F. Gene Ernst, associate professor of architecture, said. "Rather than have a banquet at the country club or the Union, where a limited number of people could come, we decided to put up a big tent and have it outside," he said.

Ernst said that although 1,500 invitations were mailed, only 400 to 500 people are expected to attend. At 3 p.m. a short program of speakers will pay tribute to Foerster. The speakers include a faculty member, an alumnus, a staff member, one student and two local citizens.

"I really have no idea what they're going to do. I'm curious because they've sure left me out of it," Foerster said.

Foerster, who has been dean for 15 of the 30 years he has been teaching, said, "I love teaching. It has always been my interest and love. I just sort of fell into administration."

Limited speech access unfair

Press relations at Phyllis Schlafly's speech Monday night in the Union Forum Hall were a comedy of errors.

Several broadcasters from local and state news agencies arrived at the speech only to discover they wouldn't be allowed to tape Schlafly's remarks. Some members of the media were visibly upset by the situation and had a right to be.

Although a press conference was conducted before the speech, sponsored by the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas committee, Schlafly came to town to speak. The story, or at least part of it, was the speech.

While press conferences before speeches are always appreciated by the press, they often don't take the place of the actual presentation. A speaker may discuss something entirely different from the speech topic at a press conference.

UPC Adviser Sylvia Scott said the speaking contract from Schlafly's agency prohibited taping without written permission. UPC, because it had received no indication from the press that taping would be necessary, decided the press conference would suffice and did not bother to get permission, she said.

While members of the media probably should have asked whether they could tape the speech before Monday night, committee members should have had the foresight to take care of that business. After all, not being able to tape an event such as Schlafly's speech is the exception rather than the rule on the news beat in Manhattan, although Scott said past Issues and Ideas speeches have carried the same taping rule.

Broadcast and even print journalists like to tape news events because taping enhances accuracy. An unedited tape doesn't lie and prevents conflicts between the source and reporter as to whether a statement was quoted correctly.

Taping also is vital to a good broadcast news story. It is far better to have a source tell listeners part of the story than to have an announcer read it.

To prevent bad feeling between UPC and the press, the organization should endeavor to gain written permission for taping, whether the press requests it or not. This is the job of the sponsor of any speech. UPC should not be above this task.

Party could lose with Mondale

Gary Hart's chances of securing the Democratic nomination for president are fading. Walter Mondale scored big wins in the New York and Pennsylvania primaries, gaining both delegates and credibility as the choice candidate.

Why did the string of Hart victories end almost as abruptly as it began? One reason was the speed with which Hart became a top contender for the nomination. This led some to believe Hart was a Johnny-come-lately, without the staying power necessary to defeat President Reagan in November.

Another factor has influenced recent primaries and caucuses. Mondale has the support of traditional Democratic constituencies. Hart has support among non-traditional Democrats, Independents and cross-over Republicans. In most states where Hart has lost, the primary is closed to all but registered Democrats.

The Democratic Party should re-evaluate its priorities for the 1984 election.

If the party wants to show support for the candidate who will best represent traditional Democratic interests, then Mondale is the best choice. If defeating Reagan is the top priority, Mondale is not.

Party-loyal Democrats will not vote for Reagan. These voters will go to the polls in November to defeat Reagan, no matter which candidate gets the nomination. Republicans who like Reagan will turn out in his support.

The biggest factor in the 1984 election will be the swing vote. Hart's supporters fall in this category. If Hart is nominated, these voters will vote for a Democratic president. If not, they may vote for Reagan.

Currently, the outcome of the November general election is in doubt. But by selecting Mondale as their nominee, the Democrats may be giving Reagan the edge he needs to win.

'Dirty politics' color Philadelphia

WASHINGTON — I didn't think it took place anymore — at least not in such a threatening manner or such large doses. Cheating at polling places, I thought, was something out of the Old West and history books.

But in South Philadelphia on Tuesday, who won the presidential primary was of little consequence to the congressman for whom I work, his staff and campaign office. We had our own primary with which to contend.

The congressman is Tom Foglietta. A handsome Italian, a career politician and rumored playboy, Foglietta was seeking his third term party nomination Tuesday. His opponent was Jim Tayoun, a Lebanese restaurant owner who looks and talks like Marlon Brando's Godfather. Exactly.

These two men were battling for Pennsylvania's first congressional seat, a constituency comprised of Philadelphia's famous South Side. That is where Rocky jogged through the Italian Market and up the steps of the National Art Museum. Grace Kelly grew up there.

Independence Hall, the home of Betsy Ross and the Liberty Bell, is located in the heart of the district, reminders of the past and democracy's birth.

Thus, South Philadelphia is an intriguing mix of early colonial history and current streetsmart political savvy.

It's also home to genuine "dirty politics."

The Wall Street Journal described the primary race as "perhaps the wildest last hurrah of all in the country." The people in my office simply said, "Tayoun will do anything to win."

I didn't realize "anything" meant breaking voting machines, using motorcycle gangs to threaten voters and walking into voting booths with the voters to "help them."

NANCY MALIR
Washington Correspondent

In one polling place, the same woman actually voted five times.

Stories like these filtered into the campaign office all day. They came mostly from poll watchers, members of Foglietta's campaign staff who did just that — stood at polls for 13 hours to watch for voter fraud. Complaints also came from voters themselves.

"I just wanted to tell you," one lady whispered excitedly, "that in my ward, a carload of Tayoun's men drove up, handed the committeeman a note, and drove off. They had chains with them too."

"Tayoun's men are going into the voting booth with voters," a poll watcher called in anxiously.

When the police arrived at the scene, the committeeman replied nonchalantly. "Now, officer, you know I wouldn't let a thing like that happen here." He smiled. The cops left. The action continued.

Not all the polling places were this intimidating. The one I walked to in the Society Hill section of town practiced more discretion. A dozen of Tayoun's people simply hung around the entrance of the polling place. A couple of them handed out literature, but the rest just stood there.

Feeling uncomfortable with the situation and the dusk that settling in, I stuffed the "Foglietti for Congress" literature in my pocket, headed down a sidepath, and happened on another polling place. The same thing. Tayoun people just "being there."

I tried to watch them casually, but they picked up on my presence and glared. I headed back to the campaign office.

The minute I walked through the door Karen asked what had happened. "I hope you don't mind my coming back early — I felt really uncomfortable there," I said.

"Not at all," she said, and paused long enough to let me hear the phone conversation at the next desk.

"Bob, seven of Tayoun's men are threatening to break the committeeman's legs at the 43rd ward if he doesn't start supporting Tayoun. We've got the cops, the FBI and the election commission on their way down," Patti said hurriedly as she paced the floor holding the phone.

"This has been going on all day, Karen told me," Patti said.

It suddenly seemed very cold in the room. I pulled my coat around me.

Warm thoughts of the one-room schoolhouse where I vote at home kept wafting through my mind. The jovial atmosphere; the peanut butter cookies and toffee chews on the committee workers' table, free to all; the dirty sheets hanging in two corners of the room to serve as "voting booths;" the banter and gossip and laughter taking place while everyone knew full well who was voting for whom. Noble Township, Ellsworth County, Kans., never seemed farther away.

The Congressman won — by 6,000 votes. But that didn't change the results of the cheating and fraud that had taken place all day. Tayoun and his cronies just hadn't cheated enough.

Letters

Novice participant 'impressed' with LAR

Editor:
Re: Cindy Houck's letter, "Article underestimates LAR experience," in the April 10 Collegian:

There was a time when I, being somewhat biased, was going to steer clear of the "bovine experience." I too showed, or attempted to show, in the LAR. I went out with high hopes — such was my innocence. For me, it was the first time I had ever been that near an animal for any length of time.

Houck commented about how all animals which live in the same environment have similar dispositions and are comparable in ability to train. Perhaps she needs to discuss that theory with the employee who now sports a cast on his broken hand.

My even-tempered animal spent its first day in the squeeze chute. My roommate and I sought help other than beef unit employees, since comments such as, "Go out and get the animals yourselves — we need a good laugh," made us realize we could do without this help.

Deciding my animal needed help, we went out as often as we could. Even after I ended up on crutches due to a badly bruised foot, I stayed with it. Getting injured as I was is not as isolated as one may be led to believe. I took the advice given and did the best I could. It was during the last week before the LAR that the employee broke his hand, that I ended up with no animal and there was to be no show for me.

Houck need not remind Wessel of her previous showing experience, because I know that is what kept her going and me believing I had a chance. It also proves that Wessel probably knew what she was talking about.

What needs to be done regarding the LAR is to ban employees from showing the animal at the barn where they work, as is evident from the story. The employees should be there to help and give advice, not be busy with their own animals.

I did enjoy the experience I had at least attempting to get ready for the show. I, too, met new people. The luck of the draw was against me, though, and it needs to be pointed out that the LAR is not just "fun." The experiences I had are not as unique as one might assume.

I enjoyed Wessel's article. It made light of a very frustrating experience. I didn't feel it was as negative as others saw it. True, the results weren't given, but they had no place in her article. It was a pleasure to read something other than a dry article citing results.

Reagan beliefs show no change

WASHINGTON — Even before he was governor of California, Ronald Reagan said at his recent news conference, he had concluded "that the war in Vietnam had reached a position...in which we should have asked for a declaration of war and called it a war."

Reagan reached this conclusion not just by noticing that we had 500,000 soldiers in the field, but by looking down the Pacific Coast to Santa Monica where Jane Fonda lived. He wanted to declare war on her.

A declaration of war would have been good, the president said, "because of what was going on in our own country, in which none of the rules of warfare could apply with regard to lending aid and comfort to the enemy."

Now the president would prefer Congress not speak ill of his foreign policy — whatever it may be. He seems particularly exercised about the Lebanon fiasco, preferring to blame it not on his misreading of history, but on Congress' refusal to merely salute when he gave the order. In recent days, virtually the entire administration has opened up on Congress, including Secretary of State George Shultz and National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane.

Trouble is, the president has a point. Surely, it must be harder to chart a foreign policy course when Congress is incessantly demanding a change in direction. And when it comes to Lebanon, logic says the president is on to something when he says of congressional criticism, "All this can do is stimulate the terrorists and urge them on to further attacks..."

RICHARD COHEN
Columnist

But as with Vietnam, the president seems not to ask himself why these matters are debated in the first place. In Vietnam, it was because a succession of presidents had bloated the importance of that country, turning it into a domino that could topple other dominoes all the way to San Francisco.

Lebanon, too, was characterized by a confusing policy, shifting goals, rhetorical overkill and the absolute insistence on turning a local struggle into East-West Armageddon. Once again, American lives were being lost and once again an administration was forced to promote a relatively unimportant country into the linchpin of the Western world.

It hardly matters that the president was wrong on Lebanon or many of the dissenters were right on Vietnam. What matters is the legitimacy of dissent itself. The president does not seem to appreciate that it is a way of getting at the truth. That holds not only for Jane Fonda, but also for information leakers at the Pentagon.

Vietnam was not this president's responsibility, but Lebanon was. Instead of blaming Congress for the debacle there, he ought to be thankful that its insistence on debate revealed all sorts of policy shortcomings. The debate was not something that aided and abetted the enemy. It aided our own country.

The same holds for Vietnam. The last thing that tragedy needed was a declaration of war. What it needed was for people like Ronald Reagan to listen to those people he still wants to silence. The dissenters, as obnoxious as a few of them were, did not deserve a declaration of war. They deserved a wider audience.

Attitude affects 'pud' classes

Editor,

Re: Lauri Diehl's column, "'Pud' classes cheat all concerned," in the April 9 Collegian:

As instructor of a course frequently referred to as a "pud" (the Physical World I lab), I would make one addition to Diehl's column. For those students who feel "forced" to take a "pud" course to fulfill a curricular requirement ("one hour of lab science"), perhaps a change of attitude can improve the situation for all students in the course and the instructor.

The instructor who respects his or her sphere of knowledge will attempt to provide a learning environment which is not "pud" — and the student who does the work necessary for learning usually is pleasantly surprised to realize he or she has enjoyed the acquisition of new experiences and knowledge.

Rebels plant mines in Nicaragua

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Anti-Sandinista rebels have placed land mines on stretches of roads leading from the Atlantic port of Puerto Cabezas to the Honduran border, civilian and military sources said Thursday.

The sources, who spoke on condition that they not be identified for security reasons, said the land mines had been located close to towns and roads leading from Puerto Cabezas to the border town of Waspan some 60 miles away.

They said the action was aimed at Nicaraguan troops operating in the area, which is in North Yelapa province in northeastern Nicaragua.

The mining of Nicaraguan ports, approved by President Reagan, has become the center of international controversy. The Reagan administration says the mining was approved because of the Sandinistas' support for leftist rebels fighting the U.S.-supported government in El Salvador. The Nicaraguan insurgents deny, however, having received U.S. aid to plant the mines.

Student's body found near car

SALEM, Ore. — A body believed to be that of a missing college student was found less than a half-mile from her abandoned car, authorities said Thursday. Six other girls or young women have been killed by unknown assailants here in the last three years.

Marion County District Attorney Michael Brown said investigators were "virtually certain" the body discovered Wednesday was that of 18-year-old Katherine "Katy" Redmond, a student at Willamette University from Mill Valley, Calif.

Redmond last was seen at 2 a.m. Saturday when she left a fraternity party on the Willamette campus. Her car was found abandoned two hours later, engine running, on Salem's eastern outskirts about four miles from the campus.

LYONS — Two whooping cranes flew into Quivera National Wildlife Refuge on Wednesday night, bringing to seven the number of the rare birds that have been sighted in Kansas this spring.

The two birds were resting this morning before resuming their migration to the Wood Buffalo National Refuge in Canada, said Charles Darling, the manager of the Quivera refuge.

There are only about 120 of the birds known to exist, and they are on the endangered species list.

Jackson gives keepsakes to ill boy

TULSA, Okla. — All 14-year-old David Smithee wanted was to meet entertainer Michael Jackson. But after a visit arranged by a Tulsa group this week, the youngster battling cystic fibrosis counts the superstar among his closest friends.

David visited Jackson in the singer's home in Encino, Calif., and returned home Tuesday with one of Jackson's famous beaded gloves and a red leather jacket the singer wore in his "Beat It" video.

"He pulled out his red letter jacket with the 'M' on it at first, the one he used in the beginning of the 'Thriller' video," David said. "But then he pulled this one out and said I could have my choice."

The glove Jackson gave David was the one he wore to the American Music Awards where he won a record eight awards.

David's mother, Karen Smithee, said the keepsakes will be put in to a vault for safekeeping.

Reagan visits Dallas construction site

By The Associated Press

DALLAS — President Reagan, in Texas to celebrate a resurgence in home building, was told by housing industry leaders Thursday that "time is running out" and that the recovery may be killed off by rising interest rates.

During a visit to a construction site and in a roundtable discussion with builders and bankers, Reagan expressed optimism that interest rates will come down again by summer's end, despite what he called an upward recent "flurry."

But in a rare public exchange of views with business leaders, Reagan was subjected to some blunt talk about what may lie ahead for the recovery he came to boast about.

His own optimism contrasted sharply with the worried tone of remarks by his fellow panelists. They warned that the notoriously volatile housing industry may soon be choked by continuing high federal deficits, fear of inflation and interest rates that already have begun to cut many would-be home buyers out of the market.

On the second day of a two-day trip to Missouri and Texas to spotlight growth in the economy, Reagan visited a housing development where he told workers building $70,000 homes that the recovery has restored "everyone's dream of wanting to own their own piece of ground and their own house."

"You're out in front of the rest of the United States as to the comeback," Reagan said, noting that he had come to the Dallas area to get "a picture of what's happening all over America."

But even before he left the job site, Rocco Pigneri, the project manager, asked him about the future of interest rates. Reagan replied, "I have hope that we are going to see them come down." He attributed the recent upward flurry to pessimism among bankers, who fear a return of inflation.

When he reached a nearby hotel for a discussion with industry leaders, Reagan was told by Michael Wood, publisher of The Builder magazine and sponsor of the roundtable, that 11 of the 12 industry participants had expressed concern about interest rates.

David Smith, incoming president of the National Association of Home Builders, told Reagan the recovery "represents a major triumph for your administration."

"But the recovery, Mr. President, has reached a critical turning point," Smith said. He cited uncertainty in the marketplace and told Reagan, "Builders are the ones who live and die with the ups and downs in interest rates. And interest rates,

Mr. President, are rising. "That has the builders worried. When mortgage rates were in the 13 percent range a few months ago, we had a strong market. Now mortgage rates are approaching 14 percent and still rising. That's too high for millions of potential home buyers."

If the situation is not reversed by immediate action to reduce the federal deficit, Smith said, "It is only a matter of time before home sales drop, new construction declines and unemployment rises."

"Time is running out," he warned.

Paul Prior, chairman of the U.S. League of Savings Institutions, remarked before Reagan arrived that "the recent uptick in interest rates makes my knees tremble even more than appearing before the president of the United States."

Wolf Creek: nuclear power changes Kansas

The Wolf Creek Generating Station, located 10 miles northeast of Burlington, towers above its 5,000 acre cooling reservoir. The water will be used in the nuclear power plant's production of electricity.

Town taps 'potential for growth'

By ANDY OSTMEYER
Features Editor
CONNIE WOODARD
Staff Writer and MELISSA BRUNE
Staff Writer

The people of Burlington have faced dramatic changes in their community since 1975, when the Wolf Creek Generating Station came to town.

The population of Burlington increased from approximately 2,000 to 3,200 in the eight years between 1975 and 1982, and the value of the land in rose from $32.6 million to $233.9 million.

Burlington is approximately 55 miles south of Topeka in Coffey County, and the station is located about 10 miles northeast of Burlington.

Information published by the station states that it contributes 80 to 85 cents of every tax dollar collected by Coffey County.

Joe Fritz, Coffey County appraiser, said this estimate is conservative. The county has estimated 87½ cents to be the correct figure.

Perhaps the most obvious example of community change brought about by the station are the new schools in Burlington. The upper elementary and high school buildings are five years old. Their red brick walls and bright orange roofs give them a modern appearance, contrasting with the other older buildings in town.

Enrollment in the Burlington Unified School District No. 244 has increased steadily since 1974, when the station's owners applied for a construction permit. Over this 10 year period, enrollment in the elementary, junior high and senior high schools increased by 100 students, resulting in a need for new facilities.

Harold Charff, superintendent of schools, said he believes "undoubtedly" that had the plant site not been in the vicinity of Burlington, the school district would not have been able to finance construction of new schools.

The school district currently employs approximately 25 more instructors than in 1974.

"As our tax bases increase, so has our ability to attract better qualified teachers," Charff said.

Charff said the school system is now able to utilize resources such as a large library of video tapes and computer software. But, he added, there is another side to the educational coin.

"We've had to take special precautions to make sure kids who transfer (to the Burlington school district) are provided relevant instruction (to meet their educational levels)," Charff said. "But that's something competent teachers can handle."

Students in this district may be learning things they otherwise might not have learned because of the power plant. Teachers have access to nuclear power training and have toured the plant. An educational coordinator is available from Wolf Creek as well, Charff said.

"We don't take a stand one way or the other about nuclear power (in the schools)," he said. However, students have the opportunity to learn about it in school if they wish, he said.

USD No. 244 is required by law to have an emergency preparedness plan. Charff said the plan is "pretty comprehensive" and involves relocation and evacuation by using district school buses.

Charff said the members of the Board of Education as well as most of the people he knows are supportive of the Wolf Creek construction.

In addition to the new schools, Burlington is constructing a building to be used as the Criminal Justice Center. It will house the Emergency Preparedness Agency in the basement, Carroll Wilcox, coordinator for emergency preparedness, said.

Coffey County Sheriff Earl Freeman said the construction of the station helped the city get the new Criminal Justice Center.

"It would have been a long, drawn-out affair for us to get a new jail," he said. "It would have been awful hard."

The emergency preparedness office was a part-time, one-person office before the station construction began. Now the computerized office has one part-time and three full-time salaried employees and one volunteer who works almost full-time.

The building is expected to be completed in July or August 1985 and will cost approximately $1.4 million, Wilcox said. But this building is just one of the changes affecting local law enforcement agencies.

Freeman said he had only two other officers working under him in 1975, but now he has eight. He estimated three or four of the officers were appointed due to changes incurred by the station.

He said the other officers were hired because of changes in state law which govern the number of hours each officer may work.

Since the construction of the Wolf Creek station began, the crime rate in Coffey County has escalated.

In 1976 only six cases of assault or battery were reported. This figure increased to 18 in 1980 and 22 in 1982.

"It's leveled back off," Freeman said, referring to the number of cases reported after 1982.

He attributed the rise in certain types of offenses to the different types of workers hired for construction at the station.

When the "outside rough workers" were assembling the steel and concrete main structures of the plant, the number of these cases increased. When the "inside workers" who are "putting the brains in the plant" came to work, the number of assault and battery cases dropped, Freeman said. The "inside workers" came to work in 1982, possibly accounting for the drop in assault and battery cases.

Thefts dropped from 64 in 1976 to 24 in 1979, the increased again to 74 in 1982. The number of burglaries dropped from 49 in 1976 and 54 in 1977 to two reported burglaries in 1981 and nine in 1982.

Freeman said Coffey County was one of the poorer Kansas counties before construction of the station began.

Terry Denker, representative of the Bureau of Economic Analysis in Topeka, said that in 1969, Coffey County was ranked approximately 90th of the 105 counties in the state in terms of average income per county. When construction was underway in 1976 and 1977, the county income rose to approximately 60th place.

In 1969, Coffey County residents averaged only 78.3 percent of the average Kansas income. In 1977 this had risen to approximately 88 percent, but dropped approximately 3 percent by 1981, Dinker said.

Charles Perkins, secretary for the Burlington Chamber of Commerce, said he believes Burlington has the resources for future economic growth.

Perkins gave many reasons why the area may be attractive to other industries.

The community will have a lower tax base than other communities, he said, and an industrial park has been established near the town. Electricity in the area will be less expensive, and there is a supply of trained labor in the area available for other incoming industries. The area is attractive overall because of John Redmond Reservoir, he said.

Perkins said no other industry has shown interest in the area, and no industry has been solicited.

He said if the station were to "sink in the financial seas," only the tax base would change — the rest of the community wouldn't suffer much.

"We're still basically a farming community," Perkins said.

Fritz said, "Having the plant there isn't going to bring in new people, jobs, etc., but the potential for growth exists."

The area can grow if the community makes the effort to expand, he said.

There is no doubt that the Wolf Creek station has affected this small, formerly conservative agricultural community, say city officials and business leaders.

Many see it as the basis for further growth of the area's industry, Charff said. He said he believes Burlington is becoming more of an industrial community.

Glenn German, publisher and owner of Coffey County Today, summed up the town's attitude.

"I think the trend of the thinking is, 'Thank God that's over. Now maybe we can get down to business and do some growing.'"

Complications mar plant's past

By KARLA PORTER
Staff Writer

The Wolf Creek Generating Station has a troubled past.

Kansas Gas & Electric Co. and Kansas City Power & Light Co. began toying with the idea of building a plant near the John Redmond Reservoir in the late 1960s, following an announcement by Cities Service Gas Co. of the increasing shortage of natural gas in Kansas. The reservoir was seen as an ideal source of water for the plant, and the site seemed central to the service area of the two companies.

KG&E and KCP&L signed an agreement to co-sponsor a plant in 1971, and in 1973 announced plans to construct a nuclear power plant on the Wolf Creek site.

The announcement came during the worst energy crunch in the nation's history. Like other states, Kansas was reeling under spiraling fuel prices and fuel shortages sparked by the oil embargo of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC). The initial response to the $500 million project, scheduled for completion in 1981, was favorable.

The affection soon wore off, however. Before KG&E had even formally filed for a building permit, opposition groups had begun a crusade to prevent (and later, halt) construction.

One which received heavy media coverage was a group of angry Coffey County residents who called themselves the Wolf Creek Nuclear Plant Opposition Inc. The group protested nuclear power plants as unsafe and complained about the forced sale of farm land and relocation of more than 40 families.

Their complaints, as with most subsequent protests, had little impact on the project. More serious problems began to surface in 1975, however.

First, plant officials had to contend with "environmental reservations" of the Environmental Protection Agency concerning plant proposals. Later that year, the project's "hedge against inflation," the early acquisition of fuel, was negated by Westinghouse's cancellation of a contract to provide the plant's uranium. Wolf Creek's owners were forced to look elsewhere — at a much higher price — for about half of the plant's uranium. The anticipated completion date became spring 1982.

In 1977 the companies received an official building permit from the Atomic Energy Commission, now the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. Company officials announced the estimated costs had risen to $1.4 billion.

Construction progressed smoothly until December 1978, when questions arose concerning the strength of concrete in the reactor base mat, which would support the vital reactor vessel. As a result, work stopped on the concrete until the following July, costing millions of dollars in overtime pay and pushing the expected completion date to 1983. Construction workers have been working overtime, on and off, ever since.

In 1979, faced with a Kansas Corporation Commission audit charging construction laxity and cost overruns, and in response to public outcry after the Three Mile Island mishap, the companies stepped up "worst-case" preparations and quality control.

The reactor vessel was put in place in 1980, and by 1981 company officials said the job was 73 percent complete and would be finished in April 1984. Since that time, the work has progressed slowly, amid periodic citations for violations and outbursts of protest. Construction costs are now set at "slightly more" than $2.67 billion, nearly six times the original estimate.

After the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's announcement this week of its plans to cancel its annual inspections of the building site, construction may be completed before the current February 1985 deadline.

Plant costs exceed original estimates

DAVID BEVENS

Skyrocketing costs have prompted extensive media coverage of the construction of the Wolf Creek Generating Station.

When the cost of making the station operational was first estimated in 1973, officials put the date of service at 1981 and the price at $783 million. Today, almost 11 years later, the date of operation is set for February 1985, and based on that date, the cost is estimated at $2.67 billion.

Analysis

Last week, officials from the Kansas City Power & Light Co., partial owners of the plant, said the actual cost would be "slightly" more than the $2.67 billion cited earlier. This estimate is based on the assumption that the plant will become commercially operational in February 1985.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission, however, forecasts the plant's completion date could be pushed back as much as eight months, at an additional cost of $216 million.

Even with the current estimates, customers of Kansas Gas & Electric Co., Kansas City Power & Light Co. and Kansas Electric Power Cooperative Inc. face high rate increases. According to station spokesmen, the utilities own 47 percent, 47 percent and 6 percent of the plant, respectively. The PR&W Cooperative (Pottawatomie, Riley and Wabaunsee counties) is the local subsidiary of KEPCO, and only the outlying areas of Manhattan are afected by this cooperative. Most of Manhattan is under the service of KP&L.

The current estimate of $2.67 billion could mean a rate hike of at least 50 percent for KCP&L's customers in both Kansas and Missouri. The customers of KG&E face possible increases of 80 or 90 percent. Full operation of the Wolf Creek station would mean a 25 percent increase for KEPCO customers.

Consumers affected by the station are beginning to wonder if the eventual "cheap energy" promised to them by the plant's owners is a goal too far in the future to benefit their energy needs.

Several reasons have been cited for the escalating costs of the Wolf Creek station and the rising costs, even if temporary, affecting consumers.

One reason for the $1.8 billion difference in the estimated 1973 and 1984 costs is the double-digit inflation that has assaulted the economy for almost a decade.

In addition, the NRC predicted last year that fuel loading at the station would be delayed from this summer to next spring, meaning commercial operation will not begin until October. For each month of delay, interest rates alone would cost $27 million per month. Costs of labor and materials also would rise.

This leads to another factor in the escalating costs of putting the plant on line. Legislators have established that Wolf Creek owners cannot begin charging customers to help pay for the cost of constructing the plant until the plant goes on line. Thus, the companies now experience such a financial strain they aren't able to accelerate construction.

Also believed to contribute to unpredicted higher costs is the effect of media coverage on the financial stability of Wolf Creek stock.

Many experts said the recent story about the fuel loading delay in the Wall Street Journal could have contributed to the recent decline in the stocks' value. Utility stocks are considered to be sensitive to changes in interest rates.

In addition, the Three Mile Island nuclear accident and the subsequent public concern about the safety of nuclear power has delayed the estimated completion date of on-line operation by inflicting new controls on the plant's construction.

Recent federal and state legislation has imposed new safety regulations concerning the construction of nuclear power plants. These regulations have delayed construction, thus driving up the costs of labor and materials and incurring an even larger debt expense.

The proponents of the plant have defended it, saying more temporary expenses now will create more efficient energy in the future.

But it remains to be seen if the owners of the station will be able to overcome pre-operational difficulties and produce the cost-efficient energy they have promised their customers.

Uranium atoms fuel new source of power

By MELISSA BRUNE
Staff Writer

The impact of the Wolf Creek Generating Station on state communities and industry has created a need to define the process of generating nuclear power.

It often appears few people understand what exactly is meant by the term nuclear power, and even fewer know its distinction from nuclear weapons.

A booklet published and distributed by the Edison Electric Institute, "Nuclear Power: Answers to Your Questions," includes descriptions of the generation of nuclear power, its effects on the environment, the safety of nuclear power and a comparison with alternative energy sources.

To explain the difference between nuclear energy and nuclear weapons, a brief summary of the generation of nuclear power is necessary.

Similar to the way fossil fuels such as oil and coal are used to produce power to generate electricity, nuclear power is used to create heat to boil water which produces steam to turn a turbine, thus making electricity. Nuclear energy, however, utilizes atoms of fissionable uranium to create the heat. One atom is initially split by hitting it with a neutron.

According to the booklet, splitting the first atom releases heat, two or three more neutrons and radiation. These neutrons can strike other uranium atoms, creating a chain reaction. A nuclear reactor provides controlled conditions for the fissioning process to take place for producing nuclear power. Heat released as a product of fission boils the water.

The third product of fission is radiation, or radioactive waste.

"There's some radiation produced immediately when fission takes place. The two fission fragments resulting from the process are radioactive. When they decay, whatever is left of them is considered the radioactive waste," said Hermann Donnert, professor of nuclear engineering.

According to the booklet, the reactor of a nuclear power plant contains a core of nuclear fuel which is composed primarily of uranium. There are four basic parts of a commercial nuclear reactor: the core containing the fuel; the control system which maintains fissioning rate and heat generation; the primary cooling system carrying heat from the core; and the additional cooling systems and protection barriers.

In the reactor at Wolf Creek, water enters the fuel assemblies in the core from a separate system which does not come into contact with the environment.

Although the booklet states the fission process can never "run away," it states that, "it is recognized that if the primary cooling water is lost from the reactor system, it is theoretically possible that the fuel core may melt and destroy itself, but it cannot cause a nuclear explosion. Commercial reactor fuel can never be rearranged so the material would be able to undergo a nuclear explosion."

This illustrates the basic difference between the nuclear energy used for generation of power and that used for weapons. The concentration and arrangement of materials in the two are not the same. The type of uranium used to produce power, as well as its concentration, does not permit it to release energy rapidly, as occurs with the use of nuclear weapons.

Wolf Creek Generating Station, like other nuclear power plants, must undergo safety analysis to guard against the possibility of a meltdown. Studies submitted to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission by the station include a preliminary safety analysis and an environmental impact statement.

Combined, these studies cover the structure of the system and include information on meteorological, hydrological, geological and environmental aspects of the plant site.

When the station is completed, a final safety analysis report will review and analyze the essential aspects of plant operation and maintenance.

Simplified coverage creates misconceptions about plant

By CONNIE WOODARD
Staff Writer

Media accounts of the construction of the Wolf Creek Generating Station have distorted facts and created problems because of oversimplification, said Lyle Koerper, Kansas Gas & Electric Co. spokesman for Wolf Creek information.

The media attempts to capsule a story that is very complex in nature, he said.

"We don't have a problem that can be described in 10 words or less, and the same with a solution," Koerper said.

A reporter for the Wichita Eagle-Beacon was asked to resign recently for using improperly dated documents to make an unfounded charge against company management. Yet Floyd Lewis, mayor of Burlington, said he thinks state and local media coverage of Wolf Creek has been fair.

The Eagle-Beacon "seems to like to play up the issue of (Wolf Creek) and give it a bad eye," he said, but at the same time the newspaper has printed facts about the plant he said he considers accurate.

Carroll Wilcox, Coffey County Emergency Preparedness Coordinator, said he has been dissatisfied with media coverage of the recent three weeks of hearings about emergency procedures before the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

The NRC and the Federal Emergency Management Agency announced Tuesday that the required emergency procedures are adequate.

"I'm neither pro or con. I'm charged with protecting the public, not with getting a nuclear plant licensed or not getting it licensed," Wilcox said.

"Prior to this time, (the local newspaper, Coffey County Today's) only reporter was one of the interveners, one of the people contesting the licensing of the plant. At best, I think our coverage was slanted."

"The first day of a hearing like this is called an open hearing. Anybody who wants to appear before the Nuclear Regulatory Commission has an opportunity to come in and speak for 10 minutes."

"None of their claims have to be substantiated or documented. They can just come in and wave their arms and beat their breasts, prance around and jump up and down."

"That was covered by six TV stations with their cameras. I don't have any idea how many radio stations and newspapers were there."

"As soon as those people (protestors) finished, they (media) all left. We had three more weeks of hearings and nobody cared what happened," he said.

Very little actual testimony was published in the newspapers, Wilcox said. Only United Press International came back to listen to the testimony after the first day, he said.

The thousands of man-hours devoted to developing the emergency evacuation plan were completely neglected by the media, Wilcox said.

"There is lots of testimony in three weeks. The written testimony that was given during the trials is a stack of typewritten papers 16 inches high. The pretrial testimony was over three feet high," he said.

Wilcox said television coverage of nuclear protests across the country includes the same protestors over and over again.

"But this was the only thing that got any media coverage," Wilcox said.

"Part of it may be my fault because I did not give any interviews and I had asked my response team not to give any interviews. I thought if we were going to try this, we should try it in the hearing room and not in the press."

Wilcox said he believes the Wolf Creek staff makes the best effort possible to answer reporters' questions accurately and honestly.

Wilcox said nothing has been "covered up" at the Wolf Creek station. The NRC has been notified of errors and mistakes in construction. The staff has not avoided drawing attention to problems, he said.

Ron Falkenstein, nuclear education specialist, has been responsible for documenting and coordinating educational information about the station and nuclear power for nine months. His primary objective has been to establish a good working relationship with the local school system for nuclear education.

His job has included visitations to school groups ranging from fourth grade to graduate students.

He's been responsible for providing educational materials to teachers who wanted to establish a lesson plan or a lab in the classroom. He has answered many requests from students who are doing term papers.

Falkenstein also leads tours of the construction site. For the past four years, groups such as church clubs and fraternal organizations have toured the plant on Fridays and Saturdays. On the average, 200 to 600 people a month tour the station.

"We attempt to bring in media groups separately because they'll usually have cameras and additional questions. They might be doing an article and it might take more time, so we don't want to impose on other groups," Falkenstein said.

"We try to get them into areas where the general public normally can't get into and try and get answers to their specific questions. There are a couple areas of the plant that right now we don't take our public into, just for logistical reasons," he said.

There is a great lack of accuracy in many of the articles about the station, he said. Generally members of the media with no background in nuclear power will take a two-hour tour and attempt to accurately write about the plant and nuclear power.

"It's hard to remember every fact and figure and how the plant works, particularly if the tour was a week prior to publication," he said.

"Frequently there will be inaccuracies, generally small ones when they talk about how the plant works. A lot of times they (the inaccuracies) will start misconceptions with the reader, and we've had a little concern about that," Falkenstein said.

He said he thinks the media has not done a good job of explaining why the plant was proposed.

"We were in a position in the early 1970s where we had to look for alternatives. The alternatives were coal and nuclear — the only two ways to go," Falkenstein said. "We took both approaches."

KG&E built five coal-generating plants as part of an overall project that included the construction of the Wolf Creek station.

A major problem with the incident at Three Mile Island was that there was "no reliable information source," Falkenstein said.

"Literally dozens of people were talking to the press independently and frequently giving conflicting stories. In all fairness to the press, they didn't know who to believe or what to write. And frequently it was the eye-catching, catastrophic-possibility story that made the headlines."

"I was a resident of the area at the time, and I was very concerned because I could get three different newspapers and get three different stories. It just wasn't done in a very coherent way. It was a mess," Falkenstein said.

The NRC has written regulations that establish a network for the transfer of public information, he said. One company spokesman will be stationed in an area specifically designed for dissemination of information to the media. The NRC will still have priority in making statements, but will rely on the facility to provide most information, Falkenstein said.

The station also is required to provide training sessions for members of the media as part of the information transfer process. Falkenstein said he expects this to be implemented in the next two to three months.

Examines 'changeable' world

"A theatre that can't be laughed in is a theatre to laugh at. Humorless people are ridiculous."
— Bertolt Brecht

Bertolt Brecht remained true to this statement in "The Good Woman of Setzuan," which opened Friday night in McCain Auditorium.

It also will be performed at 8 p.m. today and Saturday in McCain. The play is presented by the K-State Players and the Department of Speech.

As described by Block and Shedd in their book "Masters of Modern Drama,"

"Der Gute Mensch von Sezuan (The Good Woman of Setzuan) is literally translated as the good 'person' of Setzuan because the principal figure is both a man and a woman. Brecht states that the play was begun in Denmark in 1938 and completed in Sweden two years later. He calls it a palatable piece and adds the province of Setzuan stands for any place where some men are exploited by others. Brecht makes virtually no use of a specific scene or decor; the place could be anywhere in Europe.

"It is characteristic of Brecht's art that he does not spell out a solution; the open unresolved conclusion is part of the deliberate appeal to the spectators: 'find out the end yourselves!'

"Repeatedly, Brecht stated that his plays are based on the fundamental assumption that the world is changeable. The direction of change is indicated in the action, yet nowhere does the playwright mark out the precise course this change should follow, or the specific consequences that should result. It is not likely that 'The Good Woman of Setzuan' will make Marxists of the spectators, but its rapid antitheses, sardonic wit, and insight into human nature mark it as one of the great plays of all time."

In the play, three gods come to earth looking for just one good person, but eventually must settle for the prostitute Shen Te, who gives them a place to spend the night. When they tell her to be good when they leave, she says, "I'd like to be good, it's true, but there's the rent to pay... How is it done? Well, I'll confess to you, I sell myself in order to live, and even so I can't get along."

Answering her, one of the gods says, "We can't do anything about that. We mustn't meddle with economics."

With this, Brecht sets the stage for the plot of this hilariously funny production. That is, we laugh while trying to answer some fundamental questions about personal values.

The delightful aspect of this play is that those questions are not fully answered by the playwright. In fact, about the time the plot seems to be going along well, Brecht throws the audience a curve. Brecht uses an unexpected pregnancy, and an unexpected murder trial to make the audience think about what is happening on stage.

It has been said that Brecht uses alternating pulsation in his plays. The setting of this play somehow seems familiar, although the characters should have been dressed in oriental costume. Obviously the director tried to improve on the script by overlooking the playwright's idea of having Setzuan located in the Orient. The characters looked more like Ozark hillbillies than Orientals. This was somewhat puzzling because the music was definitely Oriental.

Former rock vocalist to give Christian show

By DENISE WILLSON
Collegian Reporter

Leon Patillo, former lead vocalist and keyboard player for the rock group Santana, is scheduled to perform at 7:30 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

Patillo will perform contemporary Christian music. He relies on a blend of musical styles, including pop, gospel funk and "techno" rock. Patillo uses a variety of equipment in his solo performance, including keyboards, synthesizers and DMX programmable drum machines. With the variety of instruments he is able to produce the sound of a full band as well as a symphonic orchestra.

Patillo began performing and composing music at the age of 13. After graduating from San Francisco City College with an accounting degree, he joined a band called Creation.

During his stint with Creation, Carlos Santana heard the band and asked Patillo to join Santana. He played and toured with Santana for three years before leaving to start his career of concert ministry.

In 1980 and 1981, Patillo toured Europe, the Middle East, Australia, Canada and the United States.

Patillo has released four solo albums. The first, titled "Dance, Children, Dance," was recorded immediately following his departure from Santana.

The second, "Don't Give In" was released in 1981.

His third album included lead guitar by Santana and vocals by Earth, Wind and Fire member Philip Bailey. The album, titled "I'll Never Stop Loving You," received the No. 1 "Cornerstone" award on the Contemporary Christian magazine's top airplay chart.

Patillo released his fourth album in 1983. The album, titled "Live Experience," was recorded in concert.

Tickets for the Patillo show, which is being sponsored by Campus Outreach, are available in the McCain Box Office for $6.

Texas singer to perform

Texas entertainer and comedian
Doc Gibbs, accompanied by his five piece band, will appear at 8 p.m.
Saturday in the Union Little Theatre.

Gibbs is perhaps best known for his singing impressions of such entertainers as Michael Jackson,
Barbara Streisand, Kenny Rogers,
Elvis Presley and Barry Manilow.

He also writes and arranges music. His best known piece is "Do

"The PTA Song," which he wrote while a bus driver in Longview, Texas.

Gibbs' first album, titled
"Tingle," was released on the Platinum City label in 1982. The material included on the album, often arranged by Gibbs, ranges from rhythm and blues to country, disco and old standards.

Gibbs and his band appear regularly at Pappa's Porch Restaurant in Richardson, Texas.

Tickets for his appearance, spon-

Wildcats shoot down Red Ravens, 17-7, 7-1

By HUEY COUNTS
Sports Editor

Behind Cary Colbert's six RBIs in the opener and Wally Bramlage's four-hit pitching in the second game, the K-State baseball team cruised to a pair of lopsided victories over Benedictine College.

The non-conference wins Wednesday at windy Frank Meyers Field improved the Wildcats' overall record to 10-14.

K-State jumped to a quick lead in the opener, rattling Benedictine starter Dave Bodgan for four runs in the first inning. Kerry Golden started the scoring binge with a single and later scored on Colbert's one-out double. Otto Kaifes then singled to drive in Colbert. Kaifes moved to second on Mark Goodwin's base hit and both scored on a triple by Jack Fritz.

Benedictine scored three runs in the top of the second to cut the K-State lead to one, but the Wildcats tallied four in the fourth to boost their lead back to four. Colbert's two-run double highlighted the 'Cats' scoring.

Tom Jensen belted a Tim McKinnis pitch over the right field fence for a two-run homer as the Red Ravens mounted a comeback in the fourth, scoring four runs to cut the deficit to 9-7.

But once again the Red Ravens' pitching collapsed.

Benedictine pitchers gave up just three hits, but walked four batters and hit another as seven K-State runners crossed the plate in the bottom of the fourth.

Golden contributed a two-run triple, and Colbert added a two-run homer — his sixth of the season — over the left-field fence to pace the scoring outburst.

The game ended in the fifth because of the 10-run rule when Kent Schaede doubled and scored on a Steve Goodwin triple.

McKinnis picked up his first victory of the season, allowing seven runs on 11 hits.

Schaede, Colbert and Golden each had three hits in the contest.

The Wildcats bats cooled off in the second game, however. K-State got two hits in the second inning and three in the sixth, but was again aided by an abundance of base-on-balls.

John Tirrell, Jay Kvasnicka and Scott Graves drew consecutive walks in the third. Kaifes followed with a shot down the third-base line, scoring Tirrell and Kvasnicka. Brian Bascue followed with a single to left to drive in Graves and Kaifes.

Meanwhile, Bramlage held the Benedictine batters hitless until Brian Suavo hit a two-out double in the fourth.

K-State's offense came alive again in the sixth inning as Eric Gosset walked, David Banning singled and Tom Meyer drilled his second home run of the season over the left field fence.

Bramlage's shutout bid was spoiled in the seventh when Ray Bulte

Benedictine College second baseman Tim Mullane watches as K-State's Kent Schaede slides to second base after hitting a double, driving in the winning run in the Wildcats' 17-7 rout Thursday at Frank Meyers Field. The 'Cats also won the second game of the doubleheader 7-1.

Track teams split for weekend action

By JUDY WRIGHT
Staff Writer

The track squads will participate in two different meets this weekend in hopes of qualifying more athletes for nationals, Head Track Coach Steve Miller said.

"The weather is really starting to be a problem," Miller said. "All we want is the opportunity to run in a good meet, with good weather conditions against good competition."

The men's team will participate in the Shocker Sports Festival at Wichita State University, and all but four members of the women's squad will be in Norman, Okla., to participate in the John Jacobs Invitational.

Of the four women not going to Norman, Pinkie Suggs and Rita Graves will go with the men to the Shocker Festival. Suggs will compete in the shot put and Graves will participate in the high jump at Wichita because the throwing and jumping surfaces are better than those in Oklahoma, Miller said.

Renee Williams and Nancy Hoffman also will go to Wichita to run the women's 10,000-meter run because the event is not offered at the John Jacobs Invitational.

Miller said he hopes that the travel arrangements will help qualify more members of the team for the outdoor nationals. So far, Deb Pihl has qualified in the 1,500- and 3,000-meter runs and Ray Hansen has earned a spot in the javelin.

Meanwhile, the women's cross country and track squads added another member Wednesday when Alysun Deckert signed a letter of intent.

'Cats to send full squad to conference crew meet

After winning four of six races last weekend against Washburn University, the K-State crew teams will travel to Lawrence on Saturday for the Big Eight Conference meet at Lone Star Lake.

Other teams that will participate include the University of Nebraska, the University of Texas and the University of Kansas. The first race begins at 1 p.m.

Crew Coach Pete Hamman said the Wildcats will be the only team sending a full contingent.

singled in Steve Loughman from third base.

The Red Ravens' only other scoring opportunity came with one out in the sixth, when Tom Jensen reached on an error and Tony Viviano and Suavo drew walks. But Bramlage picked Suavo off first and struck out Sam Versluis to end the inning.

Bramlage, who had only pitched three innings prior to Wednesday's contest, struck out three in going the distance, but he said he wasn't totally pleased with his performance.

"I didn't have any pop in my fast ball," the 6-foot-2 sophomore right-hander, said. "I just changed speeds and tried to keep them guessing. I've thrown better."

Bramlage said he had thought about a possible no-hitter, but added, "I was just taking each batter one at a time."

K-State will face the University of Oklahoma at noon Saturday for a double-header at Frank Meyers Field.

"They're tough," Bramlage said. "It's going to take a good all-around game (hitting and pitching) for us to beat them."

Track

The Salina South High School distance runner has already nabbed seven state championships in cross country and track. The 5-foot-2 Deckert owns three 5A state cross country crowns and has won two championships at the state track meet in the mile and two-mile runs.

"She's the greatest female runner in the history of Kansas high school track," Miller said.

Memorial tourney finals set

By TOM FAY
Collegian Reporter

Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity will hold the finals of the 10th annual Dean Harris Memorial Basketball tournament on April 14-15 in the upstairs gym of Ahearn Field House.

"Right now we have 15 men's teams and four women's teams," said Marvin Thomas, senior in electrical engineering and member of the fraternity.

"This is a little lower (fewer teams) from last year," Thomas said. "We had 16 men's teams and 10 women's teams last year."

The first round of the double-elimination tournament was played April 7-8, and the championship games will be decided on April 15.

"We have a first-, second- and third-place trophy for both divisions, and there's a most valuable player trophy for both divisions," Thomas said. "Each member of the championship team will receive a T-shirt."

Dean Harris was one of the first freshman basketball players to start for K-State Head Basketball Coach Jack Hartman. Harris was a member of Kappa Alpha Psi before he died in an automobile accident in May 1974.

The entry fee is $50 for the men's team and $40 for the women's team.

"The money goes into three separate scholarships," Thomas said. "One-fourth of it goes to the athletic department for allowing us to use the field house."

"Another fourth of it will go to an incoming freshman student, another to a current K-State student, and the last fourth of it will stay in the account and draw interest so that we'll always have a buffer. We'll build that up to draw interest so we'll be guaranteed more teams in the future," he said.

The event is sponsored by Campbell Distributors Inc.

"Every team that's entering the tournament will receive a Budweiser hat that says 'Dean Harris Memorial Tournament,'" said

Joshua Davis, junior in business and president of the fraternity.

Henry Harris, Dean's brother and graduate assistant basketball coach at K-State, and Darryl Winston, assistant basketball coach, help with the tournament every year. Both played on the basketball team with Harris before he died.

"In the past, we've had a dinner following the tournament where Mr. and Mrs. Harris would come to speak, and we would present the trophies and scholarships," Thomas said. "This year we're trying to do it a little bit different. We're trying to put more of the money to the scholarship instead of using that money for expenses."

Tennis team falls to Baker

Falling to 3-11 in spring play this season, the men's tennis squad lost to Baker University, 8-1, in Thursday action at Ottawa.

Freshman Zane Burke won the only match for the Wildcats, defeating Tracy Huke, 6-2, 6-4.

In competition at L.P. Washburn Recreational Complex on Wednesday, the squad defeated Johnson County Community College, 8-0.

In another match Wednesday between K-State's No. 2 doubles team of Scott Sandin and Clark Renfro and Johnson County's Bill Meredith and Fred Deay, play was stopped due to rain. Sandin and Renfro were leading when the match was stopped.

Sophomore Kris James netted a win at the No. 1 singles position, defeating Meredith, 6-3, 7-5. Freshman Richard Blevins followed with a victory at the No. 2 spot, taking a 6-1, 7-6 win over Mike Flanagan.

The squad will next take to the road for two straight Big Eight Conference encounters.

Officials drop plans to classify new red wheat

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal grain officials assured Congress Thursday that they will drop plans to establish a new class of "red" wheat, plans that had met with strong opposition from Kansas growers of hard red winter wheat.

Kenneth Gilles, chief of the Federal Grain Inspection Service, told a House Agriculture subcommittee that response had been overwhelmingly negative since the new classification was proposed Jan. 13.

Asked by members of the wheat subcommittee whether that meant the proposed change would be dropped, Gilles said that it would.

The proposal surfaced this year after plant breeders — Kansas State University in particular — developed new strains of a hardier, high-yielding wheat that was difficult to classify using traditional visual inspection techniques.

The strain developed at K-State, known as Arkan, had the same high protein and excellent milling and bread-baking properties for which hard red winter wheat is demanded. But its outward appearance varied, sometimes resembling soft red wheat more than the hard variety.

FGIS proposed to create a new category of "red" wheat that would include difficult-to-identify varieties that had the appearance of a mixture of hard and soft wheats — including Arkan.

That raised protest because it was feared the classification would degrade the value of the new varieties by mixing them with soft wheats. The new class, critics said, could produce mixtures of wheat that could not be well used by either bread bakers, who need hard varieties, or makers of cookies, crackers and cakes, who rely on the properties of soft wheat.

"We regarded it as a 'junk' classification," said Gary Mitchell, an aide to Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., whose district is the nation's largest producer of hard red winter wheat.

The subcommittee, in voting out a bill extending the life of FGIS, added precautionary language that would prevent the service from implementing the red wheat classification, and called on agricultural research officials to quickly come up with a new way of testing grain that does not rely so heavily on its outward appearance.

"FGIS is almost in the stone age when it comes to classifying wheat," said Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., a member of the subcommittee. "They've got to come up with a better system."

Suggestions have included development of some type of hardness test for wheat, but the problem is made more difficult because any test developed must be one that can be done quickly at small country grain elevators as truckloads of wheat are brought in and sorted.

David Frey, a spokesman for the Kansas Wheat Commission, called the developments "good news" that would offer protection for innovative wheat varieties.

Hart

Democratic Party because it is the party of the people.

"I'm a Democrat because we can't tolerate an America where the middle-aged workers are thrown on the scrapheap, the poor are forced to sleep in the street, the children of the middle class can't afford to go to school and young couples can't afford to pay interest rates on their first home."

"The new leadership must pursue a policy of growth and economic prosperity for all Americans," he said.

The policies necessary to solve these problems will not satisfy everyone, Hart said.

"We have to demand that the wealthy do more, and they're not doing enough. But we can't pretend that even if only the wealthy pay their fair share of taxes, we will not defeat the federal deficits. But sacrifice will be required from the majority of people who can afford it."

America needs a fair tax system based on income and ability to pay, Hart said.

Hart proposes programs to retrain older workers and to rebuild highways, roads, railways and dams. He also proposed changes in farm policies.

"We must move away from the failed farm policies of the past," he said. I support an aggressive farm export policy and a tiered program of farm price supports."

Hart challenged the Reagan administration's claim of economic improvement.

"The last candidate who talked jobs, jobs, jobs was Reagan and he brought recession, recession, recession," he said.

"We should reject the see nothing, hear nothing, do nothing policies of the Reagan administration. We stand against the GOP, the Grand Old Party, which Truman called the Gluttons of Privilege."

Hart expressed confidence about the Democratic Party's chances in the 1984 presidential election.

"Many people say the 1984 Republican candidate is unbeatable. Many had the same prediction in 1948 (when Truman was elected president). But as Truman said, 'We will win the election and make the Republicans like it and don't you forget it.'"

Bomb explosion kills 2 American diplomats

By The Associated Press

WINDHOEK, South-West Africa — Two U.S. diplomats were killed Sunday when a bomb exploded at the gasoline station where they had stopped to service their automobile in this disputed territory.

Administrator-General Willie van Niekerk said a black civilian also was killed and four other people were wounded.

A Western diplomatic source who was briefed by South African authorities said it did not appear that the blast had been directed at the Americans, but they just happened to be at the station when the device exploded. The source asked not to be identified.

Niekerk did not identify the diplomats, but South African authorities said they believed they were the director of the U.S. Liaison Office in Windhoek and his military representative, an army lieutenant colonel.

Niekerk blamed the bombing on black nationalist guerrillas of the South-West Africa Peoples Organization, SWAPO. They have been fighting a bush war for 17 years from bases in southern Angola against South Africa's administration of the territory, also called Namibia.

Niekerk's statement said the Americans were members of a team working with a joint South African-Angolan monitoring commission. The commission, which the United States helped create in February, is trying to stop SWAPO units in Angola from entering Namibia while South African forces withdraw from southern Angola.

The statement said the bomb exploded at 4:10 p.m. in Okatana. The Americans were en route to the northern Namibian town of Oshakati.

"At a time when virtually everyone in southern Africa is working toward peace, SWAPO still clings to a barbaric preference for senseless violence," Niekerk said. "The true nature of SWAPO's concern for the welfare of the people of Namibia appears clearly from this incident. We will do everything we can to safeguard the local population against insane and cowardly acts."

In Washington, a State Department spokeswoman, Joanne Reams, confirmed that the U.S. victims were members of the liaison office staff in Windhoek.

She said the two were going to Oshakati, "where they had intended to make local contacts including members of the South African Defense Forces, who regularly brief our representatives on the activity of the Angolan-South African Joint Monitoring Commission." She declined to identify them pending notification of their families.

Reports from residents in Okatana said one of the Americans was killed instantly by the bomb and the second died while being treated for burns.

No group asserted responsibility for the bombing that shattered the service station. Residents said the station had been the target of saboteurs in the past.

Officials said they had not determined what type of explosive was used or how it was set off.

Part of the funds for the construction of the service station had been provided by a government development corporation. Okatana and Oshakati are in north-central

Jury acquits Nazis, Klansmen of 1979 conspiracy charges

By The Associated Press

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Nine Klansmen and Nazis were found innocent Sunday of conspiring to disrupt a 1979 anti-Klan rally in Greensboro in which five demonstrators were killed.

Five defendants were also acquitted of civil rights violations stemming from the deaths.

Two of the defendants were also acquitted of conspiring to intimidate witnesses after the confrontation.

"Man, I think I died and went to heaven," said Klan leader Virgil L. Griffin, who was acquitted of both conspiracy counts.

"I'm shocked and outraged," said a weeping Dale Sampson, wife of slain demonstrator William Sampson. "This just gives the go-ahead for Klansmen and Nazis to kill people."

The other defendants were ex-Klansman Edward W. Dawson, Klansman David Wayne Matthews, ex-Nazi Roland Wayne Wood, ex-Klansman Jerry Paul Smith, ex-Nazi Jack Wilson Fowler Jr., ex-Klansman Roy C. Toney, ex-Klansman Coleman B. Pridmore and ex-Nazi Raeford Milano Caudle.

Five Communist Workers Party members were shot to death and six supporters wounded in the CWP "Death to the Klan" rally in Greensboro on Nov. 3, 1979. One Klansman and a television cameraman were wounded.

Six Klansmen and Nazis were found innocent of murder in a 1980 state trial. The nine current and former Klansmen and Nazis, including five of the original defendants, were indicted last year on federal civil rights charges after civil rights and church groups blasted the acquittals.

Deliberations in the 14-week-old civil rights trial resumed at 9:40 a.m. Sunday after about eight hours of work Friday and seven hours Saturday. U.S. District Judge Thomas Flannery had sequestered the six men and six women of the jury.

The jurors heard testimony by about 120 witnesses and saw 400 pieces of evidence, including videotapes showing defendants firing on demonstrators.

The jurors Sunday asked Flannery twice to clarify a point of law in count 14, which charges that Griffin and Dawson conspired to prevent witnesses from talking with federal agents.

Asked if they could convict Griffin and Dawson on the charge if the two also tried to stop witnesses from talking to state or local agents, Flannery said they could.

"The evidence shows the defendants had an unspoken but clear, common understanding that they would provoke a fight to give them the excuse to disrupt the parade," U.S. Justice Department attorney Daniel Bell said in closing arguments last week.

"He fired, at people with guns pointed at him," said Jim Cooley, attorney for Matthews, who was

LA mayor to lecture

Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley will present the 64th Alfred M. Landon Lecture at 10:30 a.m. today in McCain Auditorium.

Bradley is in his third four-year term as mayor of America's second largest city and made a strong bid in 1982 for the governorship of California.

It is anticipated Bradley will comment on problems of governing a large urban population and on preparations for the 1984 Summer Olympics to be held in Los Angeles.

William Richter, Landon Lecture chairman, said Bradley's speech will be carried live by Manhattan Cable Channel 6 and may be viewed by anyone with access to cable in Manhattan. On campus Bradley's address may be viewed in the Union Forum Hall, which will have a large screen on stage.

The University radio station, KSAC-AM, will originate a broadcast which will be carried live by KMAN-AM, Manhattan (1340). The address also will be fed to the Kansas Information Network. A delayed broadcast of the speech will be carried by KSAC (580) beginning at 3 p.m.

Sigma Phi Epsilon wins annual chariot relays

Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity had a winning time of 59.9 seconds at the 21st annual Lambda Chi Alpha Chariot Relays on Friday in Memorial Stadium.

Members of the winning team included Doug Scheibe, sophomore in accounting; Jeff Chaltas, senior in horticulture therapy; Robert Newth, sophomore in pre-dentistry; and Jay Newcomer, senior in life sciences. Karen Sherve, junior in office administration and member of Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority, was the rider on the winning chariot.

Alpha Kappa Lambda fraternity placed second with a time of one minute.

Sixteen chariots sponsored by individual fraternities and riders from nine sororities competed. The relays consisted of four representatives of a fraternity pulling a sorority representative in a relay race.

Becky Boggs, sophomore in English and member of Kappa Delta sorority, was named relay queen.

Approximately $1,200 was donated to the Manhattan Chapter of Special Olympics. This money was raised through relay entry fees and an account established by Lambda Chi Alpha.

Senate triples SGA advertising funding

By LAURI DIEHL
Assistant Government Editor

After extensive debate, Student Senate tentatively increased the recommended allocation for the Student Governing Association from $30,368.78 to $31,253.78 during its meeting Thursday.

Senate met for the second night of consideration on a tentative allocation bill presented by the Finance Committee. The increases in the SGA allocation came in the areas of advertising and memberships.

The senate Finance Committee had recommended an allocation of $79 for dues, memberships and subscriptions. SGA had requested $139. The recommendation was amended to $139 after the senators were told the student body president would not have speaking privileges at the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce unless SGA paid $60 in dues.

Finance Committee recommended $412.50 for SGA advertising expenses. SGA was allocated $1,535 this year and was requesting the same amount for next year.

A total of seven amendments seeking to increase the recommended allocation were introduced. An amendment to $1,237.50 proposed by Bruce Ney, agriculture senator, was accepted.

Kirk Porteous, Finance Committee chairman, defended the committee's recommendation.

"We attempted to scrutinize student government in the same way we scrutinize all groups," he said. "I think we should try to adhere to our own guidelines. In the past, student government has not."

Jerry Katlin, graduate student in public administration and former student body president, said a higher advertising budget is necessary to reach students.

"Our constituency is the entire student body," he said. "There are 18,000 students out there; we can't send flyers or get them on the phone."

Lori Rock, arts and sciences senator, proposed amending the advertising allocation to $1,000.

"I think $1,535 is too much, but I think $412.50 is too low," she said. "I feel that SGA has to stay within its own guidelines. How can we cut other groups and not ourselves without losing credibility?"

Katlin said he opposed the amendment because the amount was not based on actual expenditures.

"I don't like grabbing figures out of the air," he said. "SGA has a record of spending $1,535 a year."

Tax return deadline today

All income tax returns must be deposited by midnight tonight at the Manhattan Post Office if they are to meet the deadline and bear the "Tax Monday" postmark.

The mailing deadline for returns falls on April 16 this year instead of the usual cutoff date because April 15 was Sunday this year.

Manhattan Postmaster Marvin

Roth advises that if taxes are mailed earlier in the day today at a street collection box, taxpayers should check the collection schedule to be sure the next pickup will meet the deadline.

Income tax assistance will be available from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. today in the SGS office in the Union.

TV students produce mini-films

Television students in a Documentary Script Writing Class have produced 10 "mini-documentaries" on sexual harassment.

Each mini-documentary lasts 4½ minutes and involves an exchange between a man and woman in a work environment. They also feature "role reversals," where the man and woman alternately are cast in the role of superior and subordinate.

The mini-documentaries will be used by Pat McIntyre, graduate in psychology, in her research for a doctoral degree.

Dick Gottschald, R.M. Seaton Visiting Professional in the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications, is instructor of the class.

Food science students win awards

Outstanding students in food science will make presentations at 7 p.m. today at Stephenson's Apple Farm Restaurant in conjunction with an annual "Students' Awards Night" of the Kansas City Section of the Institute of Food Technologists.

Valerie Proctor, graduate in food science and winner of the Robbie Robinson Graduate Student Award, will be the speaker at the dinner meeting. She will present a paper, "Batter and Breeding Technology in the Poultry Industry."

Beth Rundell, sophomore in bakery science management and winner of the James M. Gorman Memorial Undergraduate Student Award, will conduct a mini-seminar at 5:30 p.m., also at Stephenson's.

Both women also will receive small monetary awards.

IFT is an organization consisting of food technologists, food engineers and related professionals from industry, government and educational institutions to promote food technology for the welfare of mankind.

The Kansas City Section has about 100 members and holds monthly meetings to discuss timely issues concerning foods and our society.

Freshman wins ROTC scholarship

Jill Muehe, freshman in computer science, has been awarded an Air Force ROTC Scholarship based on her academic accomplishments in computer science.

The scholarship, which will pay her tuition, fees and books over a 3½-year period, is estimated to be worth about $9,000.

Muehe has been active in the K-State chapter of Arnold Air Society, an honorary organization which supports AFROTC and its recruiting program at K-State.

Muehe plans to go on active duty in the Air Force as a computer specialist following graduation.

Interior design program accredited

The College of Home Economics undergraduate interior design program in the Department of Clothing, Textile and Interior Design has been accredited by the Foundation for Design Education Research.

Among the home economics programs in Kansas, K-State is the first to offer an accredited curriculum in interior design. About 50 programs nationwide are accredited by FIDER.

Accreditation procedures assure that the purposes and accomplishments of programs in interior design education meet the needs of society, interior design students and the interior design profession. The FIDER accreditation program is voluntary, and FIDER committees review educational programs only upon invitation by program administrators.

The College of Home Economics Interior Design program initially was granted a provisional two-year accreditation. Following a recent review by FIDER, the program has been granted a five-year accreditation as of this spring.

Rule monitoring students' progress annoys college financial aid offices

By The College Press Service

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Despite howls of controversy during debates over new rules requiring students to make "satisfactory academic progress" to get financial aid, campus aid offices have been bothered by it more than students, according to reports from across the nation.

Some observers say the new rules — aimed at forcing students who don't keep their grades up off the federal aid roles — may actually convince some campuses to lower their minimum grade requirements to qualify for federal aid.

The new federal rule, which went into effect Jan. 1 and which aid offices across the nation are now trying to implement for the first time, stiffens old "academic progress" requirements.

The U.S. Department of Education now requires colleges to make students maintain "satisfactory academic progress" toward completing 120 credit hours within six years.

That means students must keep making progress during terms in which they don't receive any aid.

"Some institutions are just too darn lenient in letting students with bad grades or without a clear degree program keep getting aid," Duncan Helmrich, a U.S. Department of Education spokesman, said.

Last April, the National Commission on Student Financial Assistance reported that while all schools require students to maintain satisfactory academic progress to get aid, few colleges actually monitor their aid recipients' progress closely.

The commission, created in 1980 to develop student aid bills for Congress, could find few examples of colleges taking away aid from students with bad grades or who took too long to get through college.

Colleges individually must now publish guidelines for just how fast a student must progress over six years toward 120 hours and submit reports on each aid recipient's compliance with those guidelines.

Financial aid offices also must identify recipients as part- or full-time, account for dropped courses in computing students' aid eligibility and be ready to bar aid to students who don't keep progressing toward their degrees at the pace prescribed by the school's guidelines.

"I don't know that there's going to be any measurable impact on students," Dennis Martin of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators said.

The major change is that when being checked for eligibility for federal aid, a student's entire college academic record — not just a part of it — will be examined.

The major impact of the new rule will be on campus aid administrators, not students.

'Wild Kingdom' host to visit city as part of zoo's fund-raising effort

Marlin Perkins, host of Mutual of Omaha's "Wild Kingdom" television series, will present a program April 26 in Manhattan.

Perkins will be in the Regency Ballroom of the Manhattan Holiday Inn Holiday at 6:30 p.m. The evening will start with a social hour, followed by a banquet at 7:30 p.m. and a program at 8:30 p.m.

"The program is titled 'My Wild Kingdom,' the same title as his book," Gerry Brady, curator of the Manhattan Sunset Zoo, said.

"After the program, Perkins will be available to sign autographs and meet those attending," Brady said.

Perkins' visit, sponsored by the Friends of the Sunset Zoo and Mutual of Omaha Insurance Company, is an effort to raise money to renovate the top tier at the Manhattan zoo, Brady said.

"The top tier now consists of 12 cages which would be renovated into five natural habitats to house species from around the world," Brady said.

"It would be called 'Diversity in Nature,' and would contain an arctic fox from the tundra region, a bear cat from the jungles of Southeast Asia, Japanese Snow Monkeys from the Alps of Japan, a serval from East Africa and a bobcat from North America," he said.

Student joins winners of Truman Scholarship

A K-State student has once again made a mark on the record books.

Cynthia Leighton, sophomore in history, has been selected to receive a Truman Scholarship, one of the most prestigious undergraduate scholarships offered in the United States.

The Truman Scholarship program was established by Congress as a memorial to President Harry S. Truman. One Truman Scholar is chosen from each state and 50 are chosen at large. Awards of up to $20,000 are given to recipients to cover a four-year period of study.

As part of the competition, Leighton was required to write a 600-word essay on a problem in society and her solution to it.

For her problem, she said she examined the issue of updating the prison systems. Her solution called for imprisoning violent criminals, but finding facilities willing to hire prisoners so they can pay for their needs and not burden society. For non-violent criminals, she proposed increasing the number of community correction centers and placing them in those facilities rather than imprisoning them.

Leighton has been active in student government, debate, church youth organizations, volunteer work in Mexico and community fund raising in high school and college.

She said she plans to continue her education, obtain a degree at K-State and go to law school.

Leighton said she would eventually like to work for the government as a lawyer.

Virgil Wiebe, sophomore in political science, was selected as a finalist in the Truman Scholarship competition.

His essay was titled "Public Education" and attacked the "Nations at Risk" reports issued by the government, he said.

Wiebe has participated in activities including the United Nations Council, debate, residence hall government, regional church groups and peace organizations in high school and college.

Both Leighton and Wiebe were informed about the Truman Scholarship by their adviser, Nancy Twiss, instructor of arts and sciences, who recommended they apply.

To apply, students must first be recommended by their counselor or adviser. Then, the University selects and nominates candidates. Leighton and Wiebe both advanced to the statewide competition, where only one winner is chosen.

Leighton, along with the other Truman Scholars, will receive her award May 13 at the Truman Library in Kansas City, Mo.

Since 1960, K-State has had five other Truman Scholars: Peggy Grosh, graduate in economics; David Carlin, senior in pre-law; Mike Gibson, senior in pre-law; Brad Russell, junior in pre-law; and Tracy Turner, junior in economics.

Panel proposes local parking solutions

By STEVE SWAFFORD
Collegian Reporter

The Fairchild Area Parking Committee has submitted two proposals to Manhattan City Planner Larry Hulse outlining two options for a solution to parking problems in the Fairchild Avenue and Fairchild Terrace area after greek committee members said it was no longer necessary to meet.

The committee, composed of three area residents and three greeks, was formed in April 1983 but didn't start meeting consistently until August 1983 because students on the committee went home for the summer, said Theresa Korst, junior in pre-law, one of the three greek members on the board.

Korst said a survey was sent to all residents of the area and found that most didn't want a permit system.

Korst outlined the greek-sponsored proposal that focused on the fact that most residents didn't feel the need for a permit system. This point was emphasized because of the lack of complaints about parking reported through the survey from the non-greek residents.

The greek proposal states that greeks never will agree to any permit system which alternates parking times for two reasons:

— The permit system forces many cars to park outside the designated zone. There is nowhere outside of the zone to park, and the greeks are bound by Anderson and Sunset avenues and 17th Street. The greek proposal maintains that if there were an area to park, it would simply transfer the cars to another neighborhood, which is no solution to the problem.

— Any permit system would place a large amount of the burden on the greek residents.

The greek proposal states that almost every family dwelling would have sufficient garage or driveway space to accommodate cars during the restricted permit times. Such would not be the case with greek residents, Korst said, since they rely on parking space on the street.

A complaint by the non-greek half of the committee is that some parked cars aren't moved often enough and some cars are parked for several days.

"A greek car will sit from a day, which is unusual, to six weeks, like the blue car down the street," said Curtis Bonser, 1845 Fairchild Ave.

Bonser is spokesman for the non-greek half of the committee. He refused to reveal the non-greek proposal because he said he believes it would be improper to release it to the press before city officials have seen it.

The greek proposal states that the turnover rate in the neighborhood is relatively high, and a spot check of the neighborhood at various times reveals open spaces.

Under the proposal, a car can be parked for 48 hours before it is considered "stored."

"We're trying to share the (parking) spaces and we're not trying to shovel the greeks out the door," Bonser said.

Bonser said it is difficult to invite guests for the evening when they don't have a place to park.

The greeks indicated in their proposal that solving parking problems is the job of the Riley County Police Department because individual residents at various times are guilty of violations and they should be dealt with individually.

The problems of littering and noise levels surfaced later as an added problem of the Fairchild area.

"The area is generally littered with beverage containers whenever there is a party," Bonser said.

Bonser said the main problem in the past has been with the Phi Delta Theta fraternity, 508 Sunset Ave. Bonser said he lives approximately 250 yards from the fraternity house and that it isn't unusual for the members to continue conducting a party until early in the morning.

Brad Razook, junior in marketing and president of the fraternity, acknowledged that last semester there was a communication problem between the house and Bonser. However, he said a leadership change has taken place within the house since then and members have recognized their poor neighborhood relations.

He said the fraternity has attempted to improve relations with neighbors by informing them in advance of parties and by taking other actions.

Both Razook and Bonser said there have been no noise problems in the neighborhood this semester.

Korst said that during the past year, area greeks have become aware of the laws and the situation in the Fairchild area has improved. She said there are fewer cars, more open spaces and fewer violations in the area.

Korst said she plans to have area greeks paint curbs so residents will have fewer questions about where it is legal to park.

The two proposals will be reviewed and a recommendation will be decided on at 3 p.m. Tuesday at the Riley County Police Department, 600 Colorado St., to present to the city commission for consideration.

UFM program features state historical sites

Researcher finds places to 'feel, touch' history

By TOM SCHULTES
Collegian Reporter

What does a native of Connecticut, with a history degree from Yale University, know about historical sites in Kansas?

At first, not much. But Adam Rome's search for that knowledge has resulted in a new, widespread University for Man program.

Rome, staff member at UFM, first became interested in the "west" while studying the social and intellectual history of the region—not necessarily Kansas. But while in Cambridge, Mass., he met Jim Killacky, one of the early leaders of UFM.

Following this meeting, Rome contacted Sue Maes, director of UFM, which led to his part-time employment there during the summer of 1982. Although Rome had to return to Massachusetts, he had an idea.

"My idea was that there are a lot of places where you can still feel and touch history," Rome said.

With this idea in mind, he contacted 30 Kansans throughout the state to get their ideas about different historical sites.

Armed with this information, Rome proceeded to successfully apply for a grant from the Kansas Commission for Humanities, which was augmented with a $500 grant from the Kansas Society of Architects.

With this funding established, Rome returned to UFM as a full-time staff member in June 1983.

The resulting program, "Hidden Places in Kansas," has received widespread publicity.

"To date," Rome said, "some 40 newspaper and magazine articles have been published, along with about 15 radio and three television interviews that have been aired."

The series of eight articles have been requested for publication by 126 newspapers. Twenty-six radio stations have requested the 30-minute audio programs, which were produced by Extension Radio-Television Film of K-State.

The Collegian is among the newspapers publishing the series.

Radio stations in the Manhattan area airing the program include KSAC at 1:30 p.m. on Fridays beginning April 20 and KMAN at 9:30 a.m. on Saturdays.

The week of April 15 has been proclaimed "Kansas 'Hidden Places' Week" by Gov. John Carlin.

The seven sites featured in the program include the Cimarron National Grasslands at Elkhart, The Crow's Nest near Halstead, The Ladies Lounge at Hope, the Stone Man rock formation at Penokee and the Mexican Fiesta at Chanute. Closer to the Manhattan area are the Brown Grand Theatre in Concordia and Sumner School in Topeka.

Included in the program are public lectures according to the following schedule:

At 7:30 p.m. April 26, Rome will speak on "Hidden Places in General" at the Olsburg Elementary School.

At 7:30 p.m. May 3, Rome and State Archaeologist Tom Witty will discuss "The Stone Man and Other Archaeological Sites" at the Olsburg Elementary School.

At noon May 10, Witty will speak on "The Stone Man and Other Archaeological Sites" at the Lyons Public Library.

At 1:30 p.m. May 16, Rome will speak at the Rolling Prairie Senior Center at White City.

At 1:30 p.m. May 23, Emporia State University Professor June Underwood will speak about "The Ladies Lounge" at White City.

At 7:30 p.m. May 23, Rome and Underwood will speak at the Catholic Hall at Hope.

Copies of the newspaper articles may be obtained by writing to "Hidden Places," 1221 Thurston St., Manhattan, Kan. 66502.

The series also is available in booklet form or cassette tape from the same address.

"This program is a one-time deal," Rome said. "The idea of it is to encourage the readers or listeners to go out and see things for themselves. There's a greater variety of things than people think of, like churches, battle sites or schools. We look for those places that people wouldn't think of as being historic."

Ladies lounge remains symbol of settling land

(Editor's note: This is the first of eight articles about little-known historical sites in Kansas. "Hidden Places" is a program of University for Man and K-State's Division of Continuing Education.)

By ADAM ROME
Contributing Writer

It is hard at first not to smile. The building is a modest structure, of stone, and yet a pale peach color. The Venetian blinds in front are crooked, and closed. The faded wooden sign in the window reads: "Ladies Lounge. Welcome."

But the Ladies Lounge in Hope, on Main Street between the City Hall and the post office, is actually quite an important place, a place alive with history.

The building was for many years the Kansas Power and Light office in Hope, but when the company left in 1952 and sold the building to the city for a $1, Elizabeth Lorson thought of establishing a ladies lounge there.

Lorson was quite a visitor. City Clerk Emma Hoffman explained, "and she had heard comments, many of them from the farm women, who complained about having no place to sit and wait for their husbands when they came to town shopping. And she had heard of some town around here, that had a Ladies Lounge, and Elizabeth was for everything that would help the town in any way, because she was really a Hope booster, and she thought it would help the town to have a place for the ladies to rest and wait."

Though the building was without a toilet and without furnishings, Lorson convinced the Hope Extension Homemakers Unit to take up the lounge as a project, and they set to work.

Lorson herself gave a set of chairs. A mirror, a wicker table, a settee and a second set of chairs were given by the American Legion auxiliary. A desk was given by a member of the unit. Two lamps were salvaged by the agent for the Missouri Pacific. The sign was cut and flocked by the owner of the hardware store.

The lounge has since been open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., six days a week, and it has always been busiest on Saturdays and on special occasions.

"The time we got the most registrations would probably be Memorial Day," Irene Altmann noted, "because there was no restroom up at the cemetery, or if we'd have a celebration in town."

The lounge also is used for meetings, by neighboring EHUs, and by the baseball coaches, who gather there to get the season schedule ready. But most often the lounge is simply a place for visiting women to relax, to write letters, to diaper the baby.

The lounge in Hope is indeed carrying on an old tradition. Women's clubs had been working to establish Ladies Lounges and Rest Rooms as early as the 1880s, and by the time of World War I, there were hundreds of such places in towns like Cottonwood Falls, Kan. and Chickasha, Okla.; Traer, Iowa and Grand Junction, Colo.; Kalamazoo, Mich. and Norwalk, Ohio.

Many were in the basements of courthouses and boasted of fancy curtains and rugs or of phonographs and John Phillip Sousa records, but most were rather rudimentary and were furnished with donated items, as in Hope.

The need was pressing, as writer Wallace Stegner recalls.

"There was literally no place for farm wives to go. You'd see them parked out in front of the store, sitting droopy under a big hat, waiting for their husbands to get through shopping or talking or buying machinery. Or they'd go up and sit in the shade of the grain elevator, which was the tallest building in town and cast the longest shadow—and sit forlornly there among the weeds and tin cans."

The lounge in Hope is thus a curious reminder of the challenges of settling the land.

"If there had been trees or a kind of country park or a green grassy place by the creek," Stegner said, "there would have been no need of it. But on a glaring flat there was an absolute need of protection from the sun in summer, so that the mere fact of shade, a roof, refuge was an adaptation to the conditions, the peculiar condition of a treeless country."

But the lounge is more, a reminder of the civilizing work of women.

At the time women were organizing to establish ladies lounges, they also were organizing to improve public health, build libraries and parks and playgrounds, develop public education and found colleges, conserve natural resources, promote peace, create museums and orchestras, abolish prostitution and child labor, inspect factories and tenement houses and prisons, pave streets and build sidewalks, improve the judicial system and enact prohibition.

"I see the ladies lounge as a symbol," June Underwood, Emporia State University professor, said, "a symbol of the need of women to build a community in a very individualistic and sometimes isolated society."

Supplies sent to orbiting Soviets

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union on Sunday launched an unmanned spaceship carrying supplies for the three cosmonauts working aboard the orbiting Salyut 7 station, Tass reported.

The official news agency said Progress 20 was launched at 12:13 p.m. Moscow time.

Tass said only that the ship was carrying "depletable materials and various cargos" for the crew of Salyut 7. Previous cargo vessels have taken oxygen, food, mail, fuel and scientific equipment to long-term crews aboard the space station.

Flight commander Leonid Kizim, engineer Vladimir Soloviyev and researcher Oleg Atkov have been aboard Salyut 7 since Feb. 8. They were joined for eight days by two Soviet cosmonauts and an Indian spaceman, who returned to Earth on Wednesday.

Soviet jet strays over French base

TOULON, France — The French military is investigating allegations that a Soviet passenger jet violated French airspace restrictions last week by flying over a major naval port, the Defense Ministry said Sunday.

The Aeroflot plane, on a Moscow-Budapest-Marseille flight, was searched by French officials after landing in Marseille on Friday evening and was allowed to take off Saturday, the ministry said.

French television identified the plane as an Tupolev 134 passenger jet.

French television said the plane left its authorized course and flew over the military installation at Toulon. It speculated that the Soviets were testing reactions to an incursion into restricted airspace.

Actor honored for 50-year career

DALLAS — John Houseman, perhaps best known for his role as a stern law professor in the "The Paper Chase," has been honored for his 50-year career in opera, theater, radio and films.

Houseman was given the Algur H. Meadows Award for Excellence in the Arts, a $25,000 award, Saturday at Southern Methodist University's Bob Hope Theater.

Also at the ceremony were actors Kevin Kline and David Ogden Stiers, alumni of the Juilliard School's drama division, which Houseman helped establish in 1968.

Kline, known for his work in films such as "The Big Chill" and "Sophie's Choice," said Houseman had "the resonance of someone who knows...everything. When he teaches you, you know it's not air, it's not going to disappear."

Stiers, who was in the television series "M*A*S*H," said Houseman "reminds us there are gentle heroes among us, if we have the wit to see them."

Princess Di's due date revealed

LONDON — London's Mail newspaper reported Sunday it has learned the due date for Princess Diana's second baby — Sept. 18 — but Buckingham Palace declined to comment on the report.

The source of the information was "an unusually well-informed Buckingham Palace source," said gossip columnist Jonathan Margolis.

Freed girl 'did not meet' killer's needs

By The Associated Press

TORRANCE, Calif. — A 16-year-old girl who was freed by Christopher Wilder nine days after he abducted her might have been spared because "she did not meet his need to murder and destroy," a psychiatrist says.

However, Tina Marie Risico was "subjected to an unimaginable terroristic action" by Wilder, Dr. Roland Summit said after examining the girl.

Wilder, a Florida businessman described by his partner as an "easy-going, quiet" person whose flamboyant image was a sham, was sought in the abductions of 11 women during a cross-country spree of rape, torture and murder.

Four women were killed, three escaped — one with stab wounds — and four remain missing. The FBI said Wilder approached an average of one woman a day, often in suburban shopping malls, posing as a fashion photographer.

Wilder, 39, fatally shot himself during a struggle with New Hampshire police Friday, the day Risico walked into the police station in the Los Angeles suburb of Torrance. Risico, who said Wilder had put her on a plane in Boston the night before, was examined by Summit at the request of police.

Summit said Saturday he agreed with police and FBI descriptions of Risico as a victim rather than an accomplice.

"There was never a moment, I believe, when there was any hope of escape," Summit said. "Whenever she was asked to drive a car, she was reminded that he was a race car driver who could catch up and kill her."

Actually, Wilder had only been driving race cars for six months, his business partner, L.K. Kimbrell, said Saturday.

"He impressed on her that he didn't hesitate to kill," Summit said. "He showed her a ruthlessness and an ability to victimize."

Risico was "subjected to sexual humiliation and brainwashing. The pattern follows explicitly one in which terror and obedience are instilled in the victim," the psychiatrist added.

Risico told police that Wilder offered her $100 to pose for photos when they met April 4 in Torrance, and then pulled a gun.

Summit said Wilder "was a man with great skills at eluding and tricking and acting on the hopes of young women."

"At one point, that would change and he impressed her repeatedly with the fact that her life hung in the balance depending on her cooperation," he said.

Summit suggested Wilder took pity on Risico.

"I'm speculating that she did not meet his need to murder and destroy," he said. "I believe she showed a kind of humanness, gentleness, a kind of feeling that somehow didn't provoke rage in this individual."

Kimbrell, Wilder's partner in an electrical and construction business, said much of Wilder's well-to-do image was false, including two fake diamond rings he wore. He said Wilder's Porsche sports car was 17 years old, his Cadillac was bought used and his house was a "junk heap" he fixed up.

"He's just an easy-going, quiet guy who watches a lot of TV because he has nothing else to do," Kimbrell said.

Wilder and Risico drove east across the country, with Risico driving at one point while Wilder assaulted a woman in the back seat.

Torrance Police Capt. James Popp said Saturday Risico "was not in close proximity" to the stabbing of Dawnette Sue Wilt, 16, who was abducted at Merrillville, Ind., and later escaped with stab wounds, or Beth Dodge, 33, abducted in Victor, N.Y., and then fatally shot, apparently by Wilder.

On Thursday, Wilder bought Risico a plane ticket home. She told police he was "tired of running and felt they were going to catch up with him real soon."

Police in Wenham, Mass., believe he tried to abduct another woman the next morning. The woman accepted a ride after her car broke down, and then jumped out when the driver pulled a gun, said police officer David Doyle. He said she positively identified the man as Wilder after seeing photos of him.

After questioning, Risico was released to her mother, Carol Sokolowski, who said she went out Saturday "partying with her fiancé."

"She's been through hell but now she's in heaven on Earth," her mother told The Associated Press by telephone. "She's a tough person, her own person, but I don't want her talking to anybody yet. She doesn't need it right now."

"She and I pray those other girls show up," Sokolowski added.

Denmark's taxes exceed other nations

By The Associated Press

PARIS — American taxpayers rushing to complete Form 1040 before today's midnight deadline can console themselves with the thought that they are not the most highly taxed people in the industrialized, free-market world.

That distinction belongs to the Danes.

The average Danish industrial worker with two children pays 38 percent of his salary in income tax and social security, according to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. He works almost 4½ months out of the year for the government, but receives in return an impressive array of social services.

In contrast, the average Detroit factory worker who is married with two children sees 21 percent of his paycheck disappear into Social Security and income tax. But he has to pay for services like hospital care and ambulance transportation that his Danish counterpart considers his right.

The typical American worker pays less income tax than a Briton or New Zealander, but more than an Italian, Canadian, Japanese or Frenchman, according to the Paris-based OECD, whose 24 members represent the world's industrialized free-market countries.

In 1981, the latest year for which OECD comparative figures are available, Western governments snapped up more than one-third of the wealth produced by their citizens.

The American economy was the 17th most taxed nation in the Western world, with 31 percent of all wealth going to the local, state and federal taxman in 1981. Last year the U.S. Internal Revenue Service collected more than $410 billion in income taxes alone.

But the worst may be yet to come. Because of aging populations and inflation, taxes will keep rising, economists predict.

A recent survey found at least 15

Western nations have announced plans to increase taxes. The U.S. Congress, for example, is searching for new revenues to feed a federal budget deficit that may soon top $200 billion.

"For most countries, the limits of taxation have not yet been reached," said Ken Messere, head of OECD's fiscal affairs department and author of a tax history of the Western world.

"Governments notoriously find it difficult not to increase, let alone reduce, public expenditures," he added.

Worldwide, the taxman has been taking an increasing slice of the economic pie in the past 35 years, according to OECD.

"Income tax now brings in roughly three times as much in government revenues as excises, while they were almost equal in 1950," said Messere.

France and Luxembourg, according to OECD statistics, are the industrialized world's income tax havens. When income tax and social security payments are subtracted, and family benefits and bonuses added, the average French worker still has 93.5 percent of his paycheck to spend and the Luxemburger 93 percent.

But income tax figures tell only part of the story. If all levies, including excises on cigarettes, gasoline and other goods, plus sales and valued-added taxes, are added up, then the Swedes edge out the Danes as the West's most taxed nation.

More than half of the total value of all goods and services produced in Sweden — 51 percent — goes to the taxman, but only 19 percent in Turkey, the least taxed member of the OECD.

Not surprisingly, as governments increase the fiscal burden on their citizens, instances of tax evasion multiply worldwide.

The IRS estimates one tax dollar in five escapes its grasp and that tax cheating tops $100 billion; the General Accounting Office says evasion is "widespread and growing." An international pattern of "reduced compliance" is apparent, Messere finds.

There have been glimmers of what Messere calls "organized taxpayer resistance" worldwide. Among the world's most successful tax rebels is Howard Jarvis, who succeeded in the late 1970s in getting California voters to approve a limit on property taxes.

A natural base for art

The Laramie Street Grocery Store, 16th and Laramie streets, was vacant for a year until it was converted into an art studio.

After one layer of ink has been applied and before the final coat, Kate Krasin, K-State alumna, hangs partially completed silk-screens along a drying line.

A variety of pencils are used for designing.

Bottles of ink and lacquer, a variety of writing utensils stashed in old coffee cans and rows of patterned paper hanging out to dry have replaced the shelves of canned goods and meat freezers at the Laramie Street Grocery Store at 16th and Laramie streets.

Kate Krasin, a local artist whose specialty is silk-screen printing, has transformed the old store into an art studio.

A glance at Krasin's work provides proof of the complex mixture of shading, design, opacity and transparency used in the silk-screening process.

Silk-screening is a stencil process of printing. The stencil material is made of lacquer on an acetate backing. Once the design is conceived, the artist cuts out the desired pattern on the stencil and dissolves the lacquer on the silk-screen.

A frame is used which is composed of polyester fabric stretched on a wooden frame. Thick ink is applied onto the screen as a squeegee is pulled across the frame. The paper is placed under the frame to print the design.

Every color requires a separate stencil, so each design must be screened several times. No slipping must occur or the print will be out of alignment.

The silk-screening process is done similar to the way "numbers are stenciled on an army jeep," Krasin said.

Krasin attended graduate school at K-State in 1966 and also worked as a graphic artist for the University. She then migrated to Santa Fe, N.M., where she said she believed she she could make a living as an artist.

"It's one of the few places where you can make a living in art, outside of New York, Chicago or Los Angeles. I had a reputation you might say, to where people would come by my studio and buy prints from me," Krasin said.

Her work is still sold in southwestern states, mainly in Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado and Texas.

Krasin said her silk-screen work began about eight years ago through her love of painting.

"My training was as a painter and I actually started printing in order to get back to painting, but I got so fascinated with printing, just utterly involved," Krasin said.

"It was really accidental how I got started printing," she said. Krasin said she was out of work in Santa Fe when one of her friends told her that her paintings looked like silk-screen prints. Her friend suggested doing a print of one of her paintings, so Krasin tried the suggestion and "just loved it."

Landscapes and seasons provide Krasin with many of the ideas for the images that she prints. She said she finds these images doing what she calls "going fishing."

"I go fishing on foot or drive around and around until something really pops up of its own, and that is my next image. It's sort of making it (the environment) work for you," Krasin said.

"A really good reason for this, particularly the way I work, — from a month to six weeks to make one image — it (the image) needs to be solid in my mind so that I can keep it there and get it down, because in the stencil process you don't get the final print until you're done, and there's a lot of awkward steps in it," she said.

Krasin said she prefers to base her work on memory instead of photographs, but she does take photos for reference on various kinds of trees or plants.

"A photograph becomes redundant. I work from my own memory of the image. I go back to the place where I got the image again and again as I am doing it," she said.

When Krasin prepares an image to be sent out to galleries, she makes 60 to 65 prints, 30 of which are "technically sound".

"When you're printing something with that many colors, you lose a lot," she said, adding that her images contain between 30 to 60 stencils each.

Krasin said she has also worked landscaping a race track and painting apartments. In addition, she has done freelance commercial art, which she said gave her a better foundation from which to draw things she otherwise might not have.

"Silk-screen is a minor art compared to the major arts of painting and sculpture," Krasin said. "My art is a kind of nature worship and a translation of feeling into color and shape. I would describe myself as a craftsman — egowise, not im- agewise."

"When you do truly find what it is you want to do in terms of an occupation, it seems that it all then flows together. This is what happened to me with prints. When I was painting, it wasn't working. When I started doing prints, it all came together almost naturally. So when I found what I wanted to do, then the living was provided and the galleries presented themselves," she said.

Krasin said she believes she will continue what she is doing.

"I still haven't grown out of what I'm doing and I'm not bored with it. The scenery here in the Midwest is different than out West where I was working," she said.

"Nature is infinite, not only in its own variety, but also in that it's different every day," Krasin said.

Following several hours of work on her silk-screen prints, Krasin takes time to relax while they dry.

U.S. Hispanics total nearly 16 million

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Spanish-heritage population of the United States grew to nearly 16 million as of a year ago, giving this nation the fifth-largest concentration of Hispanics in the Western Hemisphere, the Census Bureau said Sunday.

A new report by the bureau estimated there were 15.9 million Hispanics in the United States as of March 1983, up from the 9 million registered in the 1970 census and 14.8 million in the 1980 national headcount.

The only Hispanic populations in the hemisphere outnumbering that of the United States were Mexico, with 67 million people; Argentina, 28 million; Colombia, 21 million; and Peru, 17 million.

The study noted that Hispanics in the United States tend to be younger than the population in general and are concentrated in cities in only a few states.

Their rapid growth has increased the Hispanic share of the U.S. population from 4.5 percent in 1970 to 6.4 percent in 1980, the report said.

That rate of increase has led to speculation that Hispanics could become the nation's largest minority in a few years.

The Population Reference Bureau, an independent Washington-based research group, estimated last year that Hispanics would increase to 47 million by 1990, surpassing blacks. The 1980 census ranked Hispanics as the second-largest minority, behind the 26.5 million blacks.

Persons were considered Hispanics if they said they were of Mexican, Mexican-American, Puerto Rican, Cuban or other Spanish-speaking heritage, the Census Bureau said. It said about 2 million people counted in the 1980 census had come from Mexico, 2 million from Puerto Rico and fewer than 1 million from Spain.

Brazil, whose 120 million people form South America's most populous nation, traces its dominant ethnic background to Portugal rather than Spain and thus is not considered an Hispanic country.

The new report noted high fertility rates and substantial emigration from Mexico, Cuba and other Central and South American countries as major factors in the growth of the Hispanic community in the United States.

Hispanic families averaged 2.3 children, compared with 1.9 for non-Hispanics, it said.

And it noted that the 1980 Hispanic population was a youthful one, with more than 20 percent of the members under 10 years old in 1980, compared with 14 percent for non-Hispanics, it said.

Most Hispanics in the United States were concentrated in Arizona, California, Colorado, New Mexico and Texas, the bureau found.

"What is most dramatic is that both California and Texas, which had in 1970 the first and second-largest Hispanic populations, increased their share of this population," it said.

"By 1980, over 50 percent of all Hispanics in the nation resided in those two states. Outside of the Southwest, sizable concentrations of Hispanics were found in New York, Florida and Illinois."

Cross-breeding improves production

Cattlemen meet demands of market

By LILLIAN ZIER
Collegian Reporter

The traditional American cattle breeds — the Hereford, the Angus and the Shorthorn — are slowly being replaced by new breeds of cattle from continental Europe such as the Simmental, the Limousine and the Gelbvieh.

American cattle breeders are realizing the improvements which can be made in production through cross-breeding the new breeds with their own herds.

The most popular European breed is the Simmental, a Swiss breed. There are about 82,000 Simmental in the United States. The Limousine, a native of France, is the second most popular foreign breed in the United States, where 45,000 are registered.

Closely following the Limousine are the Santa Gertrudis, a breed developed in the United States, the Brahman of India, the Charolais, the Beef Master and the Brangus.

"K-State has had an experimental herd of Simmental since 1973," Miles McKee, professor of animal sciences and industry, said.

"As of now, the Simmental are the most popular of the new breeds. They have a solid future. They are a sound breed," he said.

"The second most popular is the Limousine. They have a high muscle to bone ratio. The pounds of muscle they produce is very good," he said. "Each breed has its own advantages."

Two of the newer breeds to gain popularity are the Gelbvieh and the Salers.

"The Gelbvieh came over some time ago (to the United States), but they didn't advance much. The Gelbvieh have an opportunity to make gains in the market right now. They've been getting good data from the experimental stations in Clay Center and Nebraska. You've got to have people interested in making improvements," McKee said.

"The Salers are a new breed from France," McKee said. "Producers of the traditional breeds are finally saying, 'We need the new exotic breeds.' They watched their market decline and decided they needed the new continental breeds."

They mate with the Hereford and produce a white-faced calf, he said, adding that they also are a highly fertile breed and known for ease of calving, he said.

"The Gelbvieh are a German breed. They are a light straw-gold color. They are a muscular breed. German cattle are deeper bodied. They don't have the cleanliness of a lot of breeds. They are heavier-bodied and have highly maternal traits. They are known for reproductive efficiency. They milk well and wean heavy calves. Their rate of gain is right near the top," he said.

During the summer months, many producers consider Brahman cattle as a sturdy breed during hot weather. They are especially popular in feed lot operations. Breeders are looking for cattle that have a percent of Brahman blood in them, McKee said.

Among the American breeds developed recently, the Beef Master and the Brangus are the most popular. The Brangus are a cross between the Brahman and the Angus. The Beef Master are a Brahman, Hereford and Shorthorn cross. Among the most exotic cattle is the Watusi, a native of Nigeria.

"Some Watusi have been imported," Robert Schalles, professor of animal sciences and industry, said. "They've been promoted because of their horn size. The reason the horns developed is because the cattle had to swim across a lake in Africa twice a year. The horns are advantageous for swimming because it helps them float."

An Italian breed, the Chianina, are becoming popular show cattle, especially the steers. In fiscal year 1982, 15,982 Chianina were registered.

"They are a large framed animal — that's their main attribute," Schalles said.

"They are tremendously tall," McKee said. "If you get a good one, they really look super. Some have been known to have a mean disposition. They haven't had a big impact on producers."

"Where we'll go in the future, I don't know," McKee said.

South-West Africa, formerly a German protectorate, came under South African administration through a mandate from the old League of Nations after Germany's defeat in World War I.

South Africa's white-minority government has continued to rule the mineral-rich but sparsely populated region in defiance of United Nations resolutions demanding that it be given independence.

Sooner baseball squad escapes 'Cats upset

OU wins
3-2, 15-3

By HUEY COUNTS
Sports Editor

The K-State baseball team pulled a Dr. Jeckyll-Mr. Hyde act against the nationally-ranked University of Oklahoma as the Sooners swept both games of a double-header Sunday, 3-2 and 15-3, at Frank Meyers Field.

Behind the strong pitching performance of Lynn Lichter, the 'Cats were tied 2-2 with Oklahoma heading into the ninth inning.

OU's Steve Peters started the inning with a walk. Scott Ferguson's sacrifice bunt advanced Peters to second. Lichter then induced Jay Searcy to ground out to shortstop Todd Thamer for the first out. But the Sooner's eighth hitter, Jeff Kaye, knocked a single in the hole between third and short to score Peters from second.

The Wildcats nearly tied the game in the bottom of the inning. With two outs, and following a 23-minute rain delay, Steve Goodwin hit a ground ball to third that Searcy threw wildly to first, allowing Goodwin to reach second. But Searcy made up for his error by diving to his right to grab a shot off the bat of Kent Schaefer and then throwing him out at first to end the game.

Oklahoma took an early lead in the contest with single runs in the first and third innings.

With two outs in the first, Paul Williams singled, stole second and scored on Rusty McGinnis' base hit. In the third inning, McGinnis walked and later scored on Ferguson's sacrifice fly.

K-State rallied to tie the score in its half of the fifth.

Steve Goodwin opened the inning with a walk. John Tirell struck out and Jay Kvasnicka drew a base-on-balls. Todd Thamer struck out for out the second out. Goodwin and Kvasnicka advanced to third and second respectively on a wild pitch, and both scored when Cary Colbert lined a single to center field.

Bobby Witt improved his record to 6-2, striking out eight and allowing two hits. Lichter dropped to 1-4, striking out two and surrendering six hits.

"Lichter pitched a hell of a game," K-State Baseball Coach Bill Hickey said. "He pitched within himself."

The second contest was decided early. Oklahoma scored five times in the first inning on its way to improving its record to 30-5 overall, 6-0 in conference play.

Hickey cited a "lack of mental concentration" as one of the factors contributing to the lopsided score.

"Two (misplayed) flyballs in right field cost us runs," he said. "A senior tagged up on a (shallow) flyball to right field and cost us."

K-State was able to cut into a 6-0 Sooner lead in the bottom of the fourth. Colbert reached base on a fielder's choice and Mark Goodwin

K-State fares well in track competition

By JUDI WRIGHT
Staff Writer

For the second time in the outdoor season, members of the K-State men's and women's track squads traveled to two different meets — the Shocker Sports Festival in Wichita and the John Jacobs Invitational in Norman, Okla. — Saturday and Sunday.

The athletes faced windy, rainy weather conditions at the Shocker Sports Festival, which has become very familiar to the track teams this season. Pinkie Suggs battled the weather and her opponents, however, to capture first place in both the shot put and the discus.

Suggs heaved the shot 48-11½, the fourth-longest throw in K-State track history. She also made history in the discus with a meet record of 148-3, the sixth-longest in K-State history.

Rita Graves also was a top performer for the K-State women at the Wichita meet, winning first place with a 5-8 effort in the high jump.

For the men, K-State was paced by a first-place finish from Jon Piles in the 800-meter run with a time of 1 minute and 53.88 seconds. Teammate Ray Mosier came in second with a time of 1:55.18.

Second place finishers for K-State included Kenny Harrison in the long jump (23-6), Erin Ficke in the 1,600-meter run (5:12.31), Kelly Wenlock in the long jump (18-11), Alfredo Rosas in the 5,000-meter run (14:40.88) and Steve Wallace in the 100-meter run (10.21).

Other K-State finishers were Mike Rogers, third in the 5,000 meters (14:47.60); Darrell Wait, third in the high jump (6-6); Bob Leetch, third in the 1,500 meters; Larry Hill, fourth in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles (56.88); Ron Stahl, fourth in the 1,500-meter run; Dan Meyers, fifth in the discus (147-2); Larry Schwalm, fifth in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles (58.36); Steve Smith, fifth in the 1,500-meter run; and Schwalm, sixth in the high hurdles (14.92).

In Norman, a strong K-State finish was marred by the injury of All-American Deb Pihl, who injured her foot during the 3,000-meter run and failed to finish the race.

Head Coach Steve Miller said the extent of the injury would not be known until further X-rays are taken today.

Donna King turned in the fourth-fastest time in K-State's history with her first-place time of 23.88 in the 200-meter dash. She also finished second in the 100-meter dash with a time of 12.31 and anchored the 4x100-meter relay to a first-place finish. Crystal Hicks, Michelle Maxey and Dana Brown combined with King to win the event in 46.53.

In the 3,000-meter run, Anne Stadler was first with a time of 9:33.09, the fifth-fastest in the school's history.

The only first-place finisher for the men was Ray Hansen in the javelin, with a throw of 241-8.

K-State's two women's javelin throwers, Julie Waage and Roxie McKee, finished first and second, respectively, in the event. Waage threw 165-0, while McKee tossed 150-0.

Other Wildcat finishes at the John Jacobs Invitational include Phil Barnett, fourth in the javelin (205-5) and Jacque Struckhoff, second in the 3,000-meter run (9:37.74).

The men's team recently added two new members to next year's squad with the signing of Gene Abernathy and Bryon Lopez to national letters of intent.

"These are two tremendous former Kansas high school athletes," Miller said.

Abernathy, a graduate of Wichita Kapaun High School, was the top discus thrower in the nation two years ago. His best throw in the discus measured 199-feet-9 and his best in the shotput was 62-feet-10.

"I think Gene might be one of the best signees in the country," Miller said. "With Andy Gillam (K-State's shot putter) being red-shirted, we will have two national caliber throwers next year."

Lopez, a graduate of Buhler High School, currently attends Hutchinson Community College and earned all-American honors there in cross country.

Athletic council studies upgrading of University non-revenue sports

CONNIE WOODARD
Staff Writer

(Editor's note: This is the first of two articles about K-State's policies concerning spending in the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. The second article will examine how the policies compare with those at the other Big Eight Conference schools.)

The Intercollegiate Athletic Council currently is in the process of approving the budget for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1984. Decisions will soon be finalized concerning the amount of funding each K-State sport will receive next school year.

The Intercollegiate Athletic Council's nine members consist of two students recommended by Student Senate; two faculty-at-large; two alumni; Robert Snell, K-State's Big Eight Conference faculty representative; and Kathryn Treadway, an alternate faculty representative who was K-State's faculty representative to the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women before it dissolved.

Veryl Switzer, assistant vice president of student affairs, is chairman of the council. He explained the funding process for sports at K-State, which begins with the athletic director.

Dick Towers, athletic director and an ex-officio member of the council, receives the individual sports coaches' budget proposals. Towers and his business manager review and modify the budgets. They give a complete proposal to the athletic council, requesting approval of the budgets as submitted, but leaving room for some minor adjustments that might be suggested by the council, Switzer said.

To satisfy the athletic programs' needs, the council bases its approval on certain criteria. These include considering Title IX guidelines when funding non-revenue producing sports, trying to balance the funding so there is equity in both women's and men's sports and assuring equal opportunity is being provided in the funding of women's sports, Switzer said.

He said that in making its decisions, the council tries to remember that K-State can be competitive in certain categories, but at this point, it cannot compete nationally in all the sports K-State sponsors.

There are certain priorities considered when figuring the budget proposal, Towers said.

Sports are divided into two distinct areas: revenue sports, which include football and men's basketball, and non-revenue sports. Women's volleyball and basketball also can be included in the revenue-producing categories at K-State, Towers said.

Football, men's and women's basketball and women's volleyball are the four sports in which K-State can meet competitively with its peers on a national level, Switzer said.

"Our rationale for being highly competitive in basketball and football is that these are the sports that we rely upon to generate the income for supplementing the other sports.

Therefore we need to fill the football stadium and we need to keep the Ahearn gymnasium, until we get the new coliseum, filled to capacity," Switzer said.

The other sports K-State sponsors are considered non-revenue sports, although a charge may be imposed to view a track meet or baseball game, Towers said.

"We don't anticipate that volleyball or track or baseball will produce any revenue that will have a significant effect upon our sports. So football and basketball must support everything," he said.

Switzer said, "We feel that on a regional basis we can be competitive in the other sports."

The council considers how K-State can best compete in men's and women's golf, tennis, men's baseball and women's softball with the available funds, he said.

"We think that women's basketball has made a tremendous contribution in terms of generating fan interest," Switzer said.

"This past year we had approximately $25,000 taken in at the gate in women's basketball, which I would consider on the top in the Big Eight Conference," Towers said. "It (women's basketball) has shown some signs of bringing in some revenue."

To qualify for National Collegiate Athletic Association championships, K-State must sponsor eight sports for men and four sports for women. K-State qualifies in both areas with

Intramural softball schedule realigned

By TOM FAY
Collegian Reporter

The weather is to blame for the sour turn the intramural softball season has taken this spring.

"We've played 4½ days out of four weeks," said Steve Martini, assistant director for recreational services. "We really haven't played much because the fields have been so wet. Some teams haven't even played yet."

The Easter weekend and early completion of school in May has provided only a minimum number of dates to reschedule.

"The first three days cancelled out in softball at the beginning of the season, and we (staff) rescheduled those games," Martini said. "Then the next week and a half cancelled out, so we decided that maybe we ought to do something different with it (the season)."

"This is by far the worst, meaning most inconvenient, season I've ever been involved in as far as the way the weather has dictated our play. I've never seen a season that's been this wiped out with weather," he said.

Martini said the weather has frustrated the players because they can't play softball.

"People can't even practice because the weather has been so bad, and a lot of teams have forfeited," he said.

Due to the weather, the playoff system had to be altered.

"Instead of trying to reschedule those games and shorten them to three-inning games, we've decided to finish the season and finish it as scheduled. The days that are nice that we can play on, we'll play," Martini said.

Regular league play ends on April 19, and the playoff schedule will be posted on April 23.

The playoffs will begin on April 25, and play will continue through May 3.

"I think that will give us enough time, unless we get more rain," Martini said.

Martini said the way the playoff schedule will work is that any team that has not forfeited a game during the regular season will be allowed to go to the playoffs. Some leagues may not have even played, so the whole league will then go to the playoffs.

"Some leagues are such that they've played two games, and everybody in that league has forfeited once," he said. "Nobody from that league will advance. That will be the criteria for going to the playoffs," he said.

"We'll do the playoffs within each league. Each league has six teams in it ideally and will have a single elimination playoff between those six teams until each league has one champion team," Martini said. "If you win your league, then you would move on to the divisional championships."

In the divisional championships, "all of the fraternity league winners would play in a fraternity division championship single-elimination tournament and each other league winner would play in their division," he said. "There would then be an all-University playoffs for the men because of the three divisions that they have."

"The scoring of the softball points have been adjusted, and we did try to make it as fair as possible," Martini said.

Men's, women's squads find stiff golf competition

K-State's men's and women's golf squads found their share of tough competition Thursday and Friday as the women placed fifth at the Lady Shocker Invitational at Wichita and the men took seventh in the Crossroads of America Tournament at Joplin, Mo.

The women's team will next play host in a 54-hole tournament today and Tuesday at the Manhattan Country Club.

The Wildcats will take on the University of Iowa, the University of Nebraska and Wichita State University in the invitational, along with the University of Kansas, the University of Missouri and Southwest Missouri State University. Tee off time is scheduled for 8:30 a.m. on both days.

At the Lady Shocker Invitational, K-State found a rain-soaked course hard to handle, placing fifth in the six-team event.

The Wildcats finished the 54-hole event with a team score of 1,124, nipping Wichita State for fifth place. Nebraska won the invitational with a 998 total, followed by Iowa State University with a 1,017. Iowa and the University of Northern Iowa finished third and fourth respectively.

Sophomore Sherry Dercher's total of 277 led the Wildcat efforts, with sophomore Anne Hegarty following close behind with a 278. Sophomore Terri Alexander and sophomore Paige Harrison both shot 287 in the event.

Southwestern Oklahoma State University won the men's team title at Joplin, shooting 633 in the 36-hole competition. K-State placed seventh with a 651.

The Wildcats were led by junior Robert Sedorek, who shot a two-day total of 154. Scott Stewart finished with a 165, followed by sophomore Jim Fiscella with a 167 and Chris Colbert with a 168 to round out K-State's scoring. Sedorek's 154 was good for third in the individual medalist competition.

The men's next meet will be April 20-21 in the Heart of America Tournament at Warrensburg, Mo.

'Cats

Mike Santiago struck out six and gave up six hits to improve his record to 7-0. John Caresio, 2-4, surrendered 14 hits for K-State.

K-State, 10-16 overall and 0-6 in the Big Eight, and Oklahoma are scheduled to play a double-header at noon today at Frank Meyers Field.

"The kids need to go home and remember what they did in the first game today," Hickey said.

In other games this weekend: the University of Nebraska swept a pair of double-headers from Kansas, 5-2 and 5-0 Saturday and 4-1 and 3-1 Sunday; Iowa State University and the University of Missouri split a pair Saturday, the Cyclones winning the first game 9-4 and Missouri coming back for an 11-4 victory in the nightcap.

Two juco recruits sign with 'Cats

Men's Head Basketball Coach Jack Hartman tapped the junior college ranks once again and recently announced the signings of two more recruits for the 1984-1985 season.

Signing with the Wildcats were Brad Underwood, a 6-foot-4 guard from Independence Community College and Joe Wright, a 6-foot-3 guard from State Fair Community College in Sedalia, Mo.

Underwood, a native of McPherson, was a member of Independence's 30-9 runner-up team at the National Junior College Athletic Association's national tournament. He led the team in scoring with an average of 15 points per game and was a member of the all-tournament team.

For the season, Underwood connected on 51 percent of his field goals and 77 percent of his free throws in route to earning all-Jayhawk Juco Conference honors. He had a game-high 30 points in the first round of the national tournament.

Wright, who also had scholarship offers from NCAA Division I universities like the University of Nebraska and the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, was a second-team all-American, first-team all-region and a two-time first-team all-league performer. He is currently among 10 junior college players practicing in Colorado Springs, Colo., who are trying to secure an invitation to the U.S. Olympic team tryouts later this month.

A native of Carthage, Mo., he averaged 22.8 points a game this season and 17.7 points a game as a freshman. Last year he also had a 56 percent field goal record and made 72 percent from the free throw line. Wright's team finished the year with a 25-9 record and tied for the league championship.

"We feel like we've really strengthened our guard positions for the next couple of years with our latest signings," Hartman said. "Both of these players are proven performers and should really contribute immediately for us next season."

This is the sixth player to have signed with the Wildcats for next season. Derrick House, a 6-foot-8 community college transfer from Phillips County Community College in Arkansas has signed along with three other recruits who inked last November. Kevin Muff, a 6-6 forward from Cloud County Community College as well as high school products Ron Meyer, 6-9 center from Wichita Campus High School and 6-5 guard Mark Dobbins of Humboldt, also have signed with the Wildcats.

Budget

eight men's and women's sports.

At one time K-State funded almost all of its eight sports with the full scholarship limit allowed by the NCAA. Due to a combination of a deficit accrued when Deloss Dodds was athletic director and the integration of women's sports under a central director with men's sports, K-State had to make some changes in its priorities, Towers said. These changes affected the non-revenue sports.

The athletic department then decided to divide K-State sports into three distinct groups. Category I includes the revenue-producing sports (football and basketball), in which K-State remains as strong as possible.

Category II includes sports that are funded to be competitive in the conference and play primarily a regional schedule, Towers said. These sports include track and field, cross-country, women's volleyball and basketball.

Category III includes softball, baseball, tennis and golf. These sports have part-time coaches and play a regional schedule or less. They do not compete nationally, Towers said.

"We're taking a hard look at the overall program. We started this a year ago with the athletic council. We're looking now at a possibility of upgrading all of our non-revenues and making them more competitive within the conference and on a national basis," Towers said.

"...But when it became apparent that we were not going to receive state money for the coliseum, then the athletic department had to come up with the money very quickly. It was originally thought in terms of a 20-year payout, but right now we need to come up with the money in five years."

The athletic department must raise $2 million for the coliseum. Any excess monies must be earmarked for that project for the next five years.

"It will delay any strengthening of the non-revenue sports until we see that we have that money," Towers said.

Overcrowding causes Cairo's decline

By The Associated Press

CAIRO, Egypt — Thousands of Egyptians waded every day through the debris of Tahrir Square, dodging cars and buses sometimes barely visible through the clouds of dust and exhaust fumes.

"There used to be beautiful gardens and fountains there," lamented Samiha, a middle-aged domestic worker. "I would take my children there every Friday to play in the grass."

The grass and fountains were torn up to make room for a hotel, government buildings and a subway station still under construction.

The square's decline underscores that of Cairo in general, a city strained to its limits by unrestricted growth, pollution and overcrowding. The Jewel of the Arab world has become the "Calcutta of the Middle East."

Three decades ago, Cairo's population was estimated at less than 2.5 million. Today, it has swelled to between 10 and 14 million in the metropolitan area because of a high birthrate and a ceaseless flow of people from the countryside.

Immigration from rural areas accelerated after evacuation of towns along the Suez Canal during the 1967 war with Israel.

In neighborhoods where foreigners and rich Egyptians once lived in spacious villas, such as Zamalek and Garden City, high-rise apartment buildings have taken over. The new residents complain of electricity outages and spotty telephone service.

Sewage often flows in the streets and even the finest apartments lose their water supply for several days at a time.

Well aware of the crisis, the government has pumped nearly $2.5 billion into a furious program to improve housing, transportation and water, sewage and communications systems. But renovation barely keeps pace with the decay.

"There are a lot of problems after 30 years of war," conceded Youssef Sabry Abu Taleb, governor of the Cairo district.

Abu Taleb said the city needs 40,000 to 50,000 new apartments each year to serve a population growth rate now 1 million every 10 months.

The construction itself is creating new problems, robbing the desert nation of precious Nile valley farmland at a rate of 100,000 acres a year. Once self-sufficient, Egypt now imports about half its food.

Crowded housing districts have spread to the edge of the Pyramids, nine miles from downtown. Archaeologists say seepage from substandard sewer systems are contributing to the decay of the Great Sphinx, which has stood guard at the Pyramids for 4,000 years.

To save farmland, parks have had to be sacrificed to the construction. For every remaining acre of park or lawn, there are 54 acres of buildings and streets, Abu Taleb said.

On Cairo streets, blaring car horns often drown out all other sound.

An estimated 1 million cars clog Cairo's 5,040 miles of streets each business day. With only a handful of parking garages available, motorists frequently double- or triple-park.

Good manners, however, require the motorist to leave the car in neutral with the brake off. Hundreds of men earn their living pushing cars out of the way for a fee.

The government hopes to ease congestion with the subway system, a series of overpasses around major squares and new parking garages, but much of the construction has yet to begin.

Archaeologists to dig at Custer's 'last stand'

By The Associated Press

HELENA, Mont. — The bodies of five to 15 troopers never accounted for after the Battle of the Little Bighorn might be buried in a ravine below the hill where Lt. Col. George Armstrong Custer made his famous "last stand," a Park Service historian says.

Archaeologists hoping to solve the more than 100-year-old mystery will look for the bodies in Grey Horse Ravine at the Custer Battlefield National Monument starting May 7, Park Service historian Neil Magnus said.

"We want to satisfy the question of where there any bodies down there, and if not, where did the missing soldiers fall and where are they buried," Magnus said.

The missing troopers were among the estimated 210 U.S. soldiers and civilians attached to five companies of the 7th Cavalry who were wiped out on June 25, 1876, by 4,000 to 5,000 Sioux and Cheyenne Indians.

Magnus said the search was inspired by a prairie fire last August that exposed what appeared to be burial mounds in the ravine.

While most of Custer's troopers are buried in a mass grave at the top of a hill in the 600-acre park in southeastern Montana, some bodies never were found. The exact number of dead is unknown because troop rosters were lost in the battle, Magnus said.

Eyewitness accounts of the battle said some soldiers of E Company were killed in the ravine, Magnus said. "Speculation is that those bodies in the ravine were never taken out of there," Magnus said. "There are indications that dirt was kicked down from the top of the ridge onto the bodies because the stench and decomposition was so bad."

Historians have speculated that E Company either may have tried to escape to the nearby Little Bighorn River or that Custer sent them to protect his flank as he prepared for a retreat he never made.

The confusion after the battle may be one reason the bodies were never found, Magnus said, adding that most of Custer's dead troopers were hastily buried three days after the battle in shallow graves.

The Army returned in 1877 to dig deeper graves and to put up makeshift markers, Magnus said, but most of the dead weren't identified. What historians believe was Custer's body was exhumed and buried at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y.

The other bodies were exhumed in 1881 and moved to a mass grave at the top of a treeless hill where the Custer Monument was built. In 1890, the government placed marble markers at the spot where it guessed each trooper died, Magnus said.

The excavation of the Grey Horse Ravine will continue past June only if something is found, Magnus said.

Magnus said archaeologists also will conduct the first inch-by-inch mapping of the entire battlefield this spring, using equipment they hope will reveal any unmarked graves.

Crude oil spills from tank in Sedgwick County

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Up to 5,000 gallons of crude oil has spilled from a storage tank in rural northeast Sedgwick County, creating "quite a mess" but posing no immediate health hazard, authorities said Sunday.

The oil spilled at a drilling site either Saturday night or early Sunday, said Gregory Mills, an emergency communications supervisor for the Sedgwick County Sheriff's Department. It was discovered by an employee arriving to work at the site about 9 a.m. Sunday, Mills said.

Mills said the tank had contained 120 barrels, or 5,000 gallons, of crude oil. He said some oil may have been stolen.

"Apparently the facility was tampered with," Mills said.

Larry Masters, a Sedgwick County division fire chief, said a vandal may have knocked a plug out of the tank, causing the spill.

Mills said the spill posed no immediate danger to humans, although oil was spotted about a mile east in a stream leading to the Walnut River. Mills said the runoff also had reached Butler County to the east.

Dams were built to restrict the flow in the sparsely populated area.

"We have quite a mess," Mills said. "It could be made to burn, but it takes quite a bit of effort to do so."

Officials from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, local police and fire departments and emergency response teams were at the scene.

charged in four of the deaths. "God knows he didn't go there to kill anybody."

The defendants' references to "niggers" during several meetings where the rally was discussed suggest a racist motivation, Bell said. "They didn't just talk about anti-communism," he said.

Matthews, Wood, Smith and Fowler were charged with actually violating individual marchers' rights by killing them or aiding and abetting.

Wood, Toney and Matthews were charged with intimidating individual marchers by wounding them. Wood also was charged in the wounding of the cameraman.

Griffin and Dawson were charged with conspiring to intimidate witnesses after the gunfight.

Bureau chief recalls bravery, death of Cambodian writer

(Denis Gray, chief of the AP bureau in Bangkok, Thailand, reported from Phnom Penh before it was taken by the Khmer Rouge in 1975.)

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia — He was presumed dead but it was only nine years later that we learned what really happened to one of those unsung heroes of journalism. Mean Leang — a chubby, smiling, intelligent fellow — was executed one day in 1976 by the Khmer Rouge in the western Cambodian province of Pursat.

As one of a dozen "stringers" — part-time reporters — for The Associated Press, he refused evacuation from the besieged city of Phnom Penh in 1975, sticking to his typewriter and sending out vivid stories even as the Khmer Rouge swept into the capital.

Just before communications were cut he wrote a final message: "I alone in office, losing contact with our guys...I feel rather trembling, do not know how to file our stories now...Maybe last cable today and forever."

The story of his death was told to me by his wife, whom I met by accident one evening near the Samaki Hotel where her two daughters were selling flowers to supplement the family's meager income.

Like so many events under the Khmer Rouge terror, Mean Leang's action was difficult to understand, even for his wife. He seemed, she said, obsessed with returning to Phnom Penh — a city abhorred by the Khmer Rouge — communists for its allegedly bourgeois decadence.

So when Mean Leang asked the local Khmer Rouge for permission to return to the capital, they killed him with pickaxes.

Mean Leang was one of a number of Cambodians hired by Western news organizations during the 1970-75 war between the Khmer Rouge and the U.S.-backed regime of President Lon Nol. Their job was to gather information, take photographs and shoot television film on the battlefronts and in Phnom Penh.

They had nicknames like "Moon-face" and "The Colonel" and came to news work from varied pre-war backgrounds — tourist guides, interpreters, movie actors, civil servants. All were resourceful and most were exceptionally brave.

Mean Leang, a fine linguist, had been summoned by the government to act as a censor of foreign news dispatches. The job didn't suit his personality, and one day he quit to join up with those whose stories he had somewhat lackadaisically been examining.

The Khmer Rouge forces were already ringing the capital, hurling rockets to demoralize the near-starving population. The United States kept Phnom Penh alive with airlifted infusions of rice, but the airport, too, was threatened. The stringers working for the AP were called together and offered evacuation.

But when American staffers were whisked out by helicopters all but one of the stringers had chosen to remain behind in Phnom Penh.

The office was left to a group we called "The Big Three."

One was Saing Hel, a gentle and handsome author of romantic novels who had also written a condemnation of the Lon Nol government that nearly cost his life. The second was Sun Heang, a dark-faced, generous, philosophical type, who once dubbed actors' lines in Cambodian movies. The third was Mean Leang, who had in a short time become dedicated to his job and fiercely loyal.

April 17, 1975. The Khmer Rouge penetrated the last of Phnom Penh's defenses. The population, relieved the savage war was over, rushed into the streets and decked the city with white flags.

Mean Leang, collecting information from the others, wrote about all of this, messaging that he was shuttling with his typewriter between the office and the old French colonial building from which the stories were sent to the outside world.

He wrote his last message and the stories stopped.

Cambodia had begun its descent into the Khmer Rouge hell.

Hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, died in the ensuing reign of terror.

Mean Leang's family was put to work as rice farmers after having been forced out of Phnom Penh at gunpoint along with its entire population of some 3 million. Mean Leang's wife said that although many succumbed to hardship, her husband held out well, hiding his past as a member of the educated class — a capital crime — until his inexplicable request.

Nothing reliable was heard of him or the others for more than three years. But refugees reported that anybody found to have worked for foreign organizations was summarily executed.

1979. The Vietnamese invasion of Cambodia spawned a mass exodus to the Thai-Cambodian border, and among the disease-ridden groups that emerged were three of the AP's dozen stringers. The trio, since resettled in the United States, carried grim stories.

There were witnesses to the murder of some. Others had disappeared without a trace. Nothing was heard of Saing Hel. Sun Heang was reported carrying his own death warrant: He kept on taking photographs as the Khmer Rouge herded Phnom Penh's population into the countryside.

Senator vacates committee post to protest Nicaragua port mining

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan said Sunday he is resigning as vice chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee to protest what he called a breach of trust by the Reagan administration over its Central American policy.

The New York Democrat said in a statement that his resignation is "the most emphatic way I can express my view that the Senate committee was not properly briefed on the mining of Nicaraguan harbors with American mines from an American ship under American command."

"If this action was important enough for the president to have approved it in February, it was important enough for the committee to have been informed in February," he said.

Moynihan made his announcement in an interview on ABC News' "This Week with David Brinkley." His office later released a statement elaborating on the announcement.

On the interview program, Moynihan said that if the committee had been told of the mining operation, "We would have said, 'No, you cannot do that.'"

"We tried so hard to insist that what we did was things that could be defensible under law, particularly under the charter of the Organization of American States."

"I'm telling you, I resign," Moynihan said. "I mean, they did not brief us."

But another member of the committee, Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said senators were told of the action, although not at length. ABC said the mining was described in 27 words during two hours of testimony before the committee on CIA activities. Leahy said his own briefing was private because he had to miss the committee meeting. But Moynihan said that reference could not properly be called a briefing.

"The reference is to a single sentence in a two-hour committee meeting, and a singularly obscure sentence at that," he said.

Leahy, a critic of U.S. policy in Central America, said many senators knew of the mining before they voted 76-19 early this month to spend $21 million on covert military assistance to Nicaraguan rebels.

Many of those senators flip-flopped in voting last week, 84-12, to prohibit use of the money for such mining operations, he said. Of those, he added, some "were solely influenced by public opinion" after the mining was reported.

Anything below $1,535 we'll have trouble with."

Kathleen Daniels, junior in industrial engineering and Finance Committee member, said senate should be careful when considering changing the committee's recommendation.

"If we are trying to maintain credibility, we need to follow our own guidelines," she said.

Increased advertising will give student government increased credibility, Bill Sullivan, graduate senator, said.

"One way we can be truly credible is to educate students on how they can interact with student government," he said. "We do this through advertising."

Advertising is a necessary investment, Brian O'Neill, graduate senator, said.

"I have supported more money for advertising for many groups," he said. "Advertising is not an expense, it is an investment. SGA ads are almost always for human resources."

Other groups considered were University for Man and MEChA. UFM was tentatively allocated $10,523.80 — the amount recommended by Finance Committee. MEChA was allocated $383.56, $4 more than recommended by the committee. The $4 is for insurance which is required for state car travel, Porteous said.

THE HEAD SET

craze on the K-State campus and throughout the United States today revolves around a compact metal and plastic headset capable of transporting a wearer into a complacent and blissful state. These wearers can be seen bopping down the sidewalk, the wind in their hair, a smile on their face, and a rhythm in their step. Powering the headset and its impelling rhythm is a compact tape machine carried either in the hand or clipped to a belt. This electronic duo produces a concentrated yet ambient sound which fills the body with a tingling warmth.

High fidelity headphones and cassette players have made a great boom on the market, and more and more people are getting a blast for their money. For $100 or so, a person can enclose himself in a wall of sound capable of topping 90 decibels.

These personal entertainment systems have the capacity to impair the wearer's ability to tune into his surroundings, their intense sound nullifying any cues from the outside. In many states it is unlawful to drive a vehicle while wearing headphones. In some states, you can't even walk down the street while wearing them. If you've ever talked to a headphone addict, you may have gotten an emphatic response as if you were talking to someone at a concert. If you didn't get that, you may have received a nod of pretended understanding, obviously devoid of any idea what you were saying.

A situation like this could be potentially dangerous to a person's health, should he ignore a warning that his pants are on fire. But blissful oblivion, whether dangerous or merely insulting, is yet a symptom of something deeper and more disturbing. The real issue at stake here is the growing trend towards the egocentric. What is being sold here is not some trivial consumer product, but a lifestyle — one of self-absorption, insulation and indifference.

This feeling is well illustrated in a recent ad. A young man stands alone in his Jeep, listening to his headphones as he watches the red-orange glow of the descending sun. The setting is placid. Leaning against the rollbar, the man's position is relaxed and passive. His stance says he is unconcerned for the sublimity of nature, in fact is absorbed in the comforting envelope provided by his external support systems, the Jeep and the soundpack. The ad seems to be telling us that we cannot enjoy the pleasures of life without the aid of technological enhancement. The copy message is short and trite. It says "Only In A Jeep." That red-orange glow might as well be from a nuclear explosion, its searing radiation capturing the victim in his last second of unenlightened nonchalance.

The desire to detach and close oneself off from the complications of the world lies at the heart of a more general trend, one that is growing towards narcissism. Sociologist Daniel Yankelovich found that 17 percent of Americans are deeply committed to a philosophy of self-fulfillment; a feeling that ego needs — sensation and excitement, take priority over all other considerations, including family. Another 63 percent incorporate the self-centered philosophy in varying degrees and 80 percent of all Americans have been affected in some way by the new mentality.

Survey research is not the only way we can get some idea of what's on a people's mind. The choices people make reveal the desires even they themselves cannot or will not articulate. One revealing kind of choice is expressed in consumer demand, especially in societies that are served by autonomous industries. One has merely to inspect the products popular on the market to make some reasonable guess as to what "needs" a public is disposed to listen to.

The production and ensuing popularity of convenience commodities such as portable headphones, personal fitness machines and home computers are hyped by media blitzing and infectious advertising, which focus the consumer's attention to these fads. These products represent the people's desire to accommodate themselves before all else.

This new kind of individualism involves the apathetic withdrawal of individuals from public life and their isolation from each other, with a consequent weakening of society and the growth of unchecked political power. In a time of world conflict and nuclear diplomacy, it is easy for one to become overwhelmed by the questions one must face. We expect to find, in a society deprived control of its political destiny, feelings of insignificance and impotence in the determination of its fate. The egocentric lifestyle is simply an easy way out of considering the absurd, sometimes incomprehensible, and to again establish confidence in the life one feels comfortable living.

Prejudices, passions and interests of the multitude have always carried great weight in determining the personality of our society. In America, values such as the desire for riches are abundant. Our society has a taste for quick success and present enjoyment, regardless how long that happiness may last. This is America's strength, for it provides for freedom of pursuit of one's own interests. But it is also its weakness, since private or personal goals are of utmost importance. Its ideal is exclusive, self-centered and indulgent, and remains unchallenged by a society spoiled by comfort, security and contentment. It provides for all our necessities, facilitates our pleasures and directs our industry. What remains but to spare all the care of thinking and the trouble of living? D

By GREGG MATTHEWS

"There are times that I don't agree with some of the things that happen and I tell him because I figure I'm in a unique position to be able to get away with that. He can't fire me. I'm here. I'm part of his life and that's it."

Dave Carlin

KID of a V.I.P.

By CINDY HORCHEM

Dave Carlin and Bill Kassebaum are each in a unique position. The K-Staters, who both plan to graduate in May, are sons of prominent Kansans — Gov. John Carlin and Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum.

They didn't have a choice about their unique status as the sons of such prominent parents — and they really don't want to be considered different from any other K-State student. But, in some ways, they are unique and they have to deal with it.

In her book, On the Edge of the Spotlight, Kathy Cronkite (yes, Walter's daughter) said issues related to identity, independence, and career are most important to a person who is the child of a celebrity.

Carlin and Kassebaum seem to agree that the identity problem is not overwhelming for them at K-State.

"Most people never put my name together with the family which is the way I like it," Kassebaum said.

"And the people that do connect it, it's not that big a deal. I never think about it. Like I said, she's just my mom."

Like Kassebaum, Carlin said people don't always automatically associate him with his father because of his last name.

"I've always been under the assumption when I meet somebody that they don't know, or even when I'm introduced and they hear the last name, that they don't make the connection unless they tell me that they have. And I think it's a pretty safe assumption because it's a large campus and there are a lot of people running around up here with the same last name."

Carlin said the people he's with that do know his father is governor don't bring it up most of the time. In fact, it's rarely discussed.

"That's the nice thing about being here, people let me forget and they let me be me."

Carlin and Kassebaum both decided to attend K-State for common reasons.

Kassebaum came to K-State, like a lot of other people, because his brothers and sister were here. His oldest brother, John, graduated with a degree in history and is working on a shrimp-raising project in South Carolina. The only girl of the Kassebaum clan, Linda, got her undergraduate degree and then completed veterinary school at K-State. She's a volunteer for the Peace Corps in Africa. The other brother, Richard, has a radio and television degree and just finished studying abroad.

"First off, and above anything else, she's my mom. That's the way I look at it. As a job or a profession, she's a senator."

---

Bill Kassebaum

---

Carlin has family ties to K-State too. His sister, Lisa, is a freshman and his dad is a K-State alumnus with a dairy science degree. But that isn't the main reason he ended up at K-State.

"Dad wanted me to be a farmer. For a long time, he said that he wanted me to go to K-State and he wanted me to live in Farmhouse (the elder Carlin's fraternity). I said, I'm not going to do either one of those, Dad. I'm going to go to KU and major in political science."

But after visits to both campuses, Carlin was sold on K-State.

"It's the same old traditional stuff that people think is so cliché. For me, in my case, it's true. It's the thing we all think about when we think about K-State, it's the atmosphere and the people."

And Farmhouse...? His dad at least wanted him to visit for a rush weekend. Carlin agreed to take a look at the fraternity to make his father happy even though he was skeptical.

"I expected total ag majors and I said I'm not going to be an ag major, I won't fit in. I won't want to talk about the commodities market over dinner every night."

Carlin found his assumptions about Farmhouse were inaccurate. In fact, there's about a 50-50 split between ag and non-ag majors living in Farmhouse. Carlin was even president of the fraternity last year.

So, he's at K-State and he lives in Farmhouse, but he is majoring in political science and pre-law and he studies German as a second language — which leads to the career issue.

Carlin's plans for the future include law school, but not right after graduation. He's been accepted into the Giessen exchange program and will study political science in Germany next year. After that, he plans to go to law school and then to pursue a career in international relations.

Although Kassebaum is majoring in philosophy and pre-law, he's the one that may end up on a farm. "I love ranching," he said.

His family owns a ranch in Morris County and runs a cow-calf operation and he said he wouldn't be surprised if he ended up working there though he has no definite career plans. Kassebaum is also studying a second language, Russian. After he graduates, he hopes to travel. He would especially like to put his Russian to use. And, sometime in the future, he may go on to law school, following in his father's footsteps.

Independence doesn't seem to be much of a problem for Carlin or Kassebaum. Because of their studies and their parents' hectic schedules, they are on their own a lot of the time. Actually, getting the chance to be like a normal family is more of a problem.

"We've become sort of a mobile family," Carlin said. "We have to be pretty flexible with our schedules and a family meal together is a big event because getting us all together at the same table happens once a semester at the most...once a year maybe."

Kassebaum said he has only been to his mother's Washington home twice since she's been in office. He lived there two months last summer. When his mom is in Kansas, she's usually on a tight schedule, so...

"I tend to catch quite a few political lectures," Kassebaum said. "It's hard to sit down and relax. When we do want to be alone, it can be managed."

Carlin said, "It's made me appreciate my time with Dad and with my family more than I think I otherwise would have because there isn't as much, so we've got to make the best of what we have and the phone calls and things."

The two said they usually talk to their parents about once a week on the phone. And they do discuss issues with them at times, although a lot of conversations are family-oriented just like most other students' phone calls from home.

Carlin and Kassebaum said they do keep up with current events. Carlin "devours" magazines and newspapers.

"I really love to just keep up with that kind of thing. Current events and politics kind of run hand-in-hand."

Although Kassebaum isn't interested in politics as a career, he keeps up with the issues so he can keep his mom "on her toes," and so he can hold his own in family discussions, not just with her, but with his grandfather, Alf Landon, whom Kassebaum says "scours the papers thoroughly." He said he's certain growing up with Landon influenced his mother's desire to enter politics.

"Our grandfather has had an influence on us kids too. All of us are involved with politics, in keeping up with what's going on and who's running where."

This year, Nancy Kassebaum is one of those who is running. Even though he was involved in her '78 senatorial campaign and enjoyed it, Kassebaum said he's not sure how involved he'll be in her bid for reelection this year. It depends on if he travels abroad or not. Carlin campaigned in his father's two tries for governor.

"The first campaign, I drove cars and I handed out brochures and I stood behind him when he was making speeches and smiled," Carlin said. "The second time around was a lot more fun. It was my junior year (at K-State) and I went out on my own and set up speaking things. Just talking to people one-on-one, talking to people in groups, countering what I found out there. That was fun. I like campaigning."

There are some things about their parents' jobs that might not be appropriate campaign material, but that Carlin and Kassebaum wish others knew at times.

"People don't know that he gets up at five in the morning and that his day never really ends," Carlin said of his father. "Even when he's relaxing on weekends, if he takes a weekend off, he's still constantly on call because if something happens, a natural disaster occurs, he's going to have to immediately swing into action. It takes an enormous amount of energy. It's not all hand-shaking and baby-kissing."

Kassebaum learned a lot more about his mother's work when he lived with her last summer in Washington, D.C.

"It's really quite a thankless job. I really never realized how hard she works."

He said it's frustrating seeing his mom's work not being appreciated or not being understood, although he said if he weren't personally involved, he might not take the time to understand either. When people do attack his mother verbally, Kassebaum said one way out is to joke about it. Earlier this year, an anti-abortion group in Salina was calling Senator Kassebaum a "baby killer" for her pro-choice views. He said such groups have targeted her and five other senators to campaign against in the '84 election.

"So I call her up, 'Is this my mom the baby killer?'" he said with a laugh. "You joke about it."

Carlin said sometimes people won't give the child of a politician a fair shake because they don't like the parent and what he stands for.

"But then again, and it's another disadvantage in a way, there are those who go out of their way to be nice to you too, so you've got to be able to weed through that and know who your real friends are," Carlin said.

"I guess the advantages are that I've been able to do a little more traveling than some people, not only across the state, but across the country. I've met lots of people and I've got lots of contacts, I suppose you'd call them, just because of the name. I'm not a naive kid. I know that without that, in a lot of cases, some people wouldn't have bothered to shake my hand."

"You've got to accept it, but that's where the disadvantages come in too," Carlin continued, "because your own self worth, if you're not confident enough, if you're going to base it all totally on what your last name is, you're going to run into some problems."

Indentity again. It hasn't been much of a problem for Carlin and Kassebaum, partially because they've tried to keep a low profile, especially Kassebaum.

"Linda is more out-going," Kassebaum said of his sister. "My brothers and I are very low-key, rather sloth-like."

Carlin said he has also tried to avoid drawing attention to himself, but not to the extent of avoiding involvement in groups and activities at K-State. He's been a student senator, in several honoraries and has worked at University Relations doing everything from writing press releases to leading campus tours. He's been involved, but he has tried to stay out of the spotlight because the more attention children of a prominent parent get, the more they're treated like they're different.

"We're not (different), but we're treated that way and it makes it harder for us to relate to people."

A Passion For Purple

By KENNY MOSSMAN

A rose by any other name might smell as sweet, but an athletic team dressed in new or differently colored uniforms might perform better. At least that's the message various coaches have been sending out lately.

Consider the following:

- Two years ago, the University of Colorado replaced its traditional color of black with a new light blue.
- Last summer when Mike Gottfried took over as the new football coach at the University of Kansas, he unveiled navy blue colors for his team, which Larry Brown carried over to basketball. It marked a change with traditional royal blue at KU.
- In the middle of the 1982 football season, K-State football coach Jim Dickey surprised players and Wildcat faithful alike by outfitting his team in gray jerseys for the memorable night game with KU.
- After losing the first two games of the 1983 football season, Dickey changed uniforms again, this time decking the team out in the uniforms worn by the 1978 team.
- On Jan. 28 of this year, K-State basketball coach Jack Hartman left the team's well-known lavender tops at home and took along purple uniforms that had been purchased 12 years earlier.

It's all part of an apparel enthusiasm that has taken wing over the last few years, especially at K-State. Dev Nelson, former K-State sportscaster for 25 years, recalls other instances when uniforms were altered to some point, but can't think of any era that matches the present.

"There have definitely been some changes along those lines," Nelson admitted. "Earlier, I don't think there was that much thought given to it. The teams had to wear something so they wore uniforms. Their socks would drop around their ankles so they barely showed above their shoes, but they didn't care."

Former K-State basketball coaching great Tex Winter (second in career wins among Wildcat coaches) maintained that philosophy while heading the 'Cats from 1953-68. As had been the case prior to his reign, Winter had teams dressed in basic white at home and basic purple on the road.

However, when Winter left in '68, he was replaced by the colorful Cotton Fitzsimmons, now the head mentor of the National Basketball Association's Kansas City Kings. Fitzsimmons implemented two stirring changes that ruffled the feathers of some K-State alums. He introduced gold as an additional color for trim on uniforms and put the team in knee-high purple socks. This was a striking break with what K-State had worn before.

"So many people didn't like the addition of gold because it was different from the traditional purple and white," Nelson remembered. "I know Tex didn't like it, but he also didn't like those socks and neither did a lot of other people. They (the new uniforms) were much different from what the teams had worn before."

Current K-State Coach Jack Hartman followed Fitzsimmons and dressed the team in a more basic frame. The purple socks disappeared, as did the gold-trimmed uniforms. They now reside in the Ahearn Field House equipment room.

Hartman's mark, at least in uniforms, wasn't made until the 1973-74 season when the lavender tops were first introduced as the Wildcats' road uniforms. They remained K-State's road clothing until the Jan. 28 game at KU, and haven't been worn since, even though K-State has made road swings to Missouri, Iowa State, Nebraska and Oklahoma.

"There was a reaction to those (lavender) uniforms, too," Nelson said, "but there wasn't a whole lot made of them because they were being worn by a winning team. I think winning has a lot to do with it. If a team is winning, it can wear anything and nobody is going to say anything about it."

Of course, K-State's teams haven't always been notorious for winning. And there was a time when K-Staters were willing to do just about anything to turn that tide, even if it meant changing the school colors, which was a subject of some discussion prior to the arrival of vibrant football coach Vince Gibson.

"Some people wanted to change our colors because they considered purple to be a weak color," Nelson explained.

K-State football players, dressed in unique gray jerseys, celebrate during the 1982 win over the University of Kansas.

The late Steve Mitchell...in the flamboyant Fitzsimmons style.

"People didn't wear it to the games through those years either. I remember the KU fans calling us 'Purple Bellies.'"

It took a strong personality like Gibson, the football coach from 1967-74, to create a new passion for purple, according to Nelson. Gibson showed up at his introductory press conference in a purple sport coat and tie. Later, he bought a pair of purple cowboy boots and drove a car with a white body and purple top.

"There's no question about the fact that Vince resurrected the color purple with his Purple Pride campaign," Nelson said. "A year after he arrived, everybody was wearing purple again."

Gibson got an unexpected boost during that revival when purple was named the national fashion color in 1970.

"Before that whole thing (the Gibson era), there wasn't much purple clothing on the racks downtown," said Nelson. "There wasn't much demand for it. Now, almost every store has at least some purple items."

The used basketball uniforms hanging in the Ahearn equipment room vary only slightly in style. Some are V-neck, others are round. The writing on some is sewn, while others are silk-screened.

Interestingly, though, not all those uniforms are purple and white.

Coaches have decided that recognizing opposing uniforms is important enough that they stock other pull-over jerseys to be worn by second-teamers and jayvee players who wind up on the scout team during practice. Those jerseys are every color in the rainbow, not to mention every color of the other seven schools in the Big Eight.

Evidently, one must recognize the enemy to defeat it.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TOGE

By LORI RIFFEL

Americans are having a fit over fitness. They're getting themselves in shape, physically and mentally. They're trying to make themselves look better, feel better and think better. They're obsessed with running and jogging, swimming, racquetball and tennis, lifting weights and using exercise machines. They do it in all kinds of weather, year 'round, all across America indoors and out.

As a result of this fit over fitness, fitness centers and health clubs have seen an upsurge in business and a renewed interest in exercise. Weight machines, racquetball, aerobics, Jane Fonda workouts, saunas and whirlpools have all added to the appeal of getting fit.

Battling the natural elements while keeping an exercise program going on a regular basis outside is sometimes trying and, with this year's Kansas winter, even more difficult.

However, according to David Laurie, professor of health, physical education and recreation, getting fit is not all physical.

"When we talk of fitness, people usually think physical fitness. What they don't understand is there are five areas to fitness: social, emotional, mental, physical and spiritual," Laurie said.

Laurie instructs jogging and weight training classes in the physical education department at K-State. In each class, total fitness is a part of the learning.

"As a physical educator, I know there is more than just physical fitness. A new term we use to describe total fitness is 'wellness' and wellness includes all of those five areas," Laurie said.

An awareness of total fitness is growing among all kinds of people, young and old alike. During intramural basketball season, the recreation complex can be a mass mob of men and women dribblers. Or on a winter day, if it warms up five degrees over the average, watch out! Joggers by the jillions.

"Sometimes I almost think it is only a social scene," said Jean Schartz, senior in home economics extension. Schartz is the instructor for the Jane Fonda workout class at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Complex.

While young Americans seem to be the majority of fitness-seekers, an age span of 11 to 80 years old is not uncommon. People of all ages want to look and feel good.

"The key to being fit is, instead of pushing health, to teach how to look good, feel good and enjoy health," Laurie said.

Larry MacPhee, manager of the Manhattan Nautilus, said exercise is an exciting new industry and a lot of people are interested in it.

"A lot of people are concerned with 'self'. They have an attitude of 'I want to make sure I get what is coming to me'. They feel they should strive for better health if they get short of breath going up stairs," MacPhee said.

The social scene is important to youth, it is part of today and getting what they want out of life.

"That's what kids want, looking good and feeling good. If it'll take the pimples off their face, they'll do it. If it'll give them a smaller waistline, a bigger bustline, they'll do it," Laurie said.

"In society now, there is so much emphasis on fitness. People are more nutritionally aware, more educated in fitness and it has caught up the people of America. I call it the Jane Fonda era," Teri Thulin, a manager of the Manhattan Magic Mirror Figure Salon, said.

Housewives, mothers, fathers, even grandparents have gotten into the swing. Indoor exercising facilities have really helped the older generation of America to 'tone up'.

The older generation is creeping up on the youth

Ensuring total body exercise through free and easy movements in the water, plus helping keep you cool has made aquacize a popular workout.

with an increase in exercise that has been overwhelming. This increased interest in exercise by the older generation is due, in part, by a desire to improve personal health and look or feel better. It's also the result of a fear of growing old.

"I think middle-aged people are scared. You start to see the end of your years and feel the end of life. A certain fear is associated with dying, and it's (that fear) okay," MacPhee said. Nautilus helps to work out the fears with their programs.

Another noticeable increase is in the number of women who are exercising. Years ago it was thought women didn't run, do repetitive exercising and perspire.

"In the last four or five years society finally woke up and said, 'hey, it is just as important for the female

Left: Exciting and fast paced, the game of racquetball provides a strenuous and thorough workout, both physically and mentally.

ETHER

to exercise as it is for the male.<sup>4</sup> It's about time," Laurie said.

Women have helped to make Jane Fonda workouts and aerobics a success. Not only are women in the gyms of America, but in the weight rooms and on the jogging tracks as well.

"It used to be you never saw women at all on campus jogging, now you can't go 20 minutes without seeing a woman running outside," Laurie said.

Jane Fonda workouts, jazzercise and aerobics have been popular classes at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Complex. While Jane Fonda centers on muscle tone, as does weight lifting, Schartz adds that other forms of exercising are important.

"Jogging, walking, riding a bicycle or swimming are good for building cardiovascular fitness. Jane Fonda, weights and other exercises for muscle toning do not build cardiovascular fitness. If you tie it all in together, you would have a good program for yourself," Schartz said.

For some the incentive is there. They thrive on the sweat and pain. For others it can be sheer misery yet they know it is necessary to be fit. From time to time they need to have a renewable source of motivation. The fitness centers realize the importance of the one-on-one relationships.

"We have a fitness and weight program card for each member and each (person) weighs in everyday. We like to keep their concerns about weight loss and fitness in the open and stress interactions among each other," Thulin said.

The All-American sport of jogging, indoors or out, builds cardiovascular fitness, muscles and sweat

Interior design and clean, odorless surroundings can make or break a business, and pain and sweat are not directly related to Rocky Balboa meat-carcass workouts.

"Offering a relaxing, calm, quiet atmosphere lets people be themselves. Working out at a center eliminates the boredom of working out at home alone," MacPhee said.

What has probably made the biggest impact on exercising and fitness is sports as a business. Largely, a clothing industry business. What the movie Urban Cowboy did for western fashion is what fitness did to streetwear.

"People may not be any more fit, but they have spent more dollars on looks," Laurie said.

Fitness centers definitely have their highs and lows in terms of being busy throughout the year. Summer months encourage outdoor activities while the holiday months of November and December, especially Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays, see lows in attendance. Due to the holidays, parties and other get togethers, working out often gets shoved aside this time of the year. Thulin said.

"The business is seasonal, with definite fluctuations in participation. The busiest month of the year, and this is true for any spa on earth, is January. The slowest month of the year is December," Thulin said.

Is fitness here to stay? Schartz believes it is going to be around for a long time.

"We'll always have professional sports like football and basketball and the kids will always imitate a hero image and they will grow up with that," Schartz said.

Thulin, of Magic Mirror, believes fitness has taken off like wildfire, and considers Jane Fonda and Richard Simmons pioneers who helped this business grow.

"The only true way to take off weight is to exercise," Thulin said.

Looking good and feeling good has got America on the run. They're having a fit and are doing it together. So come on fitness-seekers, don your duds! D

Name That Building

Fred Bramlage Coliseum is the name K-State's new sports arena will bear. Bramlage, a Junction City businessman and a 1935 graduate of the University, is serving as National Development Council chairman of a $7 million fundraising campaign and has donated $1.75 million of his own toward the coliseum. Because of his contributions, Bramlage will be honored by having the coliseum named for him.

Only two other campus buildings have been primarily funded by an individual, Brandeberry Complex and the International Student Center. Obviously, it's not often K-State finds someone able to contribute so much. When it does, it's appropriate that the building be named for its benefactor. When it doesn't, the name for a new building has to be chosen in some other manner.

So, where do K-State buildings get their names?

Some buildings on campus are named for their function. For example, it's pretty easy to figure out why the veterinary medicine complex is called just that.

Many of the buildings, however, are named after a person. The people so honored have all served the University in some capacity. Past University presidents are frequently the source of names for campus buildings. In fact, of the 10 past presidents, only one has no K-State building named after him. Thomas Will, the University's fourth president from 1897-99, holds that dubious distinction.

Will joined the K-State faculty in 1894. According to Charles C. Howe's book, Kansas State University, A Pictorial History 1863-1963, he became president of the University during a period of political turmoil in Kansas. Will was a member of the Populists, a third party with many progressive ideas. Shortly after the Populists swept the state in the 1896 election, Will took over the presidency. Two years later, after the Populist defeat, Will departed the campus. Several changes made during the Will administration were continued and expanded after he was gone, but the predominantly conservative press of the time labeled Will's administration as "socialist" and created a public image that was denounced from pulpit and soapbox. Any appreciation of the accomplishments made during the Will era was delayed for many years.

The first president of the University was Joseph Denison. Denison Hall, which was built in 1960, is named after him, but it's not the first K-State building to bear his name. The original Denison Hall was built in 1902, but burned in a spectacular fire in the summer of 1934.

K-State's second president, John Alexander Anderson, has one of the University's most prominent buildings named after him. It was officially named in 1902. Anderson Hall was completed in three stages. The north wing was completed in 1877, the central portion including the tower was finished in 1882 and the south wing was built in 1884.

George T. Fairchild was the third mentor of the University. Fairchild Hall was built in 1894. The infamous Will was the fourth president and the fifth was Ernest R. Nichols. Nichols Gymnasium was erected in 1910-11 but burned in 1968. Today, in the process of being restored, it's Nichols Hall.

Waters Hall, another three-stage building, is named for the sixth K-State president, Henry Jackson Waters. The east wing of Waters was finished in 1913, the west wing about 10 years later and the center section which connects the two wings was built in 1952.

President number seven was William Marion Jardine. The married student housing development bears his name. Francis David Farrell was the eighth president and the library is his namesake. The original north wing of the library was built in 1927. One addition was completed in 1951 and the second in 1970.

Milton Eisenhower is the only K-State president who was also an alumnus of the University. The native Kansan wasn't the only one in his family to have the title of president. His brother, Dwight, was THE President. Eisenhower Hall was built in 1951.

McCain Auditorium was completed in 1970. It is named for James A. McCain who retired in 1975 after serving the University as its president for 25 years.

The changes during the McCain years are obvious when one realizes that campus neighbors Ahearn Field House and Durland Phase I were the first and last buildings, respectively, constructed during the McCain era.

Like the majority of the buildings on campus, Ahearn and Durland are named for former K-State instructors. In most cases, the name chosen for a building honors someone who has devoted many years of distinguished service to a University program housed in the building. Mike Ahearn taught in the horticulture department at K-State, but he was also a coach and the University's first athletic director. So the fieldhouse, which was built in 1951, appropriately bears his name. Durland Hall's first phase was finished in 1976 and its second phase was dedicated last semester. Durland is named for M.A. "Cotton" Durland, a 1918 K-State graduate, who began teaching at the University in 1919 and, 30 years later, was dean of engineering and architecture.

Although more than 20 buildings on campus were named in similar fashion, there are some interesting facts about several of them. Four of the K-State buildings were built during the late 1800s. In addition to Anderson and Fairchild Halls, Holtz Hall and the original portion of Kedzie Hall were also built before the turn of the century. Holtz was not named after a person until 1963. It honors Adrian Augustus Holtz who served the University as an instructor, freshman football coach and counselor for 35 years.

Anderson Hall has been a K-State landmark since the late 1800s

Kedzie Hall is not only one of the oldest buildings on campus, it is also the first named after a woman. Originally, Kedzie housed the department of home economics and it is named after Nellie S. Kedzie, head of the Division of Home Economics from 1882-97. Three other academic buildings are named after women. When it was built in 1908, Calvin Hall became the new site of the home economics department which had outgrown Kedzie. It is named after Henrietta Willard Calvin, a librarian and professor of domestic science. The present home economics building, Justin Hall, was built in 1960 and is named after Margaret M. Justin, dean of home economics for 31 years.

Thompson Hall is also named for a woman, Helen B. Thompson, who was dean of the Division of Home Economics from 1918-23. Thompson was built in 1922 and was primarily used for instruction in institutional management at that time. In addition to those four buildings, there are several dormitories named after women.

Bluemont Hall is one exception to naming a building in honor of a person. Bluemont was completed in 1981. Helen Cooper, K-State's assistant director of planning, said a committee was formed to come up with a name for the building because it was to house more than one department and it was difficult to agree on one person to honor. The result — instead of honoring a particular person, the building was named in honor of the University itself. In 1859, the first college in Manhattan was built. It was called Bluemont Central College. That became Kansas State Agricultural College, then Kansas State College, and finally, Kansas State University.

Cooper said a committee is not usually necessary to choose a name for a building in the current naming process. When a new building will house one college or department, suggestions for a name go through the appropriate dean's office first. The dean writes a letter requesting a name to Gene Cross, vice president for university facilities. Cross brings up the request at President Duane Acker's staff meeting and if it's approved there, it goes to the Board of Regents for final approval.

After final approval, the University dedicates the new building with the name selected. And although departments may outgrow it and its function may change, the name will remain as a constant reminder of the past. D

CANCER

Searching for a Cure

Cancer; its effects are devastating both physically and mentally. Because one in every four persons will have cancer, most individuals will be touched by the disease in their lifetime.

What has K-State done to help in the battle against this disease?

Although cancer research has been conducted for about 20 years at the University, currently Jean-Pierre Perchellet is coordinating a new area of research — new to the state of Kansas — in a laboratory in the basement of Ackert Hall. Stepping away from immunology, virology and more conventional areas of cancer research, K-State's Division of Biology opened the anti-cancer drug laboratory in 1983.

Perchellet, who also teaches eight hours a week, devotes a large part of his week to research in the lab.

"What they (Division of Biology) had in mind was to have someone who was really involved in cancer research," the French scientist said. Perchellet turned out to be that "someone."

Before coming to K-State, Perchellet was employed as a research assistant in oncology, which is cancer research, at McArdle Cancer Laboratory. He received his master of science degree in physiology, biochemistry and embryology from the University of Paris VI, France. He went on to receive a Certificate of Specialty and a Ph.D. in endocrinology from the same institution.

With these credentials and training from McArdle Cancer Laboratory, Perchellet was hired by the biology department to direct and coordinate the anti-cancer drug laboratory. His research now focuses on tumor growth and promotion and the effects anti-cancer drugs have on tumors.

The beginning of a cancerous growth is hard to determine, Perchellet said. Although many substances are pre-screened by the Food and Drug Administration, there is no way to prove that compounds in food, drugs and the environment will or will not cause cancer.

"If the compound produces a mutation, it could be a carcinogen (cancer-causing agent), but you can't prove it," Perchellet said.

A number of conditions must be met in order to designate a substance as a carcinogen. The substance must, most importantly, induce cancer in an animal, he said. Another condition is the ability of the compound to induce tumors during experiments. There are several others and it is usually difficult to meet all of these conditions at once.

"The results are not consistent," he said.

In order to determine safe dosages of carcinogens for humans, a substance is often tested on animals. The results from experimentation with animals are calculated to determine safe levels for humans.

"We look at this and say there is no way a human can be exposed to this amount (of the carcinogen), so we keep it (the substance) in the environment," Perchellet said. "There is no safe dose of carcinogens."

Some known carcinogens have been approved as safe for human consumption or the environment because humans must come in contact with a high level of the substance in order to contract the disease. Yet, small doses of a substance cause a tiny amount of irreversible damage to the cell, he said.

Jean-Pierre Perchellet, research scientist, explains the use of a chromatographic pump. The machine is used in anti-cancer drug research.

"The danger with carcinogens is that they induce irreversible effects. The effects are additive," Perchellet explained. "You can reach the dosage (level needed to cause cancer) after a matter of time."

Cancer begins with a mutation in the cell at the DNA level. DNA is located in the cell chromosomes and carries genetic information during cell reproduction. The cell is initiated, Perchellet said, meaning there is a mutation present, but the cell looks normal.

If an individual is exposed to the carcinogen over a long period of time, a tumor may not develop immediately, depending on the dosage. The initiated cell divides, forming similar cells. The mutation develops a tumor. Once the tumor cells begin growing, "they proliferate like mad," he said.

The whole process may actually take 10 to 20 years to begin. Therefore, there is no way to determine what substance actually caused the original mutation in the cells.

"The problem with cancer is there is no way we can predict and prevent the occurrence. There is no way you can make that initiated cell return to normal growth. Once you detect the tumor, you can try to reverse, inhibit or decrease growth," Perchellet said.

Much of the work in the anti-cancer drug laboratory centers around those drugs which are being used to reverse or decrease tumor growth. Drugs used in chemotherapy are the target. Perchellet said he and three graduate students are attempting to identify the biochemical steps involved in tumor growth and the drugs which will stop that growth.

"The problem with anti-cancer drugs is you need to find a drug that is not toxic to the body. You may have many drugs that are not toxic," he said. But there are many which are toxic and damaging to regular, healthy cells.

"Drugs used today are antibiotics. For cancer, that's what they're using today. These drugs just kill the cells (normal as well as cancerous)," Perchellet said.

Because tumor cells have a higher rate of multiplication than do normal cells, cancer cells are most sensitive to the drugs. The anti-cancer drug research is focusing on those strong cancer-fighting compounds, such as those used in chemotherapy, which are toxic or produce harmful side effects to the body. Research is aimed at decreasing the toxicity of those drugs.

Although the newest development in the cancer research being conducted at the University, anti-cancer drug studies are only a small part of the studies which have branched out in the last 20 years.

Projects concerning cancer were being conducted in biology, biochemistry and virology, but efforts were not concentrated throughout the campus in any way.

"Individuals were doing their own research," Richard Consigli, professor of biology, said.

In order to consolidate those efforts, the Division of Biology sought to form a cancer center for research at the University.

Evans Roth, who was director of biology until 1977, had sought approval for a cancer center at K-State.

Although approval was made by the officers of the Board of Regents, Consigli said Roth, who left his position with the University, did not receive word.

Since the center was not placed on the regents' budget, no one was aware for several years that approval for the center had actually been made.

After Terry Johnson became director of the Division of Biology in 1977, he discovered that permission had been granted to designate the division as the Basic Center for Cancer Research.

"I first had to uncover it (approval)," Johnson said.

"Dr. Roth didn't know the outcome. It could have been 1980 when (by the time) I found out."

The Basic Center for Cancer Research has been active for two years, said Johnson, who is also director of the center.

Although based in the Division of Biology, it's actually a University-wide project, he said. Under the direction of the cancer center, research efforts are coordinated and departments are more aware of the types of research being conducted in other departments. In addition to biology, biochemistry and virology, research is being conducted in toxicology, laboratory medicine, systematics and ecology, physiology, foods and nutrition, genetics and others which were not previously involved in the research.

Perchellet and Bonnie Schneider, freshman in pre-nursing, incubate a cell suspension as part of an experiment in K-State's anti-cancer drug laboratory. Schneider, who aids Perchellet, is one of three laboratory assistants helping Several priorities were set in establishing the center. Education was the first move, Johnson said. Faculty members of the Division of Biology set out to design new courses for both undergraduate and graduate level students in cancer research.

"If you want to attract some of the very best people to research, you have to attract them and teach them," he said. By bringing "prima donna researchers" into lower level courses, Johnson said the department hopes to attract more students to cancer study at K-State.

Research was also a priority in campus departments as well as in the cancer center. Johnson said they attempted to develop "something that's more than the same old thing."

"There are already many ongoing projects in cancer research," he said. The department chose to pursue research in a "unique" area. Through this concept, the anti-cancer drug laboratory was born.

Setting up the new laboratory required funds, which the department did not have.

"If you're going to open a lab and staff it, you need money," Johnson said. "We decided to have a private fund-raising venture. We projected that we would have to raise about $250,000."

The campaign to raise funds involved "putting the challenge to the citizens," he said. Fund raising began about two and a half years ago. A slide show featuring cancer research and the proposed laboratory was put together and used in soliciting donations. Although the department had not reached its goal of $250,000, the lab was opened in 1983.

"The support that was coming in made it clear that this was an important goal for everyone," Johnson said. "We felt confident to go ahead."

The laboratory was largely funded through donations from private individuals and organizations, Consigli said. Contributions were made, and still are, by individuals from almost every state in the United States, in addition to people from England, West Germany and Switzerland. The fund-raising campaign is still continuing, with contributions paying for research, the anti-cancer drug lab and education.

Consigli also attributed credit for the laboratory's existence to William Stamey, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, who allowed the department to hire a research scientist to run the laboratory.

With the expansion of research into new departments, more students have been pulled into the research end of the program. Three years ago, cancer fellowships were given to three students for research, Johnson said. For 1983-84, 10 fellowships for $500 each were awarded to students.

Students choose the area in which they wish to do research and contact a faculty member in that area. The faculty member helps the individual write a grant proposal, which is reviewed by a committee. The committee is a faculty-scientist group, which changes every year, Johnson said.

Those students chosen are provided with supplies, the necessary space and equipment and the faculty member's time in helping with the research. These programs are being conducted across campus.

"We fund as many as we can," Johnson said. "Some of these people (who are not funded) still go into the lab and do work."

The biology faculty also received a grant for $280,000 two years ago for the training of graduates toward doctorate degrees. The faculty wrote a proposal which was reviewed by the National Cancer Institute in Washington. Johnson said the University was competing among many well-known medical schools for the funds.

The Institute sent a site visiting team to K-State to view the program and determine if the University faculty had a commitment toward training graduates.

"They were very impressed with what they saw. It's very unusual to have a training grant when you're not a research institute," Johnson said.

The creation of the Basic Center for Cancer Research has been advantageous to the faculty, students, the University and the state, Consigli said. The Division of Biology has been able to create new courses, start a virology and tumor biology training program, bring in outside speakers and conduct seminars.

Fashionable Fads Fit Students to a 'T'

By JOE LIENEMANN

Campus fashions, like Mother Nature's seasons, change color and shape with each day. The variety of clothing styles found at K-State today could probably be found on most any other campus across America. Most of these fashions are passing fads, but others have existed for years.

Well, what exactly are these "fashionable fads" that help dress up our lives and surround us with a sea of colors and shapes? Webster's dictionary defines a fad as "a fashion in dress, behavior or speech that enjoys brief popularity." Sometimes, however, a fad will stay around a little longer.

William Koch, professor emeritus in English and Folklore at K-State, has seen many fads in dress styles change over the years. Take army fatigues, for instance. Their popularity has been around for a long time and will probably continue into the next decade.

Koch said when he started teaching at K-State in 1947, green was a very dominant color on campus. The male students were wearing army pants and parts of uniforms and women on campus were wearing their hair straight and long, with long bangs hanging down in their eyes and face. Army fatigues continue to be one of the most enduring clothing fads around K-State over the years.

Koch also reminisced about some of the popular fashion fads while he was in college.

"When I was in college, all of the guys wore leather jackets made of pigskin and corduroy pants, along with a tie. Those were some pretty hard years when I was going to school and we didn't have too many clothes, so we had a secret of keeping them looking new for a long time," Koch said. "We would wash them before we went to bed at night and then we would stick them under our mattress on the bed and in the morning, they looked brand new because they didn't have any wrinkles in them and they were clean."

During the mid- to late 1960s Koch remembers that many K-State students came to classes barefooted. This was very distracting and annoying to many of the professors at the time, Koch said.

"You know, you were just starting to lecture to the class and you would look up from your notes out at the class and all you would see in the first couple of rows would be bare toes and feet sticking out at you," Koch said. "That's very distracting. I can see why so many places require shirts and shoes nowadays."

Many of the students who have been around K-State for the past five years or more have seen some brief fads come and go. Some fads have enjoyed a more than brief popularity. Included in this category are overalls, designer jeans, T-shirts and tennis shoes.

The students at K-State join thousands of other college students nationwide in the trend of dressing for college more casual than ever before. K-State students particularly like to be fashionably fitted to a "T" — a T-shirt that is — preferably one with some form of graffiti emblazoned on the front or back of it. These shirts promote fraternities and sororities, advertise a favorite brew, make social and political statements even identify the wearer with terms such as "Incredible Hulk" and "Foxy Lady." The popularity of this fad probably will continue to stay around for a long time according to their availability in local stores.

Joining the T-shirt craze is the current popularity of wearing jogging suits or "sweats" to class. Along with this casual attire comes jogging shoes and other forms of footwear.

Caps, cowboy hats and cowboy boots have always been a fad at K-State, probably because a large majority of students are from the Midwest. The boot craze has affected both women and men, with many styles of boots in a variety of colors and patterns on the market. The boom in the cowboy boot business has exploded since movies like Urban Cowboy have been shown and as more and more people discover that western wear is attractive and comfortable to wear.

There also are many other fads enjoyed by other groups of students on campus. These include the punk-style hair cuts and bizarre dress styles, which are extremely popular on the east and west coasts. Another popular fad at K-State is the "valley girl" style, which includes short skirts, bobby socks and high heels and a slang which sounds like a foreign language to someone who has never heard it before.

K-State has survived many different fashion fads over the years and the future will undoubtedly bring many new looks to the campus. The generations of future K-Staters will determine what the fads will be. Some of the current fads will continue to brighten the campus classrooms and sidewalks, while others will just fade away in the dim, dusty recesses of an attic closet. D

Mayor recalls career barriers

By MICHELE SAUER
Campus Editor

Never, never, never, never give in.

Tom Bradley, mayor of Los Angeles, has adopted Winston Churchill's slogan as a personal philosophy.

Bradley said determination and positive thinking are what got him where he is today — mayor of America's second largest city.

Bradley delivered an optimistic 64th Alfred M. Landon Lecture on Monday as he recounted the obstacles he overcame in his career and civil rights progress the nation has made during the past 20 years.

Bradley was a strong contender in the 1982 race for governor of California, losing by the closest margin in the history of the state.

"How did I gain this sense of confidence to get me over obstacles? I began to look at those around me and say 'He or she is not that great. If they can do that, so can I.'"

"If young people would adopt that attitude, they would see that one person can make a difference and that each person's efforts multiply to make progress," he said.

"Sometimes we worry that not much has changed...that we are not making progress," he said. "We look back a year and cannot see much difference. But if we measure history over a longer period of time, we see that if each person makes a commitment to leave society richer than we found it, it is possible to overcome the obstacles and make progress."

Bradley said if people believe something is possible, they can make changes.

His family moved to California after sharecropping in Texas. The family was poor, the economy was depressed and there was much racial discrimination.

Senate surpasses budget in allocating groups' funds

Student Senate currently has exceeded its budget in the tentative allocation of funds to campus groups, but this may not mean that the budgets of groups still to be considered will be cut, according to Tracy Turner, senate chairman.

Senate is considering a tentative allocation bill introduced by Finance Committee for the 1984-1985 school year. The bill has been considered at two meetings and is scheduled for consideration at three more.

The senate has exceeded Finance Committee recommendations by $1,328. Turner said this does not mean groups which have yet to be considered will have funding cut to make the budget balance.

"I don't think this (cutting funds) will happen," he said. "It is a concern, and I don't want senate to feel they have to."

Senators have two options when the allocations exceed the Finance Committee recommendations.

"Groups can come up for reconsideration, then every group is eligible for (budget) cuts," Turner said. "Or we can spend more than we take in. Then we draw on the Maintenance of Standing Programs account."

The account was created to serve as a resource in years with tight budgets, he said.

A senator who previously voted with the majority must request reconsideration, Turner said.

"Reconsideration doesn't necessarily mean something is going to change," he said. "It just gives senators a chance to change their minds."

Senators often view groups differently during reconsideration, Turner said.

"Some people may think it will be unfair to reconsider groups," he said. "The first time groups are considered, they have a clean slate. Senators make their decisions on the basis of five-minute presentations and debate."

There is a different mind-set when a group is up for reconsideration, Turner said.

"People who feel the groups are very deserving may change their vote just to make the totals match," he said.

Reagan approves measures to stop terrorist activities

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has approved a series of measures, including pre-emptive strikes and reprisals, designed to get the upper hand on terrorism worldwide, administration officials said Monday.

One of the key elements of the policy is an effort to switch from defensive action to offensive, partly by increasing the ability of U.S. operatives to gather intelligence in order to stop terrorist activities before they occur.

"You have got to have very good intelligence and very good experience to deal with intelligence," said one administration official, who spoke on the condition that he remain anonymous. "We are just trying as best we can to improve this capability."

While the U.S. government has been increasingly concerned with terrorism for several years, new impetus to deal with it occurred when 241 U.S. servicemen died in the truck-bombing of a Marine headquarters building in Beirut, Lebanon, last Oct. 23.

Although preventive raids and reprisals are part of the policy, it is not known what form such activities would take or what, if any limits were placed on such actions. However, a White House official, speaking anonymously, said Reagan did not scrap an existing prohibition against assassination attempts by U.S. government agents.

"The general idea is that we don't allow terrorism to go unpunished," this source said.

The outline of the new, government-wide approach to terrorism was contained in National Security Decision Directive 138 which Reagan signed April 3.

Ex-congressman to speak in Union

Former Rep. Paul "Pete" McCloskey will speak at 2 p.m. today in the Union Big Eight Room about "Reagan's Foreign Policy in the Middle East."

McCloskey, R-Calif., served in the House of Representatives from 1967 to 1982 and sought the Republican party's nomination for president in 1972. He is known as a liberal Republican who spoke out on his concern for the environment and his objection to the Vietnam War.

McCloskey's visit to K-State is being sponsored by the Former Members of Congress Association and the Department of Political Science.

Gunmen slay security leader of U.S. Embassy in Salvador

By The Associated Press

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Gunmen riding in a taxi assassinated the highest-ranking Salvadoran employee of the U.S. Embassy security staff on Monday as his car stopped at a traffic light, an embassy spokesman said.

The yellow taxi full of armed men drew alongside the car driven by Joaquim Alfredo Zapata Romero and the gunmen opened fire, killing him instantly and wounding his wife, said spokesman Gregory Lagana.

Yolanda Zapata was wounded in the face and neck, Lagana said, but the couple's daughter Lindora, also riding in the car, was not injured.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

The attack occurred near the Camino Real Hotel in northwestern San Salvador.

Lagana said the security official had worked for the embassy for eight years and was chief of Salvadoran security personnel at the embassy, responsible for about 20 full-time security agents.

The spokesman said Zapata had nothing to do with investigations of rightist death squads that have been accused of many of the murders of civilians since the start of El Salvador's civil war.

"He was a routine investigator," Lagana said. "I don't suspect anyone yet."

Zapata had worked for the National Police for 22 years, and for about seven years had been chief of the police criminal investigations unit, a police spokesman said.

Lt. Cmdr. Albert A. Schaufelberger III, deputy commander of the American military advisers in El Salvador, was assassinated by guerrillas last May as he sat in his car waiting to pick up his girlfriend at a local university. He was the only American military adviser slain in El Salvador.

In other developments, leftist guerrillas announced the election of a "provisional president" in the northern province of Chalatenango, and the eastern third of the country was blacked out by rebel sabotage.

The clandestine Radio Farabundo Marti said an election was held April 9 in the "controlled territories" of Chalatenango, some 55 miles north of the capital, and a 28-year-old agricultural worker identified only as Comrade Andres was chosen "new people's president."

The rebels claim to have established a regional government in Chalatenango that provides health, education, economic, public works and defense programs. But there have been no announcements in the past about elections.

"Here in Chalatenango, we live a true people's democracy," the broadcast said, adding that the president and a junta elected at the same time for the Chalatenango region would serve for one year.

The guerrillas have long controlled many of the towns in the mountainous northern province, which has a total population of about 225,000.

Sources in the state-run electrical company said two conducting towers were blown up Sunday night near Mercedes Umana, 78 miles east of the capital, blacking out the eastern provinces of San Miguel, Morazan, La Union and Usulután for the sixth time this year.

Threat postpones Jackson's speech

By The Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. — A scheduled speech at a Columbia church by Democratic presidential candidate Jesse Jackson was delayed Monday after a bomb threat was phoned in to a local newspaper.

Fire and police officials evacuated the Second Baptist Church just west of downtown about 4:45 p.m. after the threat was phoned in to the Columbia Daily Tribune.

A packed house had been waiting for Jackson, who had attended a forum discussion earlier at the University of Missouri in Columbia, said Mary Ratliff, president of the Columbia chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

About 4:45 p.m., officials told the crowd there had been a bomb threat and asked for an orderly evacuation, Ratliff said.

Frank Holt, general manager of the Tribune, said the bomb threat was received by the newspaper's switchboard. Newspaper officials then called authorities, he said.

The newspaper in mid-March received three bomb threats in two days. In one instance, police found devices with the necessary ingredients to be bombs near the Tribune building and near an adult book store, but they were not properly constructed.

A day later police found a flare wrapped in a paper bag in a trash can outside the Columbia police station. The caller had told the newspaper the bag contained dynamite, but no explosive device was found.

No explosive device was found following a search after the third bomb threat. No arrests have been made in the case, police said.

Conflicts arise with new policy for auto towing

By MELISSA BRUNE
Staff Writer

A new policy concerning the towing of vehicles on campus has been instituted by Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities, which is in direct conflict with University Traffic and Parking Regulations.

But in a meeting Monday, the Traffic and Parking Council unanimously approved a motion that campus parking regulations be followed as written.

A letter dated March 28, 1984, from Cross to Art Stone, director of the K-State Police Department, announced the change of policy. The letter stated that towing of vehicles illegally parked in reserved stalls, handicapped parking spaces and fire lanes will be done on an emergency basis only, and only with the approval of Cross or Stone. Otherwise, the letter stated, a wheel lock or a ticket will be placed on an illegally parked vehicle.

Charles Long, chairman of Traffic and Parking Council and associate professor of extension horticulture, said the policy change was made without consultation of the council, "which I think is not proper procedure."

Increasing problems concerning the towing of vehicles was the reason behind the policy change, said Stone, who also is a council member.

"We (K-State police) towed several people who were supposedly high donors to the University," Stone said.

Long said the donors allegedly complained to K-State President Duane Acker, who then directed Cross to correct the problem. It was then that Cross informed Stone of the policy change.

"Frankly he's (Cross) in a trap. He's caught right in the middle," Long said.

The Traffic and Parking Regulations Handbook for 1983-1984 states, "Uniformed campus police officers are appointed by the Kansas Board of Regents and are commissioned by the Riley County Police Department. They have authority to halt motor vehicles, issue tickets for violations, order vehicles towed away and impounded, and to enforce traffic regulations."

A change in policy has not been approved by the Board of Regents, which ultimately approves University regulations concerning traffic and parking, Long said.

"In essence, Traffic and Parking Regulations don't apply...it's his (Cross's) policy now," Long said.

Stone described the traditional policy for towing illegally parked vehicles.

SGA plans to commission artist

Student Governing Association leaders have announced plans to commission an artist to create artwork for the atrium lobby of Nichols Hall.

SGA is using funds set aside by the 1975 Student Senate. The money was earmarked by senate to show support for restoration of the castle-like building, gutted by fire in 1968. The Kansas Legislature later appropriated $6.1 million for reconstruction, which began last fall. Completion is scheduled for April 1985.

A student-faculty committee will screen artist applications for the $8,000 commissioning. The work may be either painting, fiber art, bas relief sculpture or wall sculpture. The lobby wall where the artwork is to be secured measures approximately 67 feet by 16 feet.

Visiting scholar to present lectures

Aijaz Ahmad, scholar and author from Rutgers University, will present two lectures today.

Ahmad will speak at noon in the Union Cafeteria on "Lebanon — In Search of an Answer" and at 7:30 p.m. in Union 212 on "Political Islam: A Critique. Spiritual Solutions to Material Problems."

The lectures are co-sponsored by the Iranian Student Association and the International Coordinating Council.

Football team commends police

The Kansas City Chiefs professional football team has commended the K-State Police Department for its five years of participation in the Crime Prevention Card Program.

Since 1979, campus police officers have distributed the football cards annually to youths at each home game and to youths living in the University apartments at Jardine Terrace.

The cards, similar to baseball cards, depict various players of the Chiefs football team. On the reverse side, crime prevention, safety and good neighbor tips are shown in cartoon form.

The Chiefs supply the campus police with 2,500 sets of cards. Each set consists of 10 different cards; one card is distributed each week of the University football season. There are no costs to the University for the program.

President Ronald Reagan recently recognized the Chiefs' program as an excellent example of the private sector joining forces to combat a public problem.

Researcher to study lenses, VDTs

People who wear bifocals and operate video display terminals (or "units") either as a full-time job activity or as a part of their job are invited to take part in a study this summer.

The study, being conducted by Corwin Bennett, professor of industrial engineering, involves progressive lenses which gradually change from near- to far-seeing distances. They are unlike bifocals, which have a discreet near-seeing area within the far-seeing lens.

Each subject who completes the study will have received a free eye exam, a pair of bifocal lenses, a pair of progressive lenses and a pair of frames. In turn, the subjects will be tested for three hours at a VDT. In between, for six weeks, participants will wear the bifocals and progressive lenses as their regular spectacles.

Interested people who use a VDT full- or part-time in their job are asked to call the Department of Industrial Engineering at 532-5606. People selected for the study will be called to set up an appointment with a local optometrist to have an eye exam to determine if they need bifocals and to determine their prescription.

Terrorism

The document was the culmination of months of study by an inter-agency group that included the president's national security adviser, Robert C. McFarlane; his deputy, John Poindexter; and specialists from the State and Defense departments and other agencies that deal with national security.

The inter-agency group tried to solve problems of overlapping authority, made recommendations on what new legislation was necessary and in general tried to come up with new ideas to combat the growing problem posed by terrorists.

"It's normal after a review process like this for the president to sign a decision directive so they (departments) will know what to do," the administration official said.

On April 4, the day after the directive was signed, Secretary of State George P. Shultz gave a speech in which he outlined the basis for the policy without mentioning the document's existence.

Defending the use of U.S. force abroad, Shultz said the West may need to take "preventive or preemptive action" against state-sponsored terrorism.

Towing

in (that a vehicle was illegally parked in it), the traffic sergeant would go over, verify the presence of a car in the stall and the car would be towed," Stone said. He said that if a car without proper identification is in a handicapped stall, but there is some indication it is driven by handicapped person, a wheel lock is placed on the car instead of towing it.

Members of the council opposed Cross' policy. Several charged the administration with preferential treatment.

"Donors shouldn't get special privileges. If they go downtown and park illegally, they're going to get towed," said Sandra Chandler, council member and clerk in the Department of Forestry.

The council contended it would be difficult to tow vehicles if only Cross or Stone can authorize such a move.

Other concerns of the council were that the policy would encourage parking in illegal areas if drivers did not believe their vehicles would be towed.

Two students who attended the meeting voiced concerns that towing vehicles only on an emergency basis would be in violation of fire regulations and state laws governing handicapped parking spaces.

Stone said the University also is mandated by federal law to keep access to buildings available to the handicapped. He said this would be impossible if cars blocked handicapped parking spaces and campus police were not able to tow them.

The council unanimously approved a motion made by Lewis Hine, staff in the Department of Physics, to recommend the administration abide by the rules as written.

Gretchen Holden, representative of Students for Handicapped Concerns and instructor in student development, suggested a greater issue may be before the council.

"It's whether or not you (the council) have any power or authority at all," she said.

Long said the council has the power to recommend policies to University administrators. Council members said they believe their recommendations are sound, but are often overturned by one person or are ignored completely.

Student places 2nd in speech nationals

K-State student Vincent Bly, senior in theater, received national second place honors for dramatic interpretation Monday during awards ceremonies which culminated the National Individual Events Speech Tournament hosted by K-State beginning Saturday.

The University was host to 105 universities and 550 students from across the nation who attended the tournament.

The tournament, which began Saturday, included 21 K-State entries which placed 10th overall.

Of the 21 entries, nine competed in the finals and six in the quarter-finals. Harold Nichols, director of forensics and professor in speech, said.

Three categories of events were included in the competition.

The A events included impromptu speaking, informative speaking and prose interpreta-

'Stone Man' represents perseverance

(Editor's note: This is the second of eight articles about little-known historical sites in Kansas. "Hidden Places" is a program of University for Man and K-State's Division of Continuing Education.)

By ADAM ROME
Contributing Writer

It is known as the Stone Man or the Penokee Indian, and it is one of the strangest things in all of Kansas. It is a figure of a man about 60 feet tall and 30 feet wide, formed of 168 stones laid out in the middle of a pasture.

The pasture is full of cow chips, so at first the outline is hard to distinguish. And yet, as Bill Piper recalls, the sight of it is striking, almost a revelation:

"It was on a high hill in a beautiful area, and it was in such a position that it overlooked the Solomon River, and you could see down the river for miles...it just appeared to be a man on his back, the body was in a rectangular shape, the head — which was a circle about 5 feet or 6 feet in diameter — was to the west, with the feet pointing east. The figure had upraised arms, and two legs came down, feet turning out, and I was just overwhelmed really, awed that such a thing still existed," Piper said.

And yet, despite the marvel of the thing, the Stone Man is neglected, almost wholly unknown.

There are no histories of the site, no legends, and the few who have seen it still wonder about the answers to even the simplest questions. How old is the figure? Who built it, and why? Is the Stone Man unique, or are there other figures just like it? And why is it here, on a hilltop in northwestern Kansas?

The questions are just as puzzling to scholars. When state archeologist Tom Witty was first told of the Stone Man in 1977, he even wondered if the site might simply be a fluke of nature or the work of school children.

But he explored the hill — probed and measured and took bearings — and he concluded that the site had definitely been built and was a few hundred years old. It was therefore most likely the work of one of the nomadic Indian tribes who camped and hunted here in the 1700s and 1800s, he surmised.

But which tribe? Though Witty was unable to find references to any other such figure in Kansas, he was able to find reference to a number of similar figures in South Dakota. That suggests that the builders might have been Sioux, Cheyenne, Arapaho or Kiowa, since those tribes lived in the Dakotas as well as in northwestern Kansas.

On the other hand, the orientation of the Stone Man to the east suggests that builders might have been Pawnee, who opened their lodges to the sunrise, enabling the god Morning Star to enter and light the hearth.

The question "why" is as problematic as the question "who."

The Stone Man might have been the vision of a youth on a quest; the offering of a war party to ensure success on the way out or to give thanks on the way back; or the work of a priest as a way of connecting the tribe to nature and the cosmos.

It might have been a boundary marker or a landmark, a way of relocating a good hunting ground or a good stream. It might have been a kind of sculpture, a work of art copied from a figure on a hide or a pot. Or it may have been a fertility charm, a symbol of the power of people to renew life.

There is even reason to think it might once have been part of a larger complex, a place intended to mark the solstices, to mark time — like the Quiviran Council Circles in Lyons or the Stonehenge in England.

In any case, the Stone Man is a reminder of both how much has changed in human history and how much has remained the same.

The builders most likely chipped rocks to make knives and arrow points; dug earth to make pots and skinned animals to make clothing; and traveled by foot and by horse, yet they were just as concerned as we are about getting enough to eat and staying warm and staying alive.

They were just as concerned about the welfare of their families, just as concerned about status and their relationship to the supernatural, to God.

They were just as concerned about the vagaries of the environment, about the effect of droughts and dust storms and blizzards.

And so, in its way, the Stone Man today is a monument to the continuity of civilization, to the remarkable ability of people to persevere.

Bradley

"It took faith, confidence and a belief in the world to think things were going to change," Bradley said. "One thing my parents drilled into me was that I must go to college. I must get a good education. This was the key to opening the doors of opportunity."

Bradley said he believed what they said.

Against the advice of a counselor, he chose an academic rather than commercial curriculum in high school and quit a newspaper delivery job to join high school athletics.

"I saw this as a way to go to college," he said. "My mother took an extra job so I could quit mine. After being the top track man in the quarter-mile and an all-city football player, I was recruited and went to UCLA."

Bradley said college gave him a new outlook and encouraged him to continue his education.

He said working an eight-hour day on the Los Angeles Police Department and attending night classes at Southwest University in Los Angeles to earn a law degree was frustrating, and he wondered if he would ever be able to do it.

In 1961, while operating a private law practice in Los Angeles, Bradley ran for city council and served for six years in a district that was one-third black, doing what some said couldn't be done.

"And then I thought, I might as well go after the top job," Bradley said. "So, I ran for mayor."

He said his 1969 campaign for mayor was marred by vicious racial rhetoric. Rumors were spread that all of the police officers would quit if he was elected, and that black militants would take over city hall.

He lost the election.

"I determined that that would never happen to me again," he said. "The next morning I began campaigning again. I wanted the people of Los Angeles to get to know me. I wanted them to make their judgment on me, on my character, not the color of my skin."

Racial rhetoric also became an issue in the 1973 campaign, but this time Bradley was overwhelmingly elected by the people of the city. He was re-elected in 1977 and 1981 and is currently serving his third four-year term as mayor.

"In 1982, I decided to run for governor. Some said 'It can't be done. Don't waste your time and money.' But again, I looked at some of the governors who had served the state of California and once again I said, 'If they could do it, so can I.'"

Of the approximately eight million votes cast, Bradley lost by about 90,000 votes.

He gave three reasons for his defeat: a gun control measure on the ballot, which he supported; a successful Republican absentee ballot drive; and a block of voters who would not vote for a black man.

Although he lost the election, Bradley is encouraged by the civil rights progress he has seen.

"In the last 20 years, the country has made tremendous progress. It took lives, commitment and effort to make the difference," he said.

Bradley cited the Voting Rights Act of 1965 giving all people the right to vote and hold office as important.

"The right to public accommodations also is an improvement," Bradley said. "I've been through Kansas before, after a drive from Lansing, Michigan. I stopped in Topeka for a convention. No hotel, no inn would accept me. No restaurant would serve me. That has been changed for the better. I remember when a black man couldn't get a job driving a bus in the city. Now, there is a black man on the space shuttle mission. The opportunity for jobs has been opened. I hope you are as proud of these changes as I am."

"We've come a long way in my lifetime and in the last 20 years. We are a nation that has truly been transformed."

Not long ago Bradley went to Washington.

"I went to the White House and looked around... Friends, if you can conceive it, you can do it," Bradley said. "Don't let people tell you what you can't do. If you have the willingness to sacrifice for what you want, make up your mind to do it."

Republican favors national death penalty law

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Jim Van Slyke, a candidate for Republican nomination to Congress in the 2nd District, Monday declared his support for a national death penalty law in murder cases.

The 26-year-old Topeka businessman noted incumbent Democratic Rep. Jim Slattery did not support capital punishment when he was in the Legislature, but that a poll Van Slyke commissioned showed a "very, very strong majority" of voters in northeast Kansas support capital punishment.

"This is just one more example where Slattery's views are out of step with the 2nd District voters he was elected to represent," Van Slyke told a news conference on the Shawnee County Courthouse steps.

Van Slyke declared his candidacy for the GOP nomination on March 22 but said he does not plan to file for Congress until late May or early June. No one else has declared for the Republican nomination so far, although Topeka recreational vehicle dealer R.R. "Andy" Anderson, who tried for it unsuccessfully two years ago, has said he is considering running a second time.

Van Slyke said he supports the comprehensive crime act President Reagan proposed to Congress last year, and believes the insanity plea should be eliminated as a defense.

Noting statistics show the incidence of violent crimes increased 500 percent between 1959 and 1978,

Van Slyke said it is time for Congress to enact tougher federal legislation, including the death penalty for treason and murder.

"A government that cannot keep the streets safe to walk at night has lost sight of the basic duty it performs for society," Van Slyke said. "If our lives and safety are in danger, then so are our freedoms."

He said a federal death penalty might serve as a deterrent to "mass murderers roaming the country, going from state to state to kill."

He confirmed his research indicated a tough-on-crime stance would play well with voters, but also claimed he personally feels very strongly about the need for capital punishment.

He conceded there is conflicting evidence about the deterrent value of the death penalty, but said more severe measures are needed to deal with murder.

Van Slyke also conceded that despite the safeguards of the legal system it will remain possible an innocent person might be executed for a murder he or she did not commit.

"Perhaps mistakes are going to be made. I think that is a price people perhaps are willing to pay to keep criminals off the street," he said.

He said he could support handgun registration legislation because it "would make it a little bit more difficult for criminals to get guns."

KC authorities request stopover of shuttle flight

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Officials with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration are looking into the possibility of bringing a space shuttle to Kansas City International Airport for a stopover after a future space shot.

The City Council adopted a resolution early this year inviting NASA to use KCI as a future landing strip for the space shuttle. The resolution caught NASA's attention, said Jay F. Honeycutt, manager of operations integration at the Lyndon B. Johnson Space Center in Houston.

And although he noted that NASA did not need another landing strip, Honeycutt suggested the possibility of bringing a shuttle through Kansas City for a scheduled stopover.

ASK must justify finances

Student Senate has been accused of "taking care of its own" recently in allocation hearings, and it does appear that senate interests have come out ahead in some decisions. But perhaps part of senate's problem stems from a lack of discretion rather than favoritism. Case in point: the Associated Students of Kansas.

ASK "merited" an increase in tentative full-time equivalency allocations from 40 cents to 50 cents, or an estimated $16,000 out of K-State students' pockets next year for representation in that group. In addition, ASK at K-State was awarded $596.20 for traveling and advertising expenses.

Considering K-State will be kicking in almost $17,000 for this group, it seems reasonable to ask just what ASK does for K-State.

They lobby against the drinking age bill. And they lobby against the drinking age bill. And then, of course, they lobby against the drinking age bill. Is that worth almost $17,000? Can ASK show such a particular concern is really the top priority of K-State students, or that the organization has had much of an impact anyway?

ASK says it provides other valuable services to K-State, such as political awareness and educational programs, but the extent and effectiveness of these programs is questionable.

ASK admits its major concern this year has been contesting the drinking age bill. ASK should be able to provide more concrete evidence of its worth to K-State to justify the money it receives.

ASK at K-State is part of the statewide ASK, so the University is compelled to go along with the statewide Full Time Equivalent allocations recommendations or lose representation in the group. If ASK can show it is deserving of so much K-State money, fine. If not, that money might be better spent on some of the more K-State-oriented, humanitarian organizations which have come under senate's single-edged knife.

Mayor's words lend inspiration

Just before students feel the crunch of term-paper deadlines and finals unleash their semesterly wrath, Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley arrived in Manhattan with an inspirational and uplifting message that can ease April school blues.

In his Monday morning Landon Lecture, Bradley recounted the story of his life from sharecropper's son to mayor of the second-largest city in the United States. He said his success would not have been possible without self-confidence, determination, spirit and sacrifice.

Bradley urged everyone, especially youths, not to give up and not to dwell on present misfortunes, but instead to evaluate their position in the sweep of history as one of possible important consequence.

"Every student must believe in himself or herself," Bradley said. "There are no impossibilities for dreamers."

Bradley's message reflected his personal aim to serve as a role model for young blacks, but his words can be applied to almost any situation or any person. And it is not without false hope that what he said can be applied to university students.

With dead week looming around the corner, students suffering beneath piles of homework might remember Bradley's message, recount personal goals and priorities and strive to survive the onslaught of finals.

Judging teams deserve respect

One word that carries widely contrasting connotations in our language is judge. While the position of judge calls for respect in our society, at the same time one of the common sins is to judge — "Judge not that ye shall be judged." Still a third use, as in collegiate judging teams, seems to elicit general disdain or amusement.

For those of you who have not by now turned the page to read Captain Cosmo, I will continue. I just returned from a 10-day trip to California for the National Collegiate Soil Judging Contest. This is the fifth team with which I have been associated, and as usual those involved have to fight an uphill battle for recognition and respect.

Judging team training is the most work for the least amount of credit I have run across in college. It involves not only weeks of preparation, but absences from class of up to 10 days. This is done for one or no hours of credit. Many faculty and fellow students seem to feel the time and effort spent training to judge in respective areas (crops, livestock, wool, dairy products) are a waste of time and, at best, corny.

This problem is not limited to K-State. The newspaper of the California Polytechnic Institute (our hosts) had a long article about our event. It had nothing to say, typically, about the merits of soil judging. It was in effect a list of reactions of the contestants from 19 universities to the "California Experience." The headline was not something like "The Challenge of Soil Judging;" it was "Changing the Beach Boys' Image."

Unlike many resume-fillers, any kind of collegiate "judging" activity is time-consuming. Yet its presence on one's resume may be expected to elicit only a smile from a prospective employer.

DAN ROBISON
Collegian Columnist

This is difficult for me to understand. I believe this disdain is related to the general trend in our society to look down on farming and other traditional work or means of production.

I can only speak for soils, but in general I have found judging attracts a certain type of student. They are those interested in learning more than is expected of them — more than is necessary "to get by."

In addition, judging teams need a special kind of faculty member. Both professors and graduate students involved have to be interested more in educating students than in furthering their own careers. This person recognizes the educational value of judging and is willing to carve 10 days out of the semester so students might gain a more global perspective in their respective fields.

Beyond that, a coach must be willing to risk, each semester, his personal reputation among his peers. It is, after all, a contest and in a sense both the students and the coaches are being "measured" against their counterparts from other schools.

But what does judging mean to the students, the judges? This week, and past national contests, have been the most educational weeks of my college career. There is not just the contest, or the four days of driving around familiarizing ourselves with soils of central California. There is the 4,082-mile drive out and back. This was in effect a course in comparative soils, comparative geology, comparative ecology, comparative agriculture, even comparative culture. It was a coagulation of hours and hours of course work in many different areas.

Judging is to an agricultural education what learning to write well is to a liberal arts education. It is gaining the skill to apply what one has learned.

If a person cannot apply what he has learned, either directly or indirectly, of what use is an education? Without the ability to relate and apply learning, education can simply be the accumulation of unrelated trivia.

So next time you hear about a judging team, do not think of Mary and her little lamb. Think about unselfish faculty and students with a responsible perspective of their own education.

Congress stars in 'Casablanca'

WASHINGTON — In the movie "Casablanca," the cynical prefect of police is ordered to find a pretext to close down Rick's, the cabaret whose gambling casino is an open secret. He does as he is told, telling a perplexed Rick, "I'm shocked! Shocked to find that gambling is going on here!" In the movie "Nicaragua," the prefect will be played by Congress.

In January, the CIA-funded Contras announced that it had mined three Nicaraguan harbors. Since then, several ships were damaged, including a Soviet tanker. And yet when the press revealed that the United States had supplied the mines, trained the men who laid them and controlled the operation from an offshore ship, Congress reacted with shock and the Senate promptly voted its indignation: the United States did that!

But just who, we may ask, did Congress think was responsible? What other country is engaged in a covert war against Nicaragua? What other country has been openly funding the Contras and pressuring the Nicaraguans right and left to do this and do that — hold elections, stop censoring the press, cease aiding the leftists in El Salvador. Did Congress think the mines were placed by a street gang from the Bronx?

My training in mines, provided by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, is limited to the land variety, but even I knew at the time that the United States, either directly or indirectly, was behind the effort to harass shipping coming into Nicaragua. The Contras may be dedicated fellows, but the most experienced of them come from the former National Guard of the late Anastasio Somoza Debayle. They gained experience in murder, mayhem and torture, but the mining of harbors was something outside their ken. There was, alas, no graft to be earned from it.

RICHARD COHEN
Columnist

For a critic of the administration, the mining of Nicaraguan harbors is a bouquet of opportunities.

You could say something about a country that habitually invokes the phrase "the rule of law" but runs like a pickpocket from the jurisdiction of the World Court. And you might also point out the United States absolutely insists on free elections in Nicaragua, but seems not to notice disenfranchised blacks in South Africa. Presumably, voting is a right reserved for whites.

But the real absurdity is the desire of Congress to be the political equivalent of a little bit pregnant. Even after ships were damaged in Nicaraguan harbors, the Senate just recently appropriated $21 million to continue funding the Contras.

Congress must think there is a whole of difference between being killed by a Contra directed by an American and one who is merely being armed and paid by one. Not only is that a distinction without a difference to the deceased, but it is hardly a significant distinction in the rest of Central America. As for Moscow, it has shown the patience of Job. Just imagine how we would have reacted if a Soviet mine had damaged an American ship.

Congress wants exactly what the administration won't provide Nicaragua — a safe harbor. It wants the results of the covert war, but none of the responsibility, and so it has closed its eyes to the obvious: the little Vietnam-like half-steps it has authorized is getting us somewhere — into a quagmire. Composed of members who swear they have learned the lessons of Vietnam, Congress has nevertheless maneuvered itself into a position where its indignation is as hollow as that expressed by Casablanca's prefect of police. We've seen this movie before.

Play it again, Congress.

Tenure policy before 1982 disregarded

Editor,

Re: "Faculty Senate backs tenure policy," in the April 11 Collegian.

I would like to clarify the statements mistakenly attributed to me in the Collegian's report of the Faculty Senate meeting April 10.

My special concern is for the group of administrative staff members who accepted jobs here before 1982 with the expectation they would become eligible for the protections of "administrative tenure." When administrative tenure was abolished by the University in 1982, the conditions of employment which these people had been led to expect were suddenly, dramatically changed.

In return, the University made several commitments to this group of staff members. Although the commitments are similar to the protections described in the Program Discontinuance Document for "tenured faculty," the new document does not explain how administrative staff fit into the scheme it outlines. I believe this is an important omission and the commitments of 1982 should not be forgotten.

In the questions I asked about how the document would apply to administrators, I asked if the intent was to deny to tenure-track faculty the opportunities for retraining which were offered to tenured faculty. I did not, however, characterize this differential treatment as "discrimination." Some senators spoke up to justify the differential treatment of tenured and tenure-track faculty, but their comments were not responsive to my questions. I agree with the principles they enunciated.

Nor did I state that provisions for sabbatical to retrain tenured faculty should be extended to tenure-track faculty. I said they should be extended to that special group of administrators who are now left "in limbo" between current policy and the expectations under which they accepted employment at this University. This is not inconsistent with the commitments made in 1982, but the committee writing the new document apparently failed to consider it all.

Kansas native stars in 1929 silent film

Village Voice reviewer Andrew Sarris once described actress Louise Brooks, a Kansas native, as "one of the most enduringly fascinating women ever to appear on screen."

Brooks' best-known film, "Pandora's Box," is scheduled to be shown at 7:30 p.m. tonight in the Union Forum Hall. The 1929 film is the last in the Union Program Council Kaleidoscope Committee's Early Directors' Series.

In the foreword to Brooks' autobiography "Lulu in Hollywood," William Shawn described her as "one of the greatest beauties of all time...many people think she possesses an erotic eloquence unmatched by that of any other woman ever to have appeared on the screen."

The 1929 silent film is the story of Lulu, "a sexually insatiable female, the archetype of voracious, destructive woman. She has no moral sense and no interests beyond sensuality; when a man is exhausted, she leaves him," New Yorker magazine wrote about the film.

In a recent review of "Pandora's Box," Brooks was called "a great — almost impersonal — beauty who set styles in the flapper period, and whose straight hair and bangs were imitated all over the world."

Brooks, a native of Wichita, began studying for her career while taking dancing lessons in Cherryvale. It was during this time that Brooks first sported the coiffure that was to become a trademark of the 20s.

"My father thought I had been mutilated," Brooks wrote in her autobiography, "when Mother, in the interests of improving my stage appearance, had a barber chop off my long black braids and shape what remained of my hair in a straight Dutch bob with bangs."

"Pandora's Box," Brooks' 15th film, marked her self-imposed removal from an immensely successful Hollywood film career to work with esteemed German director G.W. Pabst. According to New Yorker, Pabst had chosen Brooks to play Lulu in the film, "the role of a lifetime."

"Whatever she does," Shawn wrote, "she is indivisibly an artist. In order to understand Louise Brooks, however, one first has to disentangle her from her most famous role: that of Lulu. There have been a host of Lulus, of course, since the German playwright Frank Wedekind created the character in his plays 'Earth Spirit' and 'Pandora's Box.' Yet it was Louise Brooks, in silence and out of her own person, who created the fundamental, the only Lulu.

"As the years have passed, the image of Louise Brooks has persisted on the screen, and has haunted, and informed, all other performances," Shawn wrote.

Professor keeps time with hobby

By MELISSA BRUNE
Staff Writer

Time often is an intangible but pressing entity for many students and faculty, but for Bill Fateley, professor of chemistry, time is a hobby.

Fateley makes clocks and sundials for fun in his spare time.

Fateley began making timepieces about 20 years ago. He said he is more interested in working with the wood or stone elements than the actual mechanisms of the clocks.

His avocation with clocks keeps him busy, but it's only a sidelight to his career. Fateley edits a professional journal, travels extensively on lecture tours and recently was named the recipient of the 1984 Distinguished Graduate Faculty Award, to be presented to him at commencement in May.

He keeps a few clocks in his office in Willard Hall and no more than four or five at home. Most of them he gives as gifts to friends. He said he enjoys building them, but after the production process is complete, his enjoyment comes in presenting them to friends.

Fateley helped make the sundial at Stagg Hill Golf Course in Manhattan. He jokingly calls this particular sundial "the world's largest sundial," and insists that golfers must raise their golf clubs above their heads to cast a shadow in order to tell the time.

One clock in his Willard Hall office appears to be an ordinary chestnut wood clock. It takes a quick eye to notice the difference.

Fateley said he made it just to tease people, for the clock goes backward.

He said that during his travels he tries to find time to shop for antique sundials, which he collects. He has one which was made by the man who made the sundial at Mount Vernon. He said he is proud of it because it is a real antique.

He also said that while traveling he likes to search for stone for the clocks he makes, such as the stone he brought back from a trip to Brazil.

One of Fateley's sundials is what he calls an alarm sundial. It has a miniature cannon on its base, with a place to put gunpowder. A specially placed attached magnifying glass catches the sun's rays at high noon, ignites the powder and sets off the "alarm."

Staff/John Steerer

Bill Fateley, professor of chemistry, shows one of his mischievous clock designs — a timepiece that runs backward.

Fateley said most sundials can be accurate to within one minute. He said he knows one man who can read a sundial accurately to within 20 seconds. The secret is in reading the shadow cast by the arm of the dial, he said. This arm must be parallel to the axis of the earth and face north.

Fateley estimated that in the approximately 20 years he has been working with clocks, he has made approximately 100 of the timepieces. He said he knows of no one else who makes sundials, although he knows a few people who also make clocks.

Jardine lighting system to improve security

Installation of a new outdoor lighting system is underway at Jardine Terrace Apartments, the University complex for married students, Don Roof, assistant director of family and student housing, said.

The Department of Housing already has installed high-pressure sodium light fixtures to six of the 24 buildings within the complex, he said. Lights for the remaining 18 buildings are to be furnished in the near future.

Roof said the major reason for installation of the new lights is to illuminate the area to increase security and reduce the incidence of theft and assault. Before this project, Jardine did not have an outdoor lighting system.

In the past, residents of the complex were encouraged by the housing department to leave their porch lights on during dark hours through a campaign called Operation Porch Light. The department deducted $1 from the residents' electric bills if the porch light was kept on during dark hours, Roof said.

Lloyd Davenport, director of housing maintenance, said the complete lighting system will cost the department $38,400. The high pressure sodium light fixtures are the most economical way to light the area, he said.

"This system will provide more lights at less cost. We will be getting 24,000 hours of light per lamp," Davenport said.

Hijacking ends in engagement

TEL AVIV, Israel — Two Israelis held hostage on a hijacked bus used their 10 hours of captivity to decide to get married, the Jerusalem Post reported Monday.

The daily newspaper said Zeev Buksenspan, 26, of Haifa, and Judith Schwartz, 22, of Ashkelon, met about six months ago — also on a bus. She had refused his previous marriage proposals, the Post said.

The two were among 25 people held captive for 10 hours when four Palestinian guerrillas hijacked a bus Thursday. Israeli army commandos stormed the bus early Friday killing the guerrillas. One passenger was killed when the army moved in.

The Post quoted Buksenspan as saying that during their 10 hours of captivity, "We spoke about death and fate. Suddenly Judith turned to me and said decisively: If we get out of here alive, we'll get married."

Actress finds vote in 'good taste'

BOSTON — Sultry television actress Joan Collins says her children, including a daughter at Boston University, thought it was fun that college students named her "Sexiest Woman of the Year."

"My children thought it was quite jolly," the British-born actress said of the award presented Sunday night. Boston University was one of 10 schools polled in the survey.

"I was extremely flattered. I thought they showed enormously good taste," Collins told The Boston Herald. "Maybe they like manipulative...women."

On the weekly television series "Dynasty," Collins portrays the villainous Alexis Carrington Colby.

Chancellor Kohl takes diet break

BONN, West Germany — West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl began a two-week vacation Monday at an Austrian resort, but instead of relaxation and easy living he hopes to shed a pound a day on a strict diet, his office said.

At last report Kohl, 54, packed about 212 pounds on his 6-foot-4 frame.

The mass-circulation daily Bild Zeitung said he began his diet at the mountain resort of Schruns with a breakfast of two slices of crisp bread spread with cheese.

Lunch consisted of about four ounces of broiled beef with thin onion strips, two boiled potatoes and a mixed salad with buttermilk dressing.

Dinner was another round of crisp bread, this time topped with cucumbers, and a hard-boiled egg on the side.

Teen-ager washed-up in car wash

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. — A teen-ager was arrested after allegedly leading California Highway Patrol officers on a three-city, 30-minute chase that included a drive through a car wash.

The pursuit began Friday when officers tried to stop a driver in Los Gatos, CHP Sgt. Alan Wolochuk said. The man sped up to 85 mph and drove on through Los Gatos, San Jose and Mountain View.

A detour through a self-service car wash punctured a tire but that only slowed the driver to 55 mph, Wolochuk said.

He finally stopped when Wolochuk turned on a megaphone and said, "You haven't hurt anyone yet. Don't you think this has gone far enough? Stop your car right there."

Taiwanese wary of Reagan's China trip

By The Associated Press

TAIPEI, Taiwan — The 19 million Chinese on this Nationalist-held island will be watching warily when President Reagan, for many years a staunch patron of their cause, journeys to Peking on April 26.

State visits to China are no longer a novel experience for American presidents, and the Taiwan-based Nationalists have become reluctantly accustomed to the idea of their biggest ally hobnobbing with the enemy.

In interviews, ordinary Taiwan citizens offered a variety of reactions — ranging from fear that Reagan could be fooled by the leaders in Peking, to suggestions that it will help him to better understand Chinese communism.

Some people are apprehensive that improved relations between Washington and Peking might undercut the personal ties that Reagan has tried to maintain with Taiwan since his predecessor, Jimmy Carter, decided in 1979 to end 30 years of diplomatic relations with the Nationalists and formally recognize the People's Republic of China.

Peking claims that Taiwan is a part of China and made the severing of official U.S. ties with the Nationalists a condition for establishing its own full diplomatic relations with Washington.

"The visit of any U.S. president to the mainland does us no good," said Chang Wen-li, a 25-year-old university student.

He recalled that it was the 1972 visit by another sturdy Republican friend of Taiwan, Richard Nixon, that originally opened the way to normalization of relations between the Americans and the mainland government. Reagan's visit, he predicted, will lead to closer ties "and that will be bad for Taiwan."

According to an official who asked not to be identified, the Nationalist government's attitude is one of resigned "understanding."

"Of course, we are very concerned about the visit. We have to watch it carefully," said Dr. James Soong, the government's chief spokesman.

"Mr. Reagan has repeatedly indicated that he wishes close, cordial relations with the Republic of (Nationalist) China. And he has assured us he will not sacrifice old friends for new ones. We have confidence in him."

At the same time, said Soong, "He has to maintain some kind of relations (with Peking) to check Soviet expansion in the Far East."

Describing the Communist leaders in Peking as "very tricky," Soong said they have adjusted to the possibility that they may have to deal with Reagan for another four years.

"What they hope to do is to soften Mr. Reagan's anti-communist stand and erode the firmness of his policy toward Taiwan," he said.

When Reagan was elected in 1980, officials and others here hoped his long record as a pro-Nationalist meant he would take steps to reverse the trend toward closer U.S. ties with the Peking regime.

The Nationalists were disappointed, especially when Reagan signed an agreement with Peking in 1982 to phase out arms sales to Taiwan, but toned down their rhetoric when it was found that, in practice, military sales continued virtually as before.

Soong said his government remains unhappy over Reagan's refusal to sell it advanced FX or F-16 fighter planes, and hopes that he will review the decision.

Interviews with a sampling of Taiwanese drew mostly negative reactions to Reagan's visit to China. However, some said they thought it wouldn't do any harm and might even do some good, particularly in terms of the three-way relationship between China, the United States and the Soviet Union.

"A year ago," said Tsai Sheng-bong, an independent legislator and businessman, "Soviet ships were in the Taiwan Strait. They are using the Vietnamese naval base at Cam Ranh Bay (in Vietnam). The short-term effect of the Reagan visit may be to ease the tensions."

Lee Teng-hui, the 60-year-old Taiwan governor and next vice president of the Republic of China, said he thought the China-U.S. Soviet balancing act was futile.

"The United States may be thinking that if it becomes friends with Peking it will deter the Soviet Union," he said. But Moscow's belligerent attitude hasn't changed despite years of individual Chinese and American confrontation, and isn't likely to, he said.

Jeffrey Koo, 50, a prominent Taiwan businessman, said that by going to China, Reagan will "do some harm psychologically" to Taiwan, but won't trigger an outflow of capital.

"We have learned that we cannot depend on anyone, not even the United States, too much. When the presidency changes, the whole thing changes," he said.

"Because of this system, Taiwan has been exposed at many vulnerable points. So we have learned to look after ourselves."

Chen Tsai-wen, a railway ticket collector, called the visit "an awful mistake, both for the Reagan administration and for Reagan himself."

Equally emphatic was Su Hsien-ming, 38, a plumber, who said, "It is absolutely unnecessary for him to go. It gives the impression the United States is more concerned with communist countries than free ones like Taiwan."

LA Times wins public service medal

Journalists earn Pulitzer Prize honors

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Los Angeles Times won two 1984 Pulitzer Prizes for journalism Monday, including the public service medal for its examination of Southern California's growing Hispanic community.

The newspaper's Paul Conrad won a Pulitzer for his editorial cartoons.

The New York Times won two Pulitzers for the third year in a row. Paul Goldberger, the newspaper's architectural writer, was cited for criticism, and John Noble Wilford for national reporting.

In the general local reporting category, Newsday on Long Island won an award for its coverage of the Baby Jane Doe case and its social and political implications.

The Boston Globe won the award for special local reporting for a series examining race relations in Boston. The Pulitzer jury called it "a notable exercise in public service that turned a searching gaze on some of the city's most honored institutions."

The Pulitzer for international reporting went to Karen Elliott House of The Wall Street Journal for what the jury termed her "extraordinary" series of interviews with Jordan's King Hussein, which forecast problems that confront the Reagan administration's Middle East policy.

Albert Scardino of the Georgia Gazette in Savannah won the award for editorials and Vermont Royster of The Wall Street Journal won for distinguished commentary.

In the feature writing category, Peter Mark Rinearson of The Seattle Times was cited for "Making it Fly," his portrait of the new Boeing 757 jetliner.

Stan Grossfeld of The Boston Globe won the Pulitzer for spot news photography for his photographs of the effects of war on the Lebanese people. Anthony Suau of The Denver Post won the feature photography award for photographs of starving people in Ethiopia and for a photograph of a woman at her husband's gravesite in Denver on Memorial Day.

The prizes, most of which carry $1,000 cash awards, were announced by Columbia University, which administers the competition under the will of the late publisher Joseph Pulitzer.

The Los Angeles Times received the public service gold medal for its 27-part series, "Latinos," which the jury called "one of the largest reporting efforts in the newspaper's history."

A team of two editors and 11 writers conducted more than 1,000 interviews and nearly 1,500 Southern Californians were polled.

Wilford, The New York Times's aerospace reporter, was cited for his general coverage.

Celtic's quest for 15th title starts tonight

By The Associated Press

The Boston Celtics, the winningest team during the regular season, will begin a quest for their 15th National Basketball Association championship when they open the playoffs today against the Washington Bullets.

Dallas, Detroit, Denver and Utah also open best-of-five series tonight in quests for their first NBA titles.

Wednesday night, the Philadelphia 76ers begin play for a ninth title and a bid to become the first champion to repeat since the Celtics, of course, did it in 1967-68 and 1968-69.

"This won't be an easy series," Celtics swingman Scott Wedman said Monday of the series that opens in Boston. "But we have the talent to beat them."

The Celtics, with Larry Bird, Robert Parish and Cedric Maxwell, had the talent to post a 62-20 regular-season record, 27 games better than Washington, who finished last in the Celtics-led Atlantic Division with a 35-47 mark. That is the worst of any playoff club.

Boston also has incentive. In last year's playoffs, they were swept 4-0 by Milwaukee in the Eastern Conference semifinals.

"Our players believe we can get to the Celtics, and I think the Celtics think we can beat them," said Coach Gene Shue.

In Tuesday's other series openers, Seattle is at Dallas, New York is at Detroit, Denver is at Utah and Atlanta is at Milwaukee.

Defending champion Philadelphia, which finished 10 games behind Boston in the Atlantic Division with third best regular-season record of 52-30, will be host to New Jersey Wednesday. Two other series Wednesday will have Kansas City at Los Angeles, which won the Pacific Division with a second-best record of 54-28, and Phoenix at Portland.

Dallas will be in the playoffs for the first time in the Mavericks' four-year history, and Coach Dick Motta is happy about the way his team earned its berth in post-season play.

"It wouldn't have meant much if we had made the playoffs because of the expanded list of eligible teams," said Motta. The Mavericks compiled a 43-39 record.

Homecourt advantage will be questionable in the Dallas-Seattle series.

The first two games will be at the Reunion Arena in the Dallas, but if a fifth game is necessary, it will have to be played at Moody Coliseum in Dallas because The World Championship of Tennis will be in the Reunion Arena at that time.

Games 3-4 are set for Seattle, but the third game can't be held at SuperSonics regular home, the Seattle Kingdome, because the Seahawks of the National Football League have booked the facility for the premier of their highlight film. So the game will be played at the Seattle Center Coliseum.

K-State catcher Steve Goodwin attempts to block the effort of University of Oklahoma second baseman John Toal in completing a double play. Toal was successful, as was OU in sweeping the double-header by scores of 12-2 and 15-0 Monday at Frank Meyers Field.

Sooner bats rumble in twin bill victories

By HUEY COUNTS
Sports Editor

K-State played 16 innings of baseball against the University of Oklahoma in Big Eight Conference action Monday. Through the first seven innings the teams were deadlocked at 2-2. But in the next nine, the Sooners outscored the Wildcats 25-0 as they won both ends of a double-header, 12-2 and 15-0, at Frank Meyers Field.

Oklahoma scored twice in the first inning of the opening game for walked and scored one out later on a base hit by Paul Williams. Williams crossed the plate following a double by Rusty McGinnis and a ground out by Steve Peters.

At that point Wildcat right-hander Mike Wilkerson shut down the Oklahoma offense until the eighth inning. In the meantime, the Wildcats came back with single tallies in the fifth and sixth innings to tie the score.

Kerry Golden reached first base with two outs in the fifth inning on a fielder's choice and then stole second. Following a walk to Todd Thamer, Cary Colbert drilled a single to right field to score Golden for the 'Cats' first run.

In the sixth inning, an error by Jay Searcy allowed David Banning to reach first base. Scott Graves singled and Steve Goodwin walked to load the bases with one out.

Banning was thrown out at the plate trying to score on a passed ball. Kent Schaefer walked, filling the bases again, and Graves scored when Oklahoma's pitcher, Jay Reynolds, bobbled Golden's ground ball.

But that was the last Wildcat that would cross the plate.

In the eighth inning, Oklahoma began to unload on Wilkerson, scoring six runs on six hits.

"I was on top of them for seven," Wilkerson said. "I had real good stuff for a while. Too bad it wasn't for nine."

Wilkerson said he had the Oklahoma hitters guessing wrong early in the game, but they figured out his pitching pattern.

"I was keeping them off stride," he said. "But they made good adjustments at the end."

Peters, Ferguson, Jeff Kaye and Kevin Pearson each contributed RBI singles in the eighth inning.

Coach Bill Hickey covers his eyes in frustration after losing to OU.

The Sooners added four more runs in the ninth on four hits.

OU's McGinnis reached first base every time he batted in the twin bill. He went four-for-four in the opener and three-for-three in the second game. Three of his hits were doubles and he had a pair of RBIs. He also walked once in each of the contests.

Reynolds, in relief of starter Keith Hamilton, improved his record to 4-0. Wilkerson dropped to 1-3.

The second game was all Oklahoma. The Sooners scored three in the first inning, four in the second, three in the fifth and five in the sixth.

Meanwhile, the Wildcats were having trouble even getting anyone on base. Darrell Rodgers, a 6-foot-3 sophomore, retired 17 of the first 18 batters he faced — the lone runner was Banning who doubled in the second — in coasting to his sixth victory of the season.

Rodgers, 6-1, struck out six and gave up three hits. Gerry Zimmerman was the loser, surrendering seven runs on seven hits in two innings of work.

K-State, now 10-18 overall and 0-12 in conference play, is scheduled to travel to Lawrence for a double-header Saturday.

Fitzsimmons faces big challenge in beating LA

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City Kings' Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons is calling it "the biggest challenge of my coaching career."

The National Basketball Association is calling it the best-of-five first-round playoff series between the Los Angeles Lakers and the Kansas City Kings.

And any way you slice it, the Kings' challenge is formidable. Fitzsimmons' team, frequently injury-ravaged, finished the regular season with a 38-44 record, tied for third in the Midwest Division with Denver. On the road, the Kings were 12-19. They have not won in the Forum in Los Angeles since 1974 while winning only two of their last 20 meetings altogether.

They will meet the Lakers, the champions of the Pacific Division with a 54-28 record, in the Forum on Wednesday and Friday nights.

The third game will be in Kansas City on Easter Sunday, nationally televised by CBS.

"This will be a challenge. This will probably be the biggest challenge I ever had as a coach," Fitzsimmons said Monday at a media luncheon in Kansas City. "The Lakers have really pounded on the Kings ever since we've had a franchise."

But Fitzsimmons and his players insist they are not going to just go through the motions.

"We're not just happy about making the playoffs. We want to go out and do well," said forward Eddie Johnson. "LA can be beat. They're not a great jump-shooting team, so that's what we have to make them do."

Fitzsimmons said the Kings will be trying to "take some things away" from the Lakers.

Experience, if nothing else, would seem to favor the Lakers. The 12 Los Angeles players have a combined 450 NBA playoff games to their credit.

When tickets are picked up in the fall, a valid fee card must be presented for each ticket ordered.

Group tickets will be sold at the same time with a group consisting of a minimum of 10 and maximum of 70 student season tickets. A group representative may purchase the group tickets and select the location of the seats upon presentation of his/her current semester fee receipt and I.D. card. Payment can be made in one or more checks or by

VISA and MASTER CHARGE. Name and fee cards of other group members will not be required at purchase time.

Tickets may be picked up in the fall by the group representative during enrollment or at the Athletic Ticket Office. Tickets are available only to full fee students. Valid fall semester fee cards must be presented for each season ticket purchased. Complete group must be picked up at one time.

VISA and MASTER CHARGE are now being accepted. Personal checks should be made out to KSU ATHLETIC DEPARTMENT. Include social security number, phone number, and address on all checks.

Universities' scholarship priorities vary

By CONNIE WOODARD
Staff Writer

(Editor's note: This is the second of two articles concerning allocations of funds in the athletic departments of Big Eight Conference universities.)

Each university in the Big Eight Conference has different priorities for deciding which sports it will sponsor and how many scholarships will be offered in each sport.

To compete in the National Collegiate Athletic Association championships, a school must maintain eight men's sports and four women's sports. The NCAA also has guidelines stating the maximum number of full scholarships allowed in college sports.

A "full scholarship" is the total cost of tuition, books, room and board. A coach has the option of dividing his allotted number of full scholarships into partial scholarships. For example, a school may offer 85 full scholarships (from an allowed maximum of 95) for football and 20 partial scholarships. The total cost of the 20 partial scholarships would be equivalent to 10 full scholarships.

K-State budgets 95 full scholarships for football. In men's and women's basketball it budgets the full 15 allowed.

In accordance with NCAA guidelines, 70 full scholarships may be awarded to athletes participating in non-revenue sports.

According to information supplied by the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, the department doesn't have the budget to permit giving the total number of full scholarships allowed to athletes in its non-revenue sports. Instead it gives five out of 13 allowed in baseball, two out of five in men's golf, two out of six in women's golf, five out of 11 in softball and 12 out of 12 in women's volleyball.

In track, K-State budgets for 14 scholarships for men and 16 for women. These are divided up among indoor, outdoor and cross country and are all of instate value (equivalent to the cost of instate tuition). If the coaches wanted to recruit out-of-state athletes, they must offer scholarships based on out-of-state tuition, so fewer scholarships are offered.

The University of Nebraska allots the full contingent of scholarships allowed by the NCAA in each of its sports for men and women.

"For men we have football, basketball, indoor and outdoor track, cross country, golf, baseball, tennis, swimming, wrestling and gymnastics," Bob Devaney, athletic director, said. "For women we have volleyball, basketball, softball, indoor and outdoor track, cross country, gymnastics, softball, tennis, golf and swimming." These sports are listed in order of priority, he said.

"We give football about as much as they need because they bring in the money," Devaney said. "And we award other monies to sports according to their needs, for the most part. We try to determine what they need to be competitive in the Big Eight Conference."

The University of Missouri's athletic department generates its own money, is self-sufficient and has not had a deficit since 1967. "Our athletic program has five basic goals and objectives," John Rawlings, business manager, said. "Our total athletic program budget is built around these goals and objectives."

"The first one is having academic excellence. The second one is having good facilities for our athletes to participate and compete in. The third one is to have a competitive program at two levels," Rawlings said.

"We have four sports which we consider to be level I in which we would like to have a national championship. Those sports are men's and women's basketball, women's gymnastics and football."

"Our fourth goal and objective is to be financially stable and self-sufficient. And our last goal and objective is promoting the good image of the university and the athletic department," Rawlings said.

Missouri budgets for a total of 248 full scholarships each year. It is each coach's prerogative whether all the scholarships are awarded, Rawlings said.

Cecil Grissom, assistant athletic director at Oklahoma State University, estimated that 88 percent of OSU's athletic budget is brought in through the gate.

"We don't have to generate all of it, but we do most of it. We get two sources from the university, one of it for some salaries from state appropriations," Grissom said. The rest is a small percentage received from a general fund created from students' tuition.

"We all know football brings in the most money through the gate. So you pretty much have to fund what they want. It wouldn't make much sense to cut their budget to fund tennis when no one pays to see tennis," he said.

"It's not always dollar and cents, but that has a lot to do with it," Grissom said.

"We don't say you've got to win the Big Eight championship to get this much money. Our philosophy is, 'What do you really need to be competitive?' In other words, have everything you need to win the Big Eight championship even though you might not win it."

Women's volleyball and basketball, men's football, basketball and wrestling are the fully funded sports at Iowa State University, Jim Overlurf, business manager, said.

It is the responsibility of the athletic council's finance committee and the athletic director to determine which other sports have full scholarships, he said.

Iowa State funds as many sports as are funded by the rest of the Big Eight. Eighteen sports receive monies, but not all of them are funded completely, Overlurf said.

Wade Walker, athletic director at the University of Oklahoma, works with an annual budget of approximately $10 million. About 80 percent of that total is generated from football and football-related areas, he said.

"We are totally self-sufficient. We get no state, no federal or no institutional monies.

"We do establish priorities of funding, and basically our priorities go this way: football and basketball are at the top and are funded to the full magnitude. Our goal is everybody's goal that you'd like to have a national champion in each sport. You'd like to supply them with all the needs that they have, but that's impossible because there isn't sufficient monies to supply all," Walker said.

The University of Colorado's athletic department also must generate all its own funds. The only sports that are fully funded at Colorado are football and men's and women's basketball, Steve Ditolla, athletic accountant, said.

The non-revenue sports are divided into certain percentages of the NCAA allotment or equivalency. "NCAA says you can have 'x' number (of scholarships) for each sport. We take a certain percentage of that and give it to the sport," Ditolla said.

"At the beginning of the year the coaches submit to us how many dollars they would like to spend on scholarships. We'll put that into our entire balance sheet and see how that works with everybody. If it does work out, fine, they can have that money. If not, which is the case this year, if there aren't enough budget dollars to go around, then everybody has to cut back," Ditolla said.

"A coach can give as many scholarships as he wants to and give them to whomever he wants as long as he doesn't go over the NCAA limitations and doesn't go over his financial limitations as set by the university," Ditolla said.

At the University of Colorado, skiing is a funding priority for which the university has given up other non-revenue sports so that it may offer scholarships and compete on a national level.

The University of Kansas generates most of its own income but receives some funds from the state for salaries, trainers, coaches and operating expenses, said Susan Wachter, assistant athletic director of business.

The athletic department gives a specific sum of money to each sport, and individual coaches decide what kind of scholarships to offer, she said.

Lakers' Scott to miss opening of playoffs

By The Associated Press

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — The Los Angeles Lakers, humbled by the Philadelphia 76ers in the National Basketball Association championship series last year, begin their quest for vindication when they open the 1983-84 playoffs Wednesday night at home against the Kansas City Kings.

"It's time," said Lakers guard Magic Johnson. "It's money time."

Los Angeles, which lost 4-0 to the 76ers in the title showdown in 1983, won the Pacific Division this season with a 54-28 record, second in the league only to Boston's 62-20.

Kansas City wound up in a third-place tie in the Midwest Division with a 38-44 record.

Wednesday's night's 10 p.m. opener in the best-of-five series will be followed by another game at the Forum, at 9:30 p.m. on Friday. The clubs then switch to Kansas City for a day game Sunday.

The other games, if necessary, will be at Kansas City on Tuesday, April 24, and at the Forum on Thursday, April 26.

The Kings-Lakers winner will face the Dallas-Seattle series winner in the Western Conference semifinals. Los Angeles' record would assure it the homecourt advantage through the conference championships.

The Lakers had health problems toward the end of the season, with James Worthy, Jamaal Wilkes, Byron Scott and Johnson among those ailing at various times. Worthy suffered a mild injury to his left eye in the regular-season finale Sunday against Phoenix; Wilkes has been weakened by a lingering virus; Scott strained knee ligaments about a week ago and has been sidelined; and Johnson had been playing with a badly swollen finger.

All except the rookie Scott, however, are expected to be at or near full strength for the playoffs. Scott may miss the series opener, but should be back in action for the later games.

"We have some loose ends," said Lakers Coach Pat Riley, "but we're relatively healthy."

Although the Kings' record is the poorest among Western Conference playoff teams, Riley warned: "We could be in for a rude awakening if we take them lightly. I sure hope nobody is thinking that way. It could be like 1981 in the mini-series when Houston beat us."

Kansas City Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons said: "I just hope we see a better Kings team in the playoffs than we did in the regular season."

Softball team drops to 8-7

The K-State softball team had difficult weekend, losing four games — three of which were shut-outs — at a three-team tournament at Iowa State University. The Wildcats dropped two games to the Cyclones and a pair to the University of Oklahoma.

Saturday the Wildcats had just two hits — singles by Rachelle Borders and Marcie Borchard — and struck out 11 times as the Sooners grabbed a 3-0 victory.

K-State dropped a 5-1 decision to Iowa State in the Wildcat's second game Saturday.

Sherri Chacey scored the 'Cats lone run in the first inning. Chacey was hit by a pitch and later scored on a single by Joyce Hawley. Borders had two hits for K-State.

Oklahoma shut out K-State on Sunday, 7-0. The Wildcats were limited to three hits; singles by Pam Rufener and Borchard, and a triple by Leslie Taylor.

The Cyclones handed the 'Cats their second shut-out Sunday, taking a 2-0 victory. Hawley and Susie Buchman added two hits each for the Wildcats, who left six runners on base.

The Wildcats, 8-7, are scheduled to play the University of Kansas in a double-header at 3:30 p.m. Wednesday at CiCo Park.

Students denounce Reagan's policies after Nicaraguan visit

By The College Press Service

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Students from American universities are traveling to Nicaragua in increasing numbers and are returning home to tell others what they've learned from their experiences.

"I learned a helluva lot," said Yale University graduate student Alan Wright of his recent visit to Nicaragua.

As soon as he and his wife returned to New Haven in late February, Wright arranged an interview with the Yale Daily News to say he'd learned, among other things, that "our constitution is being subverted" by the Reagan administration's aid to rebels trying to overthrow Nicaragua's government.

At about the same time, senior Bill Cruise returned to his West Virginia campus to address a group of students about how he, too, had come to oppose American policy after spending two weeks in Nicaragua.

Cruise and Wright were among about 200 students who participated in organized visits to Nicaragua in January and February, and then returned to their campuses to denounce American policy toward that Central American country.

They're not the first wave, either.

Several groups, in fact, are organizing trips to Nicaragua for students and others with at least informal hopes of creating enough American anti-war missionaries to begin to build campus resistance to the Reagan administration's Nicaraguan policy.

Some trip sponsors, like the Witness for Peace Program in Durham, N.C., ask students to sign a "covenant" to promise to give press interviews and make rally appearances after they return from their two-week Nicaraguan adventures.

The Witness for Peace Program has already sent about 500 people to Central America, said spokeswoman Betsy Moran.

Other groups said they "work to further understanding between Nicaragua and the U.S.," explained Debbie Reuben of the National Network in Solidarity with the Nicaraguan People in Washington, D.C.

The trips are popular. Reuben's group got about 700 applicants for its most recent trip. She said they want to go "to see for themselves and make up their own minds. They're not propagandized."

The network does "encourage people to communicate what they see when they come back," Reuben said.

The point, she said, is to "work with people to stop U.S. intervention. The people of Nicaragua should decide their future. The U.S. shouldn't overthrow their government."

Moran said her group, which charges $750 to $800 per person for everything from plane fare to lodging for the two weeks, hopes "to develop an ever-broadening, prayerful coalition of American people who stand against our foreign policy" toward Nicaragua.

It appears to be working on some campuses.

While anti-Nicaragua policy protests have not approached the number and scope of last spring's surprisingly widespread demonstrations against American aid to the El Salvadoran government, passions do seem to be stirring.

When, for example, a former Sandinista government official who has since come to oppose the Nicaraguan government spoke at the University of California at Davis in February, about 80 students picketed the lecture, calling him an "assassin."

The Reagan administration has financed and trained a Nicaraguan force — the Contras — that is seeking to overthrow the Sandinista government, which came to power in 1979 when it ousted long-time dictator Anastasio Somoza Garcia.

President Reagan asserts the government wants to change

Nicaragua's economic structure and help foment rebellion against ruling landowner oligarchies in neighboring states.

"They really have a democracy," said Wright, who like his travel companions, spent much of his two-week visit helping harvest coffee. "The people are the government. It's a government for the people and by the people."

"The visit strengthened the way I felt and made me more angry against the U.S.," said Lauren Ross, a student at Louisiana State University.

Though Reuben said the administration is "not thrilled" by the growing traffic to and from Nicaragua, State Department official Susan Clyde said the government doesn't restrict travel there.

"We can understand people wanting to go down there and find out for themselves," Clyde said.

City to air proposal for budget

A public hearing concerning an amendment to the 1983 Small Cities Community Development Block Grant budget is to be conducted during the Manhattan City Commission meeting at 7 p.m. today at City Hall.

Commissioners are to consider adding $110,000 of program income to the budget for land acquisition, relocation and demolition of a trailer court near Griffith Park on the city's south side. The commission also is to consider adopting a resolution which would authorize the amendment.

A discussion of the 1984 Small Cities Community Development Block Grant Program also is to be conducted.

The commission also is to consider approval on second reading of an ordinance regulating the moving of structures within the city.

The Planning Board and city staff have recommended that commissioners approve an ordinance amending the text of the zoning ordinance which would restrict parking and paving in the required front yards of all residential districts. The change would forbid parking in front of any multiple-family buildings and would require landscaping in the front of residential buildings.

Commissioners also are to discuss changing the name of Romain Drive to Westport Boulevard at the request of Town Developers Inc. and the KSU Foundation, which are the only property owners directly affected. City staff has recommended that the commission approve the measure if the street would be called Westport Drive instead of Westport Boulevard.

New York mass murder worst in memory

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Police said Monday that revenge over drug dealings may have led gunmen to murder two women and eight children in their Brooklyn apartment, leaving the victims on sofas and chairs like figures in a "wax museum."

A crying 11-month-old baby found crawling among the corpses was the only survivor of the Sunday afternoon massacre, which officials called New York's worst mass murder in memory.

All 10 victims were shot in the head and some were "almost in repose," police said, indicating the shots may have caught them unawares. A pregnant woman, apparently shot as she fed a child, still had a spoon and pudding can in her hand.

There apparently was no panic or struggle. Carmine Rossi, a baker who found the survivor, said some victims were sitting on a couch and on chairs in front of a blaring TV set.

"There were bodies all over the place," Rossi said. "They were sitting up. It looked like a wax museum, like dummies."

Stunned veteran police officials said they had never seen anything like it. People in the quiet, largely working-class East New York neighborhood were shocked.

Lactose, a milk sugar used to cut heroin, and foil wrappings normally used to wrap narcotics were found in the apartment, police said, but added that the evidence pointed to "street stuff, small stuff," not a major operation.

Murdering children is a revenge tactic used by the Colombian drug world as a reprisal against adults, said Patrick Murphy, first deputy police commissioner. Although the victims were of Puerto Rican descent, Murphy said that angle was being investigated.

"We're looking into the possibility it could be a reprisal because of some bad blood," Murphy said at a news conference. "We're speculating because of the fact that there were young children involved and they were murdered in the fashion they were."

Enrique Bermudez, who lived at the apartment and who discovered the bodies after he returned home Sunday, was being interviewed and his background was "being explored," Murphy said. Murphy said

Bermudez was not a suspect "at this point."

The city offered a $10,000 reward for information leading to the arrest or conviction of the killers and set up a special telephone to receive information in the case.

The victims were shot in the head at close range at about 2 p.m. Sunday, and Murphy said two weapons had been used, .22- and .38-caliber pistols, leading police to believe there were two killers. No weapons were recovered.

Christina Perez, 11 months old, was the only survivor. Rossi, who was summoned by Bermudez, discovered her crying and crawling around in the bloody living room where some of the bodies were found.

She was taken to a nearby hospital and then to the 75th Precinct. Murphy said he was not sure why the little girl was spared, but added, "The shooter may have thought he also shot her."

Killed were two women and four boys and four girls aged 3 to 14.

Police identified the victims as Bermudez's two children, Betsy, 14, and Marilyn, 10; Virginia Lopez, 24, with whom Bermudez lived and who was six months pregnant; and her two children Eddie, 7, and Juan, 4. All apparently lived in the five-room railroad flat.

Also killed were Carmen Perez, 20, who was Lopez's cousin; her sons Alberto, 5, and Noel, 3; Migdalia Perez, 14, Carmen Perez's sister; and Maria Perez, 10, a cousin of Carmen Perez. Police said the Perez family lived nearby and was visiting the Liberty Avenue apartment.

Tenants of the second-floor apartment above the murder scene were not at home when the bodies were discovered. Neighbors said they knew little about those who lived in the first-floor apartment Lopez had rented only a month ago.

"All I know is that they were quiet people. I'm sick just knowing this," said an unidentified woman who lived directly across the street from the house.

Officials cite greek parties for loudness

By LEE WHITE
Manhattan Editor

Local officials Tuesday called for more cooperation by the University to help combat noise problems created by greek houses.

Several Manhattan and Riley County officials, most of whom are members of the Riley County Police Department Advisory Board, met with Greek Affairs Adviser Barb Robel and representatives of the Panhellenic and Interfraternity councils Tuesday afternoon at the RCPD in what was to be a discussion of parking in the Fairchild Avenue area. There was little discussion of parking problems, but much talk about complaints from residents living near greek houses about noise and littering.

"We're living in a Shangri-La compared to other cities (with universities)," City Commissioner Eugene Klingler said. "I think it's a problem you (University officials) can regulate better than we can."

Klingler cited three major causes of problems in greek neighborhoods: parties that last too late at night, loud gatherings and noise-making past reasonable hours.

"I have received a lot of calls in reference to what Gene talked about," Mayor Wanda Fateley said. "The bottom line seems to be we can't hold anyone responsible for what goes on. I don't agree with that at all. I'm looking for some ideas so you (greeks) can have your fun and still not impact the neighborhood."

Riley County Attorney Colt Knutson called noise the "single greatest problem" in neighborhoods with greek houses.

"I think you can have a good time and yet be mindful that you're not living on a satellite," he said.

Alvan Johnson, director of the RCPD, said there are only three or four fraternities that cause most of the complaints his department receives.

"It got out of hand three or four years ago when parties went from having 100 people to 600 or 1,000," Johnson said.

Johnson suggested that top University administrators be informed of complaints against greek houses and that the K-State Police Department respond to some of the disturbance calls.

His suggestion was received favorably by Art Stone, director of K-State police, who said all University police calls are reported daily to Vice President for University Facilities Gene Cross.

Fateley said the University has the power to control the problems with greek houses.

Robel said her office has sent party guidelines to all greek chapter presidents. In response to questions from County Commissioner Marjorie Morse, Robel said the regulations are called "guidelines" instead of "rules" because the University has no mechanism in place to enforce the policies.

Robel did say, however, that the University can have a greek chapter's charter revoked, but added after the meeting that this penalty "would not be for anything like a noise ordinance."

U.S. stance in war between Iran, Iraq concerns speaker

By MIKE TURNER
Government Editor

The United States wants neither Iran nor Iraq to win their on-going war and is taking action to see that the war can continue, said former Rep. Paul "Pete" McCloskey.

McCloskey, R-Calif., who served in the House of Representatives from 1967 to 1982, addressed a crowd of about 40 Tuesday in the Union Big Eight Room.

Several issues in the Middle East today threaten to explode into international conflict with direct United States involvement, McCloskey said. Two of those issues are the Iran-Iraq war and the attempt to move the United States' embassy to Jerusalem.

The Iran-Iraq war is centered beside the Persian Gulf, through which the industrial world receives much of its oil. "The industrial free world has an Achilles heel in that its economy depends on oil," McCloskey said.

As early as 1978, President Jimmy Carter told the world that if any major power were to interfere with the oil supply coming through the Persian Gulf, the United States would respond with military action. Anyone with any military experience knew that Carter was not talking about conventional war because it would be extremely difficult for the United States to win a war in the Middle East next to Soviet territory, McCloskey said. Carter was talking about a nuclear response.

The statement was made to clarify any speculation that the United States may not be willing to commit military forces in the area, he said. One reason the Vietnam War started in 1964 was that the United States had not made clear its interest in the region before the North Vietnamese began their invasion of South Vietnam, he said.

A poll conducted by McCloskey in his congressional district showed his constituency supported 2-to-1 a commitment for the United States to become involved militarily, if necessary, to ensure the Persian Gulf's accessibility.

McCloskey said Iraq started the war, but Iranian troops outnumber Iraqi troops 4-to-1. He said he thinks Iraq will run out of men first, and Iraq has approached the United States for help. They would like out of the war, he said.

Paul McCloskey

But the United States and the Soviet Union are in the same position, he said. "We don't want either side to win. The consensus is that if one side wins, then you can expect to see action taken against the Persian Gulf," he said.

The United States' current policy is to try to stop other countries from assisting Iran and to quietly assist Iraq, not so Iraq can win the war, but to keep the war balanced.

The United States has been hated by the Arab world because of its unbending support of Israel, McCloskey said. Israel currently receives $2.6 billion dollars in aid from the United States — more than any other country. The United States was put in direct conflict with 20 Arab countries when Israel annexed its territory from Arab homelands, he said.

Recent suggestions for the United States to move its embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem would provoke more anger from the Arab world, McCloskey said.

"We have reached the point where we should say to Israel, 'We support your right to exist, but when you deny other people's rights to exist, we will withdraw that support,'" he said.

But no congressional or presidential candidate will take that stand because the Jewish lobby is strong enough to defeat any such can-

Sharpshooters encircle embassy after attack

By The Associated Press

LONDON — Hundreds of police sharpshooters encircled the Libyan Embassy on Tuesday after a gunman in an embassy window raked a protest rally with submachine gunfire, killing a policewoman and wounding 11 of the dissidents.

Blue-beretted officers arrived at the scene by helicopters and buses, training their rifles on the embassy from rooftops and from behind trees, lamp posts and cars.

Apparently in retaliation for the standoff in London, Libyan soldiers surrounded the British Embassy in Tripoli and refused to allow Ambassador Oliver Miles or other officials to leave, the Foreign Office in London said. Other details on the situation in Tripoli were not immediately available.

"There was no possible provocation and no possible pretext for this murderous onslaught," said Home Secretary Leon Brittan. He said Brittan had protested to the Libyan government of Col. Moammar Khadafy over "the most disgraceful and barbaric outrage that London has seen for a very long time."

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who was visiting Portugal, said she was "gravely concerned." Some lawmakers urged that the embassy be closed.

Brittan told reporters contact had been made with "senior people" in the Libyan Embassy, and "they are prepared to cooperate."

It was unclear if police would be allowed into the embassy to search for the gunman. Under international convention, the embassy is Libyan territory and can only be entered by invitation.

Richard Wells, chief spokesman for Scotland Yard, said those inside the embassy had not made any demands.

Police said they had arrested seven people for questioning, including six at Heathrow Airport outside London and one as he left the embassy. Police did not identify those arrested.

A woman who answered the telephone at the official Libyan news agency, JANA, said the man arrested at the embassy was Sala Najim, head of the agency's London bureau, and that he had been "covering what was happening." She refused to give her name.

The gunfire broke out as some 70 students, most of them wearing masks to conceal their identities for fear of reprisals, chanted anti-Khadafy slogans across the street from the embassy on St. James' Square, a few blocks from Buckingham Palace.

"The students were shouting in Arabic, 'Khadafy hangs students,' when the shooting began," said spokesman Richard Bowden, 31, who once worked in Saudi Arabia. "There were no screams. People just started falling."

Dubious hazing elicits complaint from 3 little sisters

By KATHY BARTELLI
and WAYNE PRICE
Staff Writers

The Goldenheart little sister organization of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity has been suspended for one year, effective April 1, after a complaint of hazing was made by three little sister initiates.

The complaint was filed with the Interfraternity Council (IFC) early this month about the initiation ceremony which took place Feb. 28, 1984. Copies of the complaint were not released to the public or to the fraternity's members, so the exact allegations made by the little sisters are not known. The names of the women who filed the complaint also were not released.

During a meeting of the IFC Council of Presidents (an organization of fraternity presidents) April 16 to discuss the situation, Troy Jordan, president of IFC and junior in agricultural economics, said the allegations were supported by members of other fraternities who were staying in the Sig Ep house at the time of the initiation.

IFC determined that the actions violated the hazing policy set forth by IFC and the Panhellenic Council.

When asked if members of the fraternity actually hazed the little sisters, Marc Baker, chairman of the little sister organization and sophomore in agricultural economics, said he had no comment.

Scott Mueller, president of the Sig Ep house and senior in agricultural economics, said the fraternity would not appeal the IFC decision.

"I feel that since it only affected three of the 53 girls involved, and I have heard that they have had second thoughts about it since the complaint was filed, I thought the best thing to do was to let it lie low," Mueller said. "It's already been through the gossip on campus and everybody knows about it. I don't want to draw any more attention to it."

Mueller said he believes individuals within the house took it upon themselves to do things during the initiation that hadn't been approved by the house.

"Some guys took liberties and did things they weren't supposed to," Mueller said. "I didn't see it, and Marc Baker didn't see it."

Mueller said he has an idea who the individuals were, but he said no disciplinary action would be taken against them.

"I won't single them out when the whole house is getting the blame for this," Mueller said. "It just adds more dissension. They know they did it and they're feeling the effects of it since all this has happened."

Mueller said one of the alleged complaints made against the house members was that the little sister initiates were made to drink alcohol. He said there was no alcohol at the initiation.

Several initiates said there was alcohol during the initiation, but they were not forced to drink it.

Mueller later clarified himself and said that while there may have been alcohol present, the house did not buy any alcohol for the initiation.

All of the 15 initiates interviewed said they didn't see anything wrong with the initiation.

"Personally, I don't feel there is any grounds for the entire program to be cancelled," said initiate Stacy Mallory, sophomore in interior design. "It (the initiation) wasn't out of the normal activities that any other fraternity would do. I have no idea who filed the complaint, but I think they should feel pretty bad that they ruined the program for 50 other girls."

Little sister Rae Riggins, freshman in pre-professional elementary education, said, "Most all of the Goldenhearts think someone blew the situation out of hand. It was no big deal when I went through it. All of the girls are ready to go back next year."

Initiate Candi Huggins, freshman in family life and human development, said she doesn't think the complaint was handled fairly.

"Whoever turned them in didn't bother to talk to the president of the little sisters," she said. "They went right over her head, and I don't think that's very fair."

Huggins said different women participated in different activities during the initiation.

"Some of the girls had to do some things and some of them had to do other things, but we all did generally the same thing," she said. "There were things in the initiation that could have been left out or replaced with something else. There was nothing that was meant to hurt us or demoralize us."

Initiate Sue Price, sophomore in pre-design professions, said she thinks the Sig Ep initiation was better than some of the other initiations she has participated in.

"I've been through other initiations that were more formal," she said. "I thought this was a better initiation because the guys spent more time on it and they cared more. Here the guys had little skits that they worked up and they dressed up as different little characters. It wasn't anything offensive to me at all."

Humanities colloquium scheduled

A colloquium of demonstration lessons and discussions for humanities teachers in Kansas public schools is scheduled for today and Thursday at K-State.

The colloquium will involve 50 Kansas teachers representing a variety of grade levels.

The teachers will see the film "Heartland" and participate in a series of interdisciplinary discussions designed to give them ideas to take back to their teaching of English, modern languages and the social sciences.

Some of the discussions will be led by K-State, University of Kansas and Emporia State University faculty and others will be led by participating teachers. K-State departments involved are history, modern languages, English and philosophy and Women's Studies.

The colloquium is partially funded by the Kansas Committee for the Humanities.

Counselor to speak at dinner

Fred Bradley, professor of guidance and counseling, will be the speaker for the Phi Delta Kappa educational fraternity dinner meeting Thursday in the Union Cottonwood Room. The dinner begins at 6 p.m. and Bradley will give his presentation at 7 p.m.

Bradley, author of "Parenting without Hassles," will speak on "Why Not Learn by Our Successes?"

He is expected to address the needs of teachers and parents to change their focus from learning by mistakes to learning by successes.

Visiting professor to give seminar

Richard Root, professor from Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, will present a biology seminar at 7:30 p.m. today in Ackert 234.

Root will speak on "The search for resources by cabbage butterflies: ecological consequences and adaptive significance of Markovian movements in a patchy environment."

Root received his doctorate degree from the University of California at Berkeley. Although trained at Berkeley as an ornithologist, he joined the Department of Entomology at Cornell University.

His seminar is based on his recent studies from a research program in seminal studies on insect response to plant spacing and interplanting in agroecosystems.

UFM chooses junior's logo design

Steven Roark, junior in interior architecture, has been awarded $50 for his winning design in the recent logo design contest held by the University for Man. Second place was awarded to Traci Ferrell, junior in interior architecture.

Roark's logo design employed the theme of the tree of knowledge. Three words below the tree — teaching, learning, growing — symbolize the meaning of UFM and its programs.

The new logo will appear on UFM stationery, letterheads, posters, ads, catalogs, T-shirts and other publicity and promotion for the organization.

U-LearnN Line

I'd like to take a course over the summer, but I don't want to enroll in summer school. What are my options?

K-State does not have a correspondence program, but there are some options available. It is possible to take correspondence courses through the Independent Study Program at the University of Kansas.

A student may order a catalog by calling 1-800-532-6772 or 1-864-4440. The catalog contains course descriptions, fees, cost of materials and the time limits for completion. If you would like to look through a catalog, there are some available for browsing at the office of the Division of Continuing Education, Umberger 317. Remember, the course you want to take must be approved by your adviser.

Courses also may be taken through Telenet, which is offering eight courses this summer at different places throughout Kansas. Classes usually meet at local community colleges, but not all are K-State courses. Again, the course should be approved by your adviser before you enroll. A brochure describing Telenet courses may be obtained through the Telenet Office, Umberger 308.

There also will be a course offered on KTWU Channel 11, called "Vietnam and Television History." Offered by K-State's Department of History, this course may be taken for undergraduate ($29 per credit hour) fees or graduate ($45 per credit hour) fees for two or three hours, filling a humanities elective.

In addition, there is a $15 charge per person and a book which costs $15.45. The course will be held from June 5 to July 21. A person may register by phone (532-5566) using his Social Security number and Visa or Mastercard credit card, or in the office of the Division of Continuing Education, Umberger 317.

U-LearnN is a weekly column devoted to a variety of issues concerning K-State students. It is written by Laurie Fairburn, Associate Coordinator of U-LearnN. If you have any questions or issues you would like to have addressed through the column, come to U-LearnN, Holton 2, or call 532-6442.

Hideaway reflects country doctor's life

(Editor's note: This is the third of eight articles about little-known historical sites in Kansas. "Hidden Places" is a program of University for Man and K-State's Division of Continuing Education.)

By ADAM ROME
Contributing Writer

The dirt road is marked by an arch of cottonwoods, and winds first through a field and then through a grove of trees. The house itself is a big rambling place, light green, a frame structure of 16 rooms, three-and-one-half baths and an enclosed porch on the second story overlooking the banks of the Little Arkansas River.

It is known in Halstead as the Crow's Nest, and it was once the seat of empire of one of the most distinguished men in Kansas history, "The Chief," Dr. Arthur E. Hertzler.

He was a tireless and wise country doctor, a professor at the University of Kansas School of Medicine, and perhaps the greatest surgical pathologist of his day. He was a medical pioneer, builder of a hospital and clinic that attracted patients from across the country. He was a prolific writer, publishing 25 textbooks, 150 articles and six works of popular philosophy.

But he was best known as the author of "The Horse and Buggy Doctor," a book that Saturday Review called "a fascinating self-portrait of an old scientist who is as tough and gnarled as a sassafras root, with the same homey bitterness in the bite of his wit." The book was a best seller in 19 languages, and was the subject of a Hallmark Theater radio play with Lionel Barrymore.

Yet unlike the homes of many other great men, the Crow's Nest is indeed a reflection of character, a reminder of Hertzler's admirable individuality.

The rooms, for example, are all either ridiculously big or ridiculously small. The living room on the second floor is 26 feet or 22 feet by 12 feet, with two chandeliers, a wooden chimney and wood vaulting and two walls of wooden shelves.

At the same time, Hertzler often used to sleep in a room modeled as a Pullman car berth because he had slept so often on the train while traveling to and from the medical school in Kansas City.

He built a six-car garage and had his own gas pump. He was able to shoot at crows while standing in the kitchen, down the long hall, through the living room doors. A wooden sign which hung outside read:

NOTICE!
Trespassers will be persecuted to the full extent of 2 mungrel dogs which neve was over sochible to strangers & I dubble bri shot gun which aint loded

"It was all very crude, and very rough and very informal," retired nurse Nelle Salisbury remembers, "and very much like Dr. Hertzler himself."

The Crow's Nest was Hertzler's castle, and there he entertained, played cards, shot skeet.

The first floor was mostly public space, a gun room, a library and a great hall that held, as Halstead Vic Chesky recalled, "a dickens of a lot of people," a room that Hertzler used as a pistol range, a banquet hall or a meeting place for friends and boy scouts.

He held chicken fries and barbecues in the yard on weekends and holidays. He invited nurses, doctors, policemen from Newton and Hutchinson, politicians, publishers and even the Chicago White Sox.

He sponsored shooting contests too, and the yard was always littered with thousands and thousands of spent shells.

Here too Hertzler retreated, reflected. Though he had a second house downtown, and though he often slept in a private room in the basement of his hospital, the Crow's Nest was his "hide-out," the place that satisfied his country-boy need for seclusion, privacy and quiet.

He used to write late at night, alone, in a solitary little room on the third floor. "Kid," he once told Chesky, "anybody who sleeps more than three-and-a-half to four hours a night is wasting time."

The Crow's Nest is thus a monument to a man obsessed, ready to stick by his principles, with the courage to act as an individual.

He had decided to become a doctor against the will of his father, and at a time when doctors were held in disrepute, a man could practice without any formal training, hospitals were deathtraps and the most horrible afflictions were still untreatable.

Yet Hertzler persisted and set about personally to remedy the great problems of his profession. What he built, University of Kansas professor Robert Hudson suggested, "he built by his own drive and vision."

And so, today, the Crow's Nest is a reminder of the many who came West to remake the world in their own image, a reminder too of the power of individuals to make history.

Slattery stresses citizen involvement

By TODD NIGHSWONGER
Collegian Reporter

United States citizens have more influence than they may think and need to respond to environmental and other issues that concern them, Congressman Jim Slattery, D-Kan., said Tuesday night.

Slattery told an audience in the Union Little Theatre that the government is run by the people, not the leaders in Washington. He spoke at a meeting of the K-State student chapter of The Wildlife Society.

"Don't underestimate the importance of your political involvement," Slattery said. "Our system seldom responds to logic or reason. Our system responds to pressure. And the pressure comes from the voters."

He emphasized the necessity of citizens getting involved and using that pressure to move the political process in a favorable direction.

"If you don't participate in the system, then don't bitch about the outcome of the process, because you're not involved in the process," he said. "If you're going to complain, get involved."

Involvement in various environmental groups' political action committees could help influence the process. On general issues, political party and individual campaign involvement might influence politicians too, Slattery said.

"People running for office and people serving in a political office are very concerned about what their supporters and the people back home want," he said.

Slattery made statements concerning a few environmental issues, including acid rain.

He said Congress would probably not deal with the issue of acid rain until 1985. Some politicians believe it is not a problem and should be studied further, he said.

"I, for one, believe that it has been studied and studied and studied. I think there is a serious problem, and I think Congress should move in this area in the very near future," he said.

Slattery said the problem is not as evident in northeast Kansas because Jefferey Energy Center near St. Marys is equipped with a system he said he is convinced would be in compliance with any acid rain laws.

Another environmental concern of Slattery's is the reauthorization of the Super Fund, which he said is "absolutely critical" for funding the cleanup of hazardous waste sites in the United States, including one near Wichita.

Errors prompt new election

Engineering Student Council elections for president, secretary and sophomore representatives will be held today and Thursday. Voting will be held in the Union from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

According to a statement released by the council's Elections Committee, new elections are being held because procedural errors by the committee may have affected the races for president and secretary. The margins of victory in these races were less than 15 votes. The other offices decided in the original election were won by more than 50 votes.

A ballot error caused the sophomore representative results to be invalidated. All students who will be sophomores in the College of Engineering during the 1984-1985 school year are eligible to run as write-in candidates, said John Dollar, assistant dean of the College of Engineering.

Greeks

Parking Committee, recommended that houses be placed on probation by the greek councils after two complaints are investigated.

Robel said Greek Affairs might consider prohibiting block parties and large gatherings of members of several houses. Bands hired to play for greek parties might also be required to agree to stop playing at 11 p.m., when city ordinances require observance of the quietude, she said.

If future complaints about greek houses are handled through the Greek Affairs office, Robel said the results of action by the Panhellenic or Interfraternity councils would be made public, but the accusations against the houses would remain confidential, as is current policy.

Having extensive press coverage of complaints handled in this manner is "a very negative type of reinforcement" against the offenders, she said.

Spring fever encourages fitness

Every spring conscientious people tune their cars to run better. And so it should be with the human body. Muscles must be toned, stretched and strengthened into shape so the overall machinery will run better and last longer.

Four basic areas of fitness need to be addressed to keep the human piece of machinery operating long enough to be admired as an antique. These include flexibility, muscle strength and coordination, body composition and cardiovascular fitness. One of these four far outweighs the others in importance.

Cardiovascular fitness can have the greatest impact on a person's overall health. The key is finding an aerobic sport.

Running has captured the interest of nearly everyone and has influenced fashion extensively. But running isn't for everyone. It's important to identify a fitness program that interests the participant as an individual. A variety of alternatives are available.

Local health clubs and K-State Recreational Services offer aerobic dance, jazzercise and Jane Fonda workouts for those who like to exercise to music or in large groups. Tennis and racquetball may satisfy those who like to play a game while exercising. And for those who appreciate exercising alone, swimming, jogging and bicycling offer this alternative.

Don't limit the opportunities. Racquetball may be a favorite activity, but not something a person wants to do for every workout. Develop a program that includes several different activities.

Remember to take it easy at first when taking to the sidewalks and tennis courts this spring. It's been a long winter, and most bodies aren't in the same condition as they were at last fall's football scrimmage. Prevent injuries by stretching, flexing and warming up to exercise. Don't overdo. Spend a few weeks working up to 30 minutes of continual exercise, three or four times a week. Celebrate the sun and physical fitness!

U.S. Senate lacks cutting edge

If America expects significant cuts in the budget deficit, it won't be able to rely on Congress to wield the ax.

Instead of approving a proposal by Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum that would freeze spending for one year, the Senate Budget Committee last week decided to support a variety of tax increases on liquor, cigarettes, telephones and some business expenses, aiming to eliminate $49 billion over four years.

Kassebaum's simple proposal would cut $40 billion in one year.

Obviously the Senate prefers to waste its time rewriting trivial tax laws instead of enacting effective, immediate, necessary solutions to the problem of staggering deficits. It's shameful that America's political leaders can ignore the best interests of the country and pass up a feasible solution to the growing problem of the federal budget deficit.

The legacy of Kam-el-lot

Once upon a time, in a faraway land, there was a place known as Kam-el-lot. This place shouldn't be confused with Camelot, the legendary home of King Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table. It shouldn't be confused with the administration of John F. Kennedy, nor the musical "Camelot."

Kam-el-lot was located in a rich farmland area called Ahs. Ahs was divided by Kam-el-lot and its sister kingdom, Ja-haw-klan. Ja-haw-klan had more wealth, but Kam-el-lot had the richest farmland.

Citizens in Kam-el-lot were a weird lot. The typical citizen was 18 to 25 years old, from outlying areas of Ahs, liked pubs, ale and loud minstrel groups, and had a general distrust of anyone from Ja-haw-klan. These citizens stayed in Kam-el-lot four to five years. They came to the kingdom to learn more about agriculture and applied sciences. Once they had learned enough to satisfy the elders of the kingdom, they were ceremoniously handed a parchment with a lot of fancy words on it. The purpose of the parchment was to impress those who wanted the noble knights and maidens of Kam-el-lot to work for their clan.

It cost a lot of gold to stay in Kam-el-lot. The gold paid the elders for their knowledge and also to provide a few services for the knights and maidens. The elders' elders had set up a system to allow the youngsters to rule themselves and spend some gold on services the young people believed were necessary and proper for Kam-el-lot.

A select group of knights and maidens was elected to oversee the system. This group was known as Sen-nate. Sen-nate-rs were elected by the young people according to the training they were receiving. Knights of the engine-er elected their own sen-nate-rs; knights of the land elected their own, and so on.

Collegian Columnist

If there were twice as many knights of the engine-er as knights of the land, then there were twice as many sen-nate-rs of the engine-er than sen-nate-rs of the land. It seemed to be a good system.

The kingdom did elect a Supreme Knight to represent Kam-el-lot in negotiations with the rulers of Ahs. The Supreme Knight, however, had little power in the sen-nate.

Each spring, the sen-nate-rs met to decide how to divide the booty — er, funds — withheld from the citizens of Kam-el-lot. Various groups came forward to ask the sen-nate for money to support activities.

Sen-nate asked to see records of each group's expenditures. Sen-nate made sure no ale was bought with the funding (a royal no-no with the rulers of Ahs) and usually approved any new funds for the groups.

One spring, however, proved to be an exception.

There weren't as many young knights and maidens coming to Kam-el-lot. The population of Ahs was decreasing for various reasons. Therefore, Kam-el-lot's population decreased. Unfortunately, the number of groups requesting funds from sen-nate was increasing.

Sen-nate decided to put a stop to the imbalance in funds by hacking and slashing funds from each group. Well, almost each group. There was one problem with the system: Sen-nate also votes to fund itself.

In most years, there wasn't any problem, because there was more than enough gold to pass out to each group. This year, however, found sen-nate in a delicate position. Since gold was scarce, cuts had to be made. The big question arose: which programs should be cut?

Some sen-nate-rs decided to cut some funding from each group, thereby sharing the wealth. Others plotted to keep sen-nate's funding intact.

The kingdom's newssheet, the Kam-legion, followed the issue. Comments were made on the parchment which weren't always favorable to sen-nate. Grumblings arose from the sen-nate's chamber, the Bi-gate-room, but rarely did anyone try to attack the Kam-legion, lest the noble cartoons Garfield, Peanuts, Captain Cosmo and Mongoisms disappear from Kam-el-lot.

Some sen-nate-rs wanted to increase the amount of advertising for the various events it sponsored. While other programs were slashed to the marrow, sen-nate voted itself a healthy increase in its advertising budget.

The Kam-legion expressed its outrage at sen-nate's double standards, as did some bleeding groups. But sen-nate stood firm in its tentative allocation, saying it had always spent a certain amount of gold on ads, and it would continue to do so, despite the apparent double standards.

The moral of this story: Rules govern everyone — except for those who write and enforce them.

In other words, the knight who rules the cookie jar can take as many cookies as he wants, while watching others starve to death.

Questioning benefits of affluence

WASHINGTON — At a recent meeting with bankers and home-builders in Texas, President Reagan mentioned the unmentionable. Discussing efforts to simplify the tax code, the president refused to rule out a change in the deduction homeowners now enjoy on their mortgage-interest payments. The next morning, major newspapers all but ignored the story.

As well they should. Almost immediately, key members of Congress took the mortgage-interest deduction and draped an American flag over it. End it? Alter it? No way. You might as well be talking about capping Old Faithful or subdividing Mount Vernon into condominiums — Cherry Tree Acres.

The truth is, I breathed a sigh of relief. Without the mortgage-interest deduction I would be a lot poorer. But as long as we are dealing with terrible truths, yet another one is the fact that the mortgage-interest deduction is representative of precisely what has thrown the federal budget so terribly out of whack: the growth of entitlement programs that benefit mostly the affluent.

Probably the best-known of these is the mortgage-interest deduction. The total bill in lost income to the treasury comes to $28 billion a year — half of it from the wealthiest 10 percent of households.

These figures can be found in an article by James Fallows in the April issue of the Atlantic magazine. His thesis is that the budget is in the red ($200 billion next year) not just because we tax too little (the Reagan tax cuts) or almost not at all (corporate taxes), but because we simply spend too much keeping middle- and upper-class people living in a manner to which Congress has accustomed them. No cut in defense expenditures can possibly make up the difference. By 1989, 20 cents of every tax dollar will go simply to cover interest payments on the national debt.

RICHARD COHEN
Columnist

Fallows asks some good questions: Why should everyone, including the filthy rich, get Social Security benefits? Why should the government subsidize private air travel by either paying for or subsidizing private airports?

The answer, at least when it comes to social justice, is that there is no answer. That is especially the case since the Reagan administration's economic programs took effect, cutting benefits for the poor while increasing their tax burden. But as Fallows points out, it's both silly and unfair to blame the entire budget mess on Reagan — his tax program or his defense buildup.

Neither political party has had the guts to say no to the middle and upper classes.

For instance, for all the screaming about the deficit, no one has seriously suggested doing something about mortgage-interest payments — like putting a ceiling on them. After all, we are not always talking about your average home-owner and the all-but-inalienable right of Americans to own their own home. We are also talking of people who own three or four homes. Why should the government subsidize more than one of them?

And as long as we are asking questions, why should the government subsidize business lunches? A recent article about restaurant prices in New York reported that some meals now cost as much as $100 a person. The restaurateurs know what they're doing: They know most of their patrons are on expense accounts. In the end, we all chip in so some $500,000-a-year executive (or some more modestly paid columnist) can eat for free. Try explaining that to someone who has had their food stamps reduced in the name of austerity.

These are complicated issues and there is, as with most things, another side to the story. (What, for instance, would happen to the housing industry if it were not subsidized by the government?) But while you're mulling that over, I'm going to lunch. I will have something nice, maybe a terrific salad and coffee. I'm telling you that because you have a right to know.

After all, you're going to pay for it.

Radio DJs unresponsive to song requests

Editor,
Today's radio stations sometimes play requests that are called in, but don't rely on it.

At 9:15 p.m. Friday, April 13, I requested three songs from one local station. One of the three, I was told, was played a few minutes before so it couldn't be played. At 9:32 p.m. I requested another song, "Desperado," by the Eagles. The disc jockey said in response, "I have three songs from the Eagles ahead of you so it might be awhile."

I never heard an Eagles song all night. By 10:15 p.m. I still hadn't heard my requests, so I called in a third time and asked the DJ how long it would be before I heard a song if I requested it now. He said about one and a half hours if it hadn't been played before. I said, "Oh, OK," hung up and didn't request another.

At approximately 11:15 p.m. the DJ said, "This is request number 25." What a laugh! At 12:15 a.m., fourth call, I told the DJ I had requested a few songs and I hadn't heard them yet. The DJ said, "Just be patient!"

I was — I had waited three hours. At 1:36 a.m. four hours from the initial call, my patience was gone. I decided to call and find out why I hadn't heard my requests. At 2:12 a.m., the DJ said over the radio, "Still taking requests — I'll see what I can do for you." NOTHING!

It's all a computer setup with pre-programmed songs. So don't call a radio station unless the DJ says you requested the song. This way you'll know if they actually play requests.

This only makes money for Ma Bell (or whoever, now) and gives the DJ somebody to talk to. This also is a false claim broadcast over FCC-regulated airwaves. Isn't this illegal?

Legal ploy fails in farm foreclosure

By MELISSA BRUNE
Staff Writer

WESTMORELAND — The land patents two Pottawatomie County farmers filed on their farms didn't prevent Sheriff Dean Taylor from selling the property Tuesday morning at the Pottawatomie County Courthouse.

Alvin and Stanley Matzke, of rural Wamego, were not present at the sheriff's sale. The two men had filed land patents on about 1,600 acres of their family's land and contended that the patents would prevent creditors from taking the land used as collateral on loans by giving the brothers perfect title to the acreage.

A spokesman for the Kansas Attorney General's office, however, said later that land patents are meaningless today.

The Farmers Home Administration bought Alvin and Katherine Matzke's farm for a bid of $210,000. Because it was a junior lienholder on the land, FHA was named as one of the defendants in the foreclosure case against the couple.

The farm land of Stanley and Victoria Matzke was sold for $128,265.94 to the Federal Land Bank of Wichita, the only bidder for the land. The bank had been named as the plaintiff in the foreclosure because it held the first mortgage to the farm.

Before bidding began, Fred Kilian, a Pottawatomie County farmer, read a case filed in the county's district court. The case contended that the sheriff of Pottawatomie County and any other who attempted to buy or sell the land belonging to the Matzkes would become liable to the Matzkes "for criminal trespass, illegal conversion of private property, fraudulent conveyance of an unlawful contract into tangible substance and aiding and comforting illegal foreign corporations not authorized to do business in the state of Kansas."

Kilian said later that he spoke for the Matzkes because "I think this has to be an individual effort" to combat farm foreclosures.

Alvin Matzke lost approximately 360 acres of land, while Stanley lost 187. Their father, Melvin Matzke, now has about 620 acres left on which to farm.

Melvin Matzke said the land patent had created some hard feelings between his family and neighboring families due to an error made in the initial recording of the patents. The land patents were recorded on 31,000 acres of the Matzkes' and others' land. Neither the Matzkes nor the Pottawatomie County register of deeds has taken responsibility for the error.

The Matzkes have, by law, a six-month redemption period in which they can attempt to regain the land sold at the auction.

Chuck Ladner, chief of farmer programs for the state of Kansas, said the buyers of the land can still sell it during that six months, but under the stipulation that if the Matzkes are able to redeem the land by paying off their individual debts, it will be returned to them.

Melvin Matzke said he believes his sons' regaining ownership of their land depends on whether they are too late to plant crops.

City approves park improvements

By WAYNE PRICE
Staff Writer

Manhattan City Commissioners voted 3-1 at their meeting Tuesday night to spend $110,000 for removal of a low to moderate income section in south Manhattan to make improvements in the Griffith Park area.

Community Development Director Gary Stith said the funds consist of $70,000 of current program income and $40,000 of income re-budgeted from 1983, which wasn't necessary to complete the Community Development Block Grant Program.

The funds would be used to relocate a mobile home court near South 11th Street, which Stith said doesn't conform to city zoning laws, but has been allowed to remain under a "grandfather" clause. The court consists of eight occupied mobile homes and one duplex, he said.

The action will add to the Griffith Park area as well as help the low to moderate-income families living in the court, Stith said.

Low to moderate-income families are defined as earning 80 percent of the community median.

"We're removing slum-abiding influences, non-conforming uses and substandard units," Stith said. "And we're assisting lower moderate-income families to get into better housing."

Commissioner Suzanne Lin-

damood, who voted against the measure, said a substantial number of the people to be affected by the measure are classified as low to moderate-income because they are K-State students.

"$45,000 has been allocated to relocate people from the area," Lindamood said. "I think quite a few people are low income because of student status."

"I just question if this is the right approach to help low to moderate-income families."

Commissioner Rick Mann agreed with the proposal.

"In my mind," Mann said, "it helps us to continue to strengthen our south side neighborhood by keeping our parks available, it helps moderate- and lower-income families to get into some better property and helps keep the property values of those properties there now equal or higher."

Stith said he hopes the city will have the property cleared and vacated by next fall. The area would be added to Griffith Park and used as a parking facility.

Commissioners also discussed receiving a Small Cities Community Development Block Grant. Stith said there are three grants which fall in this category and the one he believes the strongest application could be made for is a community facilities grant.

He said the money would aid in the development of city-owned vacant land, but there are limited ways to help affected families move once the land is developed. He said grants are given only to non-profit organizations designed to aid in relocation.

Third KC test-tube baby born

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — A third test-tube baby has been born at the University of Kansas Medical Center, officials said Tuesday. The girl was born in the past week, but its exact date of birth, its height and weight and its name were not released at the request of the parents. The full-term baby was born in good health to a Kansas City area couple, said Dr. William Cameron, a professor of gynecology and obstetrics who heads the KU in-vitro fertilization program. The first births of the KU program came in late March when a metropolitan Kansas City couple became the parents of twins. The in-vitro process involves surgically removing eggs from the mother and placing them in a petri dish with sperm from the father. Once the eggs are fertilized, generally within 48 hours, they are transferred to the mother's womb.

Tyro youth killed delivering paper

TYRO — An 11-year-old boy died when the all-terrain vehicle he was driving struck a culvert and overturned, authorities said. Michael Thomas Lynn died when he was thrown from the vehicle after it struck the culvert late Monday afternoon, said Mike McCartney, a Montgomery County sheriff's deputy. The boy was not wearing a helmet, McCartney said. The boy was a carrier for The Coffeyville Journal.

Dr. Heimlich returns to China

CINCINNATI — Dr. Henry Heimlich, developer of the lifesaving Heimlich maneuver, is returning to China to visit people he cared for during World War II. Heimlich, 64, semi-retired, and his wife Jane were invited by the People's Republic of China to visit for three weeks starting April 26. Best known for a procedure of sharp pressure on the chest to aid choking victims, he also developed several surgical procedures, including a method for making a new stomach from an intestine. Heimlich was 24 when the U.S. Navy sent him to northwestern China in 1942 to treat Chinese and U.S. forces in the Gobi Desert behind Japanese lines. The four-year stint was the subject of several books and a movie titled "Destination Gobi."

'Goody' image fits Marie Osmond

NEW YORK — Marie Osmond says she's proud to be considered a "goody-goody." She says she didn't always feel that way, but eventually realized that her image represented happiness and success. "In the past, when I'd see people make fun of me and laugh at me, it disturbed me," she says in the May issue of McCall's magazine. "But then I realized that if being a goody-goody means you're happy and like who you are and you're successful at what you do, then I'm proud to be a goody-goody." The singer-dancer-actress wore black leather pants when she was interviewed and was asked if some of her fans might be offended by that. "Some people do remember me the way I was at 15. What they don't realize is that I'm now 25 and need a more glamorous, chic image," she said. "But I think my personality is still the same as that nice, sweet-looking teenager they remember."

Treasury loans become big business

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — What do a Kansas wheat farmer, Chrysler Corp. and the government of Romania have in common? They all borrow at the same bank — the United States Treasury.

Lending has become an enormous government business. Until the recession came along two years ago it had been for a decade the fastest-growing segment of federal finances.

The annual amount of new loans of all kinds, both direct loans and those guaranteed by the government, has risen 273 percent since 1970.

According to the Congressional Budget Office, the amount of government loan exposure — both direct and guaranteed — reached $587 billion last year. That's $150 billion more than the outstanding loan portfolios of Citibank, BankAmerica Corp., Chase Manhattan, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund combined.

By the end of the decade, that figure will approach $1 trillion.

There are now 424 federal loan and loan guarantee programs that include: loans to farmers, loan guarantees to foreign countries anxious to buy their crops, loans to rural power companies, mortgage loans to veterans, loans to students for tuition, loans to allies to buy weapons and loans to Third World countries to buy U.S. machinery.

Uncle Sam's popularity as a lender stems from his generosity. While the government is paying roughly 10 percent interest on money it borrows, it often charges loan recipients substantially lower rates. Rural electric cooperatives deemed "hardship cases," for example, get loans at 2 percent interest. Direct student loans are made at 5 percent. Military loans to Egypt and Israel are routinely forgiven.

Because many of the programs are "off-budget," their true costs are less than obvious. "Off-budget" means the costs are not reflected in the numbers used to tally the deficit. But the costs of all the lending, including interest rate subsidies, ultimately are paid by U.S. taxpayers. The programs continue to swell despite the stated antipathy of the Reagan administration and efforts by some in Congress to cut the growing national debt.

"The creative applicants for federal assistance have just moved down the street to the lending window," says Rep. Ed Bethune, R-Ark., who has been fighting to include lending costs in the budget so the effects of legislation to increase loan giveaways become more clear.

"A federal lending program is nearly as good as a federal spending program," says Bethune. "In fact, it's just as good if you don't pay it back."

As loan programs are set up, management and collection often are neglected. Student loan programs have been the most infamous, with default rates at hundreds of universities exceeding 25 percent. Small Business Administration loans fall past due or are liquidated at a similar rate.

"Off-budget loan programs have been popular with members of both the executive branch and the Congress because these programs have provided ways to be generous to constituents without appearing to be extravagant," states a study of federal credit by the Center for the Study of American Business at Washington University in St. Louis.

Many of the programs, begun years ago to meet specific needs, have developed lives of their own even though the need for them has decreased or disappeared. The Rural Electrification Administration still offers discount loans to utility cooperatives which have become more suburban than rural, for example.

Others are used to help address imbalances in trade between countries or to rescue nations, at least temporarily, from serious debt problems. The Department of Agriculture's Commodity Credit Corporation on March 16 reported it had made good on $431 million in guaranteed loans from U.S. banks over the previous year because of non-payment of interest by Peru, Morocco, Brazil and Romania.

Such payments usually are followed by negotiations with debtor nations to set up generous, long-term repayment schedules which sometimes include grace periods of several years in which no interest is due.

More than half of all credit in the market now is sopped up by federal direct or guaranteed borrowing. "Those who have the strongest lobbies in Congress are getting the credit subsidies," says Bethune.

Edwin L. Dale, spokesman for Reagan's Office of Management and Budget, says that efforts to rein in the growth of credit have been less than successful, and blames much of the failure on Congress. But he says there has evolved on Capitol Hill "a consciousness of the problem that didn't exist before. The practical results...have been limited, but the consciousness is there."

Bethune agrees, to a point. "I can remember clearly members standing up on the floor and saying, 'This is a loan guarantee. It doesn't cost anything.'...People are wising up to that now, but not enough to stop this rapid increase."

The difficult choices, the same kinds of dilemmas Congress now faces on direct spending and taxes, still lie ahead in the credit arena.

of suspension to study the effectiveness of its little sister program.

"There is a national trend by fraternities and sororities to get away from the little sister program," Mueller said. "We have a five-member committee, and throughout this year it will evaluate the Goldenheart program and see if it is a valid part of our house. Next April 1, if we find out it's an important part of our house, it will be reinstated."

"If we find that we can direct our talent and energy to a more useful purpose, it (the little sister program) will be eliminated," he said. "That will probably please our national (organization)."

Mueller said the Sig Ep national organization has been trying to persuade the fraternity to eliminate its little sister program, and local sororities are discouraging it. Under the terms of the suspension, the fraternity is not allowed to have any "activities, events, regular meetings, participation or organization of women assuming the traditional roles of little sister organizations." After one year, the house may present a written outline to IFC showing cause for the organization to be re-established.

The fraternity is required to send letters of apology to all women who were initiated in February, and copies of the letters must be sent to IFC.

Chuck White, executive director of the house, said the national organization would be investigating the incident to determine whether further action is necessary on its part.

During the Council of Presidents meeting, Mueller made an apology to the council.

"We (he and Baker) were totally appalled when we went in front of the IFC Executive Council and were told what had happened," he said. "I just want to emphasize to you all to know what's going on in your house."

Filmmaker chronicles KC jazz reunion

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

In 1980, filmmaker Bruce Ricker engineered a reunion of the Oklahoma City Blue Devils for his film "The Last of the Blue Devils."

Getting together in Kansas City at the musician's union hall were such illustrious figures as Count Basie, Jay McShann and Big Joe Turner.

Review

They reminisce upon what it was like in Kansas City during the Depression — the time when Kansas City was one of the major jazz capitals of the world.

Ricker films the members of the group, now all well into their 70s, as they arrive at the hall. Count Basie's arrival provides a highpoint of sorts when he strolls in wearing his characteristic yachting cap. The band then breaks into some very respectable versions of their greatest songs, including: "Piney Brown Blues," "Night Train" and "Shake, Rattle and Roll."

Ricker also utilizes some vintage footage from when the Count Basie Orchestra was at its best. The young Big Joe Turner delivers an energetic performance of his youth — his timing is off slightly and his voice is a little frayed — but it is a pure delight to see him performing again.

"The Last of the Blue Devils" lacks the strong narrative of "Wasn't That a Time!", where the Weavers were shown preparing for their reunion concert. There is no buildup in "The Last of the Blue Devils;" the music starts almost as soon as the film begins.

The songs are alternated with bits of conversations with band members and promoters. The combination of the footage seems quite arbitrary, though. There is never a strong sense that the film is ever progressing in any direction. It is nonetheless quite exhilarating to watch the old masters back in action again. Much of their rekindled energy comes across on the screen very effectively.

One particularly effective scene is when Jo Jones and Baby Lovett spar back and forth on their drums. Back in the 1930s and 1940s, their drumming was partly responsible for changing the sound of jazz.

Two notable absences from the reunion are Charlie Parker and Lester Young. Their presence is felt through the film clips and reminiscences.

Ultimately, though, the film lacks a cohesiveness in its organization. Ricker uses the same footage at the end of the film as he did at the beginning.

Supposedly this should complete the reunion and signal the end of the film, but since the film lacks a strong climactic moment, the reused footage seems a mechanical contrivance.

Ricker worked on a shoestring budget — even having to wait a year between shooting some footage before he had enough money to complete the film — so maybe he shouldn't be blamed too much for the film's inadequacies. For the most part, he only had one camera to work with. This caused some very static shots, particularly when the band is playing. Maybe we should just be happy that the film exists at all because there are so few films made concerning jazz. But because "The Last of the Blue Devils" lacks a sense of narrative, it will never reach a very large audience. To jazz enthusiasts, though, the film should be a very worthwhile document of this period in the development of jazz.

Nooner band's music innovative, redundant

By WAYNE PRICE
Staff Writer

What made the music from such religious rock operas as "Jesus Christ Superstar" and "Godspell" so popular was a lively and original sound and lyrics which didn't collide into monotony.

"Lifesong," performing a Nooner on Tuesday in the Catskeller, couldn't make that statement.

Nooners are performances by students and are sponsored by the Union Program Council Coffeehouse Committee.

Matt Birch, junior in history and bass guitarist for the contemporary gospel group, said the band played together seven years ago and regrouped while at Manhattan Christian College. In addition to three singers, instrumentation included acoustic piano, various guitars, drums and synthesizers.

With that array of backup and obvious experience, "Lifesong" proved they're good performers.

Review

The group's first song, "There's Still Time," was quick-paced and the band sounded great, as did the back-up music, especially the synthesizers.

The performance continued this quality through such songs as "Falling Down," "Taking the Easy Way" and "Love Song."

After a while however, the lyrics began to sound the same and this sameness spilled over to the music, making what was once enjoyable instrumentation something to yawn to.

To be successful, songs with messages should attempt to make the audience think and should use innovative ideas to accomplish that task. The group's innovation became redundant toward the end of their performance, as the songs all seemed to be a continuation of the previous ones.

Although it's possible, it's difficult to deal with one subject matter in a new and interesting manner for each song. It's rare for even such performers as U2, whose "War" album successfully avoids staleness in
